I Anne Askew of good Memory, although my merciful Father hath given me the Bread of Adversity, and the Water of trouble, yet not so much as my Sins have deserved, do confess my self here a Sinner before the Throne of his Heavenly Majesty, desiring his forgiveness and mercy. And forasmuch as I am by the Law unrighteously condemned for an evil Doer concerning opinions, I take the same most merciful God of mine, which hath made both Heaven and Earth, to record, that I hold no opinions contrary to his most holy Word. And I trust in my merciful Lord, which is the Giver of all Grace, that he will graciously assise me against all evil opinions which are contrary to his blessed Verity. For I take him to witness, that I have done, and will, unto my lives end, utterly abhor them to the uttermost of my Power.

and cause why Anne Askew suffered death.

But this is the Heresie, which they report me to hold, that after the Priest hath spoken the Words of Consecration, there remaineth Bread still. They both say, and also teach it for a necessary Article of Faith, that after these words be once spoken, there remaineth no Bread, but even the selfsame Body that hung upon the Croft on good-Friday, both Flesh, Blood, and Bone. To this belief of theirs say I nay. For then were our common Creed false, which saith, that he sitteth on the right Hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence shall come to Judge the Quick and the Dead. Lo, this is the Heresie that I hold, and for it must suffer the Death. But as touching the Holy and blessed Supper of the Lord, I believe it to be a most necessary Remembrance of his glorious sufferings and Death. Moreover I believe as much therein as my eternal and only Redeemer Jesus Christ would I should believe.

Scripture
sufficient to our salvation

Finally, I believe all those Scriptures to be true, which he hath confirmed with his most Precious Blood. Yea, and as Saint Paul saith, those Scriptures are sufficient for our learning and Salvation, that Christ hath left here with us; so that I believe, we need no unwritten verities to rule his Church with. Therefore look what he hath said unto me with his own Mouth in his Holy Gospel, that I have with Gods Grace closed up in my Heart, and my full trust is (as David saith) that it shall be a Lantern to my Footstep, Psalme 28.

The Mass
an abominable Idol.

There be some that do say I deny the Eucharist or Sacrament of thanksgiving; but those people do untruly report of me. For I both say and believe it, that if it were ordered like as Christ instituted it and left it, a most singular comfort it were unto us all. But as concerning your Mass as it is now used in our days, I do say and believe it to be the most abominable Idol that is in the world. For my God will not be eaten with teeth, neither yet dieted be again. And upon these words that I have now spoken, will I suffer Death.

The prayer of Anne Askew.

O Lord I have more Enemies now, than there be hairs on my head: yet Lord, let them never overcome me with vain words, but fight thou Lord in my Head; for on thee cast I my care. With all the sight they can imagine, they fall upon me which are thy poor creature. Yet, sweet Lord, let me not yet be taken with are against me; for in thee is my whole delight. And, Lord, I heartily desire of thee, that thou wilt of thy most merciful goodness forgive them that violence with thee do, and have done unto me. Open also thou their Blind hearts, that they may hereafter do that thing in thy sight, which is only acceptable before thee, and to set forth thy glory aright, without all vain fantastic of sinful Men. Solve it, O Lord, I beseech thee.

By me Anne Askew.

Hitherto we have intreated of this good Woman now it remaineth that we touch somewhat as concerning her end and Martyrdom. After that she, being born of such stock and kindred that she might have lived in great wealth and prosperity, if she would rather have followed the world than Christ, now had been so tormented, that she could neither live long in so great distress, neither yet by her Adversaries be suffered to die in secret; the day of her execution being appointed, she was brought into Smithfield in a Chair, because she could not go on her Feet, by means of her great Torments. When she was brought to the Stake, she was tied by the middle with a chain that held up her Body. When all things were thus prepared to the fire, Doctor Shaxton, who was then appointed to preach, began his Sermon Anne Askew hearing, and answering again unto him, where he said well, confirmed the same; where he said amiss, there, said she, he misseeth, and speaketh without the Book.

The Sermon being finished, the Martyr, standing there tyed at three several stakes ready to their Martyrdom, began their prayers. The multitude and concourse of the People was exceeding, the place where they stood being raised about to keep out the press. Upon the Bench under St. Bartolomew Church stane Wrisley Chancellour of England, the old Duke of Norfolk, the old Earle of Bedford, the Lord Mayor, with divers other more. Before the fire should be set unto them, one of the Bench hearing that they had Gunpowder about them, and being afraid lest the Fagots by strength of the Gunpowder would come flying about their Ears began to be afraid: but the Earle of Bedford declaring unto him how the Gunpowder was not layd under the Fagots, but only about their Bodies to rid them out of their pain which having vent there was no danger to them of the Fagots, so diminished that fear.

Then Wrisley Lord Chancellour sent to Anne Askew Letters, offering to her the Kings Pardon if she would recant. Who, refusing once to look upon them, made this answer again, that she came not thither to deny her Lord and Master. Then were the Letters likewise offered unto the other, who in like manner, following the constancy of the Woman, denied not onely to receive them, but also to look upon them. Whereupon the L. Mayor, commanding fire to be put to them, cryed with a loud voice, Fiat justitia.

And thus the good Anne Askew with these blessed Martyrs, being troubled so many manner of ways, and having passed through so many Torments, having now ended the long course of her Agonies, being compassed in with flames of fire, as a blessed Sacrifice unto God, she slept in the Lord Anno. 1546. leaving behind her a singular example of Christian constancy for all men to follow.

It happened well for them, that they died together with Anne Askew. For albeit that of themselves they were strong and stout men, yet, through the example and exhortation of her, they being the more boldned received occasion of greater comfort in that so painful and doleful kind of Death: who beholding her invincible constancy, and also stirred up through her persuasions, did set apart all kind of fear.

Thus they confirming one another with mutual exhortations tarried looking for the Tormentor and fire, which, at the last flaming round about them, consumed their blessed Bodies in happy Martyrdom, in the year of our Salvation, 1546. about the Month of June.

There is also a certain Letter extant, which the said John Lacels briefly wrote, being in Prison, touching the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood; wherein he doth both confute the error of them, which being not contented with the spiritual receiving of the Sacrament, will leave no substance of Bread therein, and also confuteth the sinister Interpretation of many thereupon. The tenor of which Letter is as hereunder followeth.

The Letter of Mr John Lacels written out of Prison.

Saint Paul because of Sects and dissension among the Corinthians, wrote the Epistle unto them; and in like case pertaining to my Conscience, I do protest my whole Heart touching the blessed Supper of the Lord, wherein I trust in God to bring nothing for me, but I shall be able with Gods Holy Word to declare and manifest the same. And herein I take occasion to recite the saying of Saint Paul in the said Epistle the eleventh Chapter, That which I delivered unto you, I received of the Lord. For the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took Bread, gave thanks, and brake it, and said, take ye, eat ye, this is my Body, which is broken for you.

The blasphemy and wickedness of the Mass.

Approphecie.

St Paul did not take upon him to be a confessor of Christ to his Host corpus meum as our Fracts do.

Here, me seemeth, Saint Paul durst not take upon him his Lord and Masters Authority. Wherefore, as at Gods Hand the breaking of the most innocent and immaculate Body and Blood of Christ is the quietness of all mens Consciences, the onely remedy of our sins, and redemption of mankind which is called in the Scripture the daily Offering: so the Mass which is the Invention of Man (whose author is the Pope of Rome, as it doth appear in Polydore Virgil and many others) is the unquietness of all Christendom, a Blasphemy unto Christs Blood, and (as Daniel calleth it) the abominable defolation, as the Scripture shall hereafter more manifest it. St. Paul was belike to learn of the Romans Church, the manner of the Consecration as they call it, with the breathing over the Host, and other Ceremonies besides, that he durst not take upon him to say, Hoc est corpus meum. But this I will admit: it was the Lord Jesus that made the Supper, which also did finish it, and made an end of the onely Act of our Salvation, not only here in this world, but with his Father in Heaven, as he declarerth himself, that he will drink no more of this bitter Cup, till he drink it new in his Fathers Kingdom, where all bitterness shall be taken away.

Now if any man be able to finish the Act of our Saviour, in breaking of his Body, and shedding of his Blood here, and also to finish it with the Father in Heaven, then let him say it. But I think that if men will look upon Saint Pauls Words well, they shall be forced to say, as St. Paul saith; the Lord Jesus said it, and once for all, which onely was the fulfiller of it. For these Words Hoc est corpus meum, were spoken of his natural presence (which no man is able to deny) because the Act was finished on the Cross, as the Story doth plainly manifest it to them that have eyes. Now this Bloody Sacrifice is made an end of, the Supper is finished, forasmuch as, Christ hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God, and was killed as pertaining to the Flesh, and hath entered in by his own Blood once for all, into the holy place, and found eternal redemption.

Here now followeth the Administration of the Supper of the Lord, which I will take at Christs Hands after the resurrection, although other men will not be ashamed to bring the wicked Councils of foolish inventions for them. And it came to pass as Christ sat at meat with them, he took Bread, blessed, and brake it, and gave it to them, and their eyes were opened, and knew him, and he vanished out of their sight. And the Apostles did know him in breaking of Bread.

Here also it seemeth to me the Apostles to follow their Master Christ, and to take the right use of the Sacrament, and also to teach it to those that were converted to Christ. As mention is made in the Acts of the Apostles, where it is said, They continued in the Apostles Doctrine and Fellowship, in breaking of Bread, and prayer, and they continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and brake Bread in every house, and did eat there with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and had favour with all the people. And Saint Paul following the same Doctrine, doth plainly shew the duty of the Minister, and also of them that shall receive it; As oft as ye shall eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye shall shew the Lords Death until he come. Here I do gather that the Minister hath no further Power and Authority than to preach, and pronounce the Lords Death, or else to say the Lord Jesus said it, which did fulfil it on the Cross.

Further.

None but Christ say, Hoc est corpus meum, and he said it once for all.

Furthermore, I do steadfastly believe, that where the Bread is broken according to the Ordinance of Christ, the blessed and Immaculate Lamb is present to the eyes of our Faith, and so we eat his Flesh, and drink his Blood, which is to dwell with God, and God with us. And in this we are sure we dwell with God, in that he giveth us his Holy Spirit, even as the Forefathers, that were before Christs coming, did presently see the Lords Death, and did eat his Body and drink his Blood.

In this I do differ from the Popes Church, that the Priests have Authority to make Christs natural presence in the Bread, for so doth he more than our Lord and Saviour did; As the example is manifest in Judas, which at Christs Hands received the same Wine and Bread, as the other Apostles did. But the Pope and his adherents are even they whom Daniel speaketh of, saying, He shall set men to unallow the Sanctuary, and to put down the daily offering, and to set up the abominable desolation. Two, he (of Rome) shall speak marvellous things against the God of Heaven, and God of all Gods, wherein he shall prosper so long, till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is devised already. He shall not regard the God of Heaven, nor the God of his Fathers, yea in his place shall he worship the mighty Idol, and the God whom his Fathers knew not, which is the God of Mazim.

For lack of time I leave the Commemoration of the blessed Supper of the Lord, and the abominable Idol the Mass, which is it that Daniel meaneth by the God Mazim. Read the second and last Chapters of Daniel, the second to the Thessalonians, the second Epistle; where they recite the abomination of desolation, which, Matthew saith, standeth in the holy place, which is the Consciences of Men. Mark saith, where it ought not to stand, which is a plain denial of all the Inventions of Men. Further Luke saith, the time is at hand. Paul saith, the mystery of iniquity worketh already, yea, and shall continue until the appearance of Christ, which in my judgment is at hand.

Now for the Supper of the Lord, I do protest to take it as reverently as Christ left it, and as his Apostles did use it, according to the Testimonies of the Prophets, the Apostles, and our blessed Saviour Christ, which accordingly Saint Paul to the Ephesians doth recite.

Now with quietness I commit the whole world to their Pastor and Headman Jesus Christ the onely Saviour and true Messiah, and I commend my Sovereign Lord and Master, the Kings Majesty, King Henry the eighth to God the Father, and to our Lord Jesus Christ; the Queen and my Lord the Prince, with this whole Realm, ever to the innocent and immaculate Lamb, that his Blood may wash and purifie their Hearts and Souls from all iniquity and sin, to Gods glory and to the Salvation of their Souls. I do protest, that the inward part of my Heart doth groan for this, and I doubt not but to enter into the holy Tabernacle which is above, yea, and there to be with God for ever. Farewell in Christs Jesus.

Rogers, Martyr, burned in Smithfield.

Like as Wincheſter and other Biſhops did ſet on King Henry againſt Anne Arkew and her Fellow Martyrs, ſo Doctour Reſſe, Biſhop of Norwich, did incite no leſſe the old Duke of Norfolk againſt one Rogers in the Countrey of Norfolk; who much about the ſame year and time, was there condemned and ſuffered Martyrdom for the fix Articles. After which time it was not long, but within an half year both the King himſelf and the Dukes Houſe decayed: albeit the Dukes Houſe by Gods Grace recovered again afterward, and he himſelf converted to a more moderation in this kind of dealing.

The Story of Queen Katharine Parre, late Queen, and Wiſe to King Henry the eighth. Wherein appeareth in what danger ſhe was for the Goſpel, by the means of Steven Gardiner and other of his Conſpiracy; and how graciouſly ſhe was preferred by her kind and loving Husband the King.

After theſe ſtormy ſtories above recited, the courſe and order as well of the time as the matter of the ſtory doth require now ſomewhat to intreat likewiſe touching the troubles and afflictions of the vertuous and excellent Lady Queen Katharine Parre, the laſt Wiſe to King Henry: the ſtory whereof is this.

About the ſame time above noted, which was about the year after the King returned from Bullen, he was informed that Queen Katharine Parre, at that time his Wiſe, was very much given to the reading and ſtudy- ing of the Holy Scriptures; and that ſhe for that purpoſe had retained divers well learned and godly Per- ſons to inſtruct her thoroughly in the ſame; with whom as at all times convenient the uſed to have private Con- ference touching ſpiritual matters; ſo alſo of ordinary; but eſpecially in Lent every day in the afternoon for the ſpace of an hour, one of her ſaid Chaplains in her privie Chamber made ſome Collation to her and to her Ladies and Gentlewomen of her Privie Chamber, or other that were diſpoſed to hear: In which Sermons they oft times touched ſuch abuſes as in the Church were then riſe. Which things as they were not ſecretly done, ſo neither were their preachings unknown unto the King. Whereof at the firſt, and for a great time, he ſeemed very well to like. Which made her the more bold (being indeed become very zealous toward the Goſpel, and the Profeſſors thereof) frankly to debate with the King touching Religion, and therein ſtately to diſcover her ſelf; oftentimes wiſhing, exhorting, and perſwading the King, that as he had, to the glory of God, and his eter- nal fame, begun a good and a godly work in baniſh- ing that monſtrous Idol of Rome, ſo he would thorough- ly perfect and finiſh the ſame, cleaning and purging his Church of England clean from the dregs thereof, where- in as yet remained great ſuperſtition.

And albeit the King grew towards his latter end very ſterne and opinionate, ſo that of few he could be content to be taught, but worſt of all to be contended withal by argument; notwithstanding, toward her he reſtrained his accuſtomed manner (unto others in like caſe uſed) as appeared by great reſpects, either for the reverence of the cauſe, whereunto of himſelf he ſeemed well in- clined, if ſome others could have ceaſed from ſeeking to pervert him, or elſe for the ſingular affection, which, until a very ſmall time before his death, he always bare unto her. For never handmaid fought with more care- ful diligence to pleaſe her Miſtreſſe, than he did with all painful endeavour apply her ſelf by all vertuous means in all things to pleaſe his humour.

Moreover beſides the virtues of the mind, ſhe was indued with very rare gifts of Nature, as ſingular beauty, favour, and comely perſonage, being things wherein the King was greatly delighted: and ſo enjoyed the Kings favor, to the great likelihood of the ſetting at large of the Goſpel within this Realm at that time; had not the malicious practice of certain profeſſed Enemies againſt the truth (which at that time alſo were very great) prevented the ſame, to the utter alienating of the Kings mind from Religion, and almoſt to the ex- treme ruin of the Queen and certain others with her, if God had not marvellouſly ſuccoured her in the diſtreſs. The Conſpirers and practiſers of her death were Gar- diner Biſhop of Wincheſter, Wiſſley then Lord Chan- cellour, and others more both of the Kings Privy Cham- ber, and of his Privy Council. Theſe ſeeking (for the furtherance of their ungodly purpoſe) to revive, ſtir up, and kindle evil and pernicious humours in their Prince and Sovereign Lord, to the intent to deprive her of this great favour which then ſhe ſtood in with the King (which they not a little feared would turn to the utter ruin of their Antichriſtian Sect, if it ſhould continue) and there- by to ſtop the paſſage of the Goſpel; and conſequently, having taken away her, who was the onely Patronneſs of the Profeſſors of the truth, openly without fear of check or controulment, with fire and ſword, after their accuſtomed manner, to invade the ſmall remainder, as they hoped, of that poor flock, made their wicked entry unto this their milchievous enterpriſe, after this manner follow- ing.

The

The Kings Majesty, as you have heard, misliked to be contended withal in any kind of argument. This humour of his, although the Queen would not cross in smaller matters, yet in cases of Religion as occasion served, she would not stick in Reverent Terms and humble talk, entering with him into discourse, with sound reasons of Scripture now and then to contrary. The which the King was so well accustomed unto in those matters, that at her Hands he took all in good part, or at the least did never shew countenance of offence thereat: which did not a little appeale her Adversaries to hear and see. During which time, perceiving her so thoroughly grounded in the Kings Favour, they durst not for their lives once open their Lips unto the King in any respect to touch her, either in her presence, or behind her back. And so long the continued this her accustomed usage, not only of her hearing Private Sermons (as is said) but also of her free Conference with the King in matters of Religion, without all peril, until at the last by reason of his fore leggs (the anguish whereof began more and more to increase) he waxed fickle, and there-withal froward, and difficult to be pleased.

The King waxeth fickle, and difficult to be pleased.

In the time of this his sickness he had left his accustomed manner of coming and visiting of the Queen: and therefore she, according as she understood him, by such assured intelligence as she had about him, to be disposed to have her company, sometimes being sent for, either sometimes of her self would come to visit him, either at after dinner or after Supper, as was most fit for her purpose. At which time she would not fail to use all occasions to move him, according to her manner, zealously to proceed in the Reformation of the Church. The sharpness of the disease had sharpened the Kings accustomed patience, so that he began to shew some tokens of milking; and contrary unto his manner, upon a day breaking off that matter, he took occasion to enter into other talk, which somewhat amazed the Queen. To whom notwithstanding in her presence he gave neither evil word nor countenance, but knit up all Arguments with gentle words and loving countenance; and after other pleasant talk, she for that time took her leave of his Majesty. Who after his manner bidding her farewell sweet heart (for that was his usual Term to the Queen) licenced her to depart.

The King beginneth to mislike of the Queen.

The Bishop of Winchester taketh his occasion to work his mischief.

At this visitation chanced the Bishop of Winchester aforementioned to be present, as also at the Queens taking her leave (who very well had printed in his Memory the Kings sudden interrupting of the Queen in her tale, and falling into other matter) and thought that if the Iron were beaten whilst it was hot, and that the Kings humor were holpen, such milking might follow towards the Queen, as might both overthrow her and all her endeavours; and he only awaited some occasion to renew into the Kings memory the former milked Argument. His expectation in that behalf did nothing fail him; for the King at that time shewed himself no less prompt and ready to receive any information, than the Bishop was maliciously bent to stir up the Kings indignation against her. The King, immediately upon her departure from him, used these or like words: A good hearing, quoth he, it is when Women become such Clerks, and a thing much to my comfort, to come in mine old days to be taught by my Wife.

The Bishop of Winchester words to the King.

The Bishop hearing this, seemed to mislike that the Queen should so much forget her self, as to take upon her to stand in any Argument with his Majesty, whom he to his Face extolled for his rare virtues, and specially for his learned Judgment in matters of Religion, above not only Princes of that and other ages, but also above Doctors professed in Divinity, and said that it was an unseemly thing for any of his Majesties Subjects to reason and argue with him so malapertly, and grievous to him for his part, and other of his Majesties Counsellors and Servants, to hear the same; and that they all by proof knew his wisdom to be such, that it was not needful for any to put him in mind of any such matters; inferring moreover how dangerous and perilous a matter it is, and ever hath been for a Prince to suffer such insolent words at his Subjects Hands: who as they take boldness to contrary their Sovereign in words, so want they no will, but only power and strength to overthrow them in deeds.

Besides this, that the Religion by the Queen so stiffly maintained did not only disallow and dissolve the policy and politique Government of Princes, but also taught the people that all things ought to be in common; so that what colour soever they pretended, their opinions were indeed so odious, and for the Princes Estate so perilous, that (saving the reverence they bear unto her for his Majesties sake) they durst be bold to affirm that the greatest Subject in this Land, speaking those Words that he did speak, and defending likewise those Arguments that he did defend, had with indifferent justice by law deserved death.

Hobert for his part, he would not, nor durst not, without good Warrant from his Majesty, speak his knowledge in the Queens case, although very apparent reasons made for him, and such as his dutiful affection towards his Majesty, and the Zeal and preservation of his estate, would scarce give him leave to conceal, though the uttering thereof might through her, and her faction, be the utter destruction of him, and of such as indeed did chiefly tender the Princes safety, without his Majesty would take upon him to be their Protector, and as it were their Buckler. Which if he would do (as in respect of his own safety he ought not to refuse) he with others of his faithful Counsellors could within short time disclose such treason, cloaked with this cloak of Heresie, that his Majesty should easily perceive how perilous a matter it is to cherish a Serpent in his own Bosom: Howbeit he would not for his part willingly deal in the matter both for reverend respect aforesaid, and also for fear lest the faction was grown already too great, to there with the Princes safety to discover the same. And therewithal, with heavy countenance, and whispering together with them that that Sect there present, held his Peace.

These and such other kinds of Winchesters flattering phrases marvellously whetted the King both to anger and displeasure toward the Queen, and also to be jealous and mistrustful of his own estate. For the assurance whereof of Princes use not to be scrupulous to do any thing: Thus then Winchester with his flattering words, seeking to frame the Kings disposition after his own pleasure, so far crept into the King at that time, and with doubtful fears he, with other his Fellowes, so filled the Kings mistrustful mind: that before they departed the place, the King (to see belike what they would do) had given commandment, with Warrant to certain of them made for that purpose, to consult together about the drawing of certain Articles against the Queen, wherein her life might be touched; which the King, by their persuasions pretended to be fully resolved not to spare, having any rigor or colour of law to countenance the matter. With this Commission they departed for that time from the King, resolved to put their pernicious practise to as mischievous an execution.

During the time of Deliberation about this matter, they failed not to use all kind of policies, and malicious practises, as well to suborn Accusers, as otherwise to betray her, in seeking to understand what Books by law forbidden he had in her Closet. And the better to bring their purpose to pass, because they would not upon the sudden but by means deal with her, they thought it best, at the first, to begin with some of those Ladies, whom they knew to be great with her, and of her Blood. The chiefest whereof, as most of estimation, and Privy to all her doings, were these; the Lady Herbert, afterward Countess of Pembroke, and Sister to the Queen, and chief of her Privy Chamber; the Lady Lane, being of her Privy Chamber, and also her Cousin german; the Lady Tyrwit, of her Privy Chamber, and for her virtuous disposition in very great favour and credit with her.

It was devised that these three above named should first of all have been accused and brought to answer unto the six Articles, and upon their Apprehension in the Court, their Closets and Coffers should have been searched, that somewhat might have him found whereby the Queen might be charged; which being found, the Q. her self presently should have been taken, and likewise by Barge carried by night unto the Tower. This platform thus devised, but yet in the end coming to no effect; the King by those aforesaid was forthwith made Privie unto the device by Winchester and Wrisley, and his consent thereunto demanded. Malice malice, how far it would presume) like a wife politick Prince, was contented (dissembling) to give his consent, and to allow of every Circumstance (knowing notwithstanding in the end what he would do.) And thus the day, the time, and the place of these apprehensions afore-said was appointed; which device yet after was changed.

The King at that time lay at Whitehall, and used very seldom, being not well at ease, to stir out of his Chamber or privy Gallery; and few of his Counsel, but by especial commandment, resorted unto him; these only except, who by reason of this practise used oftner than ordinary to repair unto him. This purpose so finely was handled, that it grew now within few days of the time appointed for the execution of the matter, and the poor Queen neither knew nor suspected any thing at all, and therefore used after her accustomed manner, when she came to visit the King, still to deal with him touching Religion, as before she did.

The King all this while gave her leave to utter her mind at the full without contradiction; not upon any evil mind or milking (ye must conceive) to have her speedy dispatch, but rather closely dissembling with them, to try out the uttermost of Winchesters fetches. Thus after her accustomed Conference with the King, when she had taken her leave of him (the time and day of Winchesters final day approaching fast upon) it chanced that the King of himself, upon a certain night after her being with him, and her leave taken of him, in dislike of her Religion, brake the whole practise unto one of his Physicians, either Dr.Wendy, or else Owen, but rather Wendy, as is supposed: pretending unto him, as though he intended not any longer to be troubled with such a Doctors as she was; and also declaring what trouble was in working against her by certain of her Enemies, but yet charging him withal, upon peril of his life, not to utter it to any Creature living: and thereupon declared unto him the Parties above named, with all Circumstances, and when and what the final resolution of the matter should be.

The Queen all this while, compassed about with Enemies and Persecutors, perceived nothing of all this, nor what was working against her, and what Traps were layed for her by Winchester and his Fellows; so closely was the matter conveyed. But see what the Lord God (who from his eternal Throne of Wisdom seeth and dispatcheth all the inventions of Achitophel, and comprehendeth the wily beguily themselves) did for his poor Handmaiden, in rescuing her from the Pit of Ruin, whereinto she was ready to fall unawares.

For as the Lord would, so came it to pass, that the Bill of Articles drawn against the Queen, and subscribed with the Kings own hand (although dissemblingly you must understand) falling from the bosom of one of the foresaid Counsellors, was found and taken up of some godly person, and brought immediately unto the Queen. Who reading there the Articles comprised against her, and perceiving the Kings own hand unto the same, for the sudden fear thereof fell incontinent into a great melancholy and agony, bewailing and taking on in such sort, as was lamentable to see, as certain of her Ladies and Gentlewomen being yet alive, which were then present about her, can testify.

The King hearing what perplexity she was in, almost to the peril and danger of her life, sent his Physicians unto her. Who travelling about her, and seeing what extremity she was in, did what they could for her recovery. Then Wendy, who knew the cause better than the other, and perceiving by her words what the matter was, according to that the King before had told him, for the comforting of her heavy mind, began to break with her in secret manner, touching the said Articles devised against her, which he himself, he said, knew right-well to be true: although he stood in danger of his life, if ever he were known to utter the same to any living Creature. Nevertheless, partly for the safety of her life, and partly for the discharge of his own Conscience, having remore to consent to the shedding of innocent blood, he could not but give her warning of that mischief that hanged over her head, beseeching her most instantly to use all secrecy in that behalf, and exhorted her somewhat to frame and conform her self unto the Kings mind, saying, he did not doubt, but if she would do so, and shew her humble Submission unto him; she should find him gracious and favourable unto her.

It was not long after this, but the King hearing of the dangerous state wherein she yet still remained, came unto her himself. Unto whom, after that she had uttered her grief, fearing least his Majesty, she said, had taken displeasure with her, and had utterly forsaken her, he like a loving Husband, with sweet and comfortable words, so refreshed and appeased her careful mind, that she upon the same began somewhat to recover; and so the King, after he had tarried there about the space of an hour, departed.

After this the Queen; remembering with her self the words that Mr.Wendy had said unto her; devised how by some good opportunity she might repair to the Kings presence. And so first commanding her Ladies to convey away their Books which were against the Law, the next night following after Supper, she (waited upon only by the Lady Herbert her Sister, and the Lady Lane, who carried the Candle before her) went unto the Kings Bed-chamber, whom she found sitting and talking with certain Gentlemen of his Chamber. Whom when the King did behold, very courteously he welcomed her, and breaking off the talk, which before her coming he had with the Gentlemen afore said, began of himself, contrary to his manner before accustomed, to enter into talk of Religion, seeming as it were desirous to be resolved by the Queen of certain Doubts which he propounded.

The Queen perceiving to what purpose this talk did tend, not being unprovided in what sort to behave herself towards the King, with such Answers relieved his Questions as the time and opportunity present did require, mildly, and with reverent Countenance, answering again after this manner:

Your Majesty, quoth she, doth right-well know, neither I my self am ignorant, what great imperfection and weakness by our first Creation is allotted unto us women, to be ordained and appointed as inferior and subject unto man as our Head, from which Head all our direction ought to proceed, and that as God made man to his own shape and likeness, whereby he, being indued with more special gifts of perfection, might rather be stirred to the contemplation of heavenly things, and to the earnest endeavour to obey his Commandments, even so also made he woman of man, of whom and by whom she is to be governed, commanded and directed. Whose womanly weaknesses and natural imperfection ought to be tolerated, aided and borne withal, so that by his wisdom such things as be lacking in her ought to be supplied.

Since therefore that God hath appointed such a natural difference between man and woman, and your Majesty being so excellent in gifts and ornaments of wisdom, and I a silly poor woman, so much inferior in all respects of nature unto you, how then cometh it now to pass that your Majesty, in such dissuade Causes of Religion, will seem to require my judgment? Which when I have uttered and said what I can, yet must I, and will I, refer my judgment in this, and in all other Cases, to your Majesties wisdom, as my only Anchor, Supreme Head and Governour here in Earth, next under God, to lean unto.

Not so by S. Mary, quoth the King, you are become a Doctor, Kate, to instruct us (as we take it) and not to be instructed or directed by us.

If your Majesty take it so, quoth the Queen, then hath your Majesty very much mistaken, who have ever been of the opinion, to think it very unseemly, and preposterous for the woman to take upon her the office of an Instructor or Teacher to her Lord and Husband, but rather to learn of her Husband, and to be taught by him. And where I have with your Majesties leave heretofore been bold to hold talk with your Majesty, wherein sometimes in Opinions there hath seemed some difference, I have not done it so much to maintain Opinion, as I did it rather to minister talk, not only to the end your Majesty might with less grief pass and as he sat in his Chair, embracing her in his arms, and kissing her, he added this, saying, That it did him more good at that time to hear those words of her own with great signs and tokens of marvellous joy and liking, with promises and assurances never again in any fort more to mistake her, entering into other very pleasant Discourses with the Queen and the Lords, and Gentlemen standing by, in the end (being very far in the night) he gave her leave to depart. Whom in her absence the standers by, he gave as singular and as affectuous commendations, as before time to the Bishop and the Chancellor (who then were neither of them present) he feared to mislike of her.

Now then, God be thanked, the Kings mind was clean altered, and he detested in his heart (as afterwards he plainly shewed) this Tragical practise of those cruel Caiaphases; who nothing understanding of the Kings well reformed mind, and good disposition toward the Queen, were busily occupied about thinking and providing for their next days labour, which was the day determined to have carried the Queen to the Tower.

The day, and almost the hour appointed being come, the King being disposed in the Afternoon to take the air (waited upon with two Gentlemen only of his Bedchamber) went into the Garden whither the Queen also came, being sent for by the King himself, the three Ladies above named alone waiting upon her. With whom the King at that time disposed himself to be as pleasant as ever he was in all his life before: When suddenly in the midst of their mirth, the hour determined being come, in cometh the Lord Chancellor into the Garden with forty of the Kings Guards at his heels, with purpose indeed to have taken the Queen, together with the three Ladies aforesaid, whom they had before pur-posed to apprehend alone, even then unto the Tower.
Whom then the King sternly beholding, breaking off his mirth with the Queen, stepping a little aside, called the Chancellor unto him. Who upon his knees spake certain words unto the King, but what they were (for that they were softly spoken, and the King a good pretty distance from the Queen) it is not well known, but it is most certain that the Kings replying unto him, was Knave, for his answer; yea, arrant Knave, Beast, and Pool; and with that the King commanded him presently to avante out of his presence. Which words, although they were uttered somewhat low, yet were they so vehemently whispered out by the King, that the Queen did easily, with her Ladies aforesaid, over-hear them: which had been not a little to her comfort, if she had known at that time the whole cause of his coming, so perfectly as after she knew it. Thus departed the Lord Chancellor out of the Kings Presence as he came, with all his Train, the whole mould of all his devise being utterly broken.

of the Lord Chancellor, whom he seemed to be offend-not what just cause his Majesty had at that time to be

Ab poor Soul, quoth he, thou little knowest how evil
he deserveth this grace at thy hands. Of my word, Sweet-heart, he hath been towards thee an arrant Knave, and so let him go. To this the Queen in charitable manner replying in few words, ended that talk; having also by Gods only blessing happily, for that time and ever, escaped the dangerous Snarles of her bloody and cruel Enemies for the Gospels sake.

The pestiferous purpose of this Bishop, and of such like bloody Adversaries practising thus against the Queen, and proceeding of Gods Gospel (as ye have heard) put-teth me in remembrance of such another like story of his wicked working in like manner, a little before: but much more pernicious and pestilent to the publick Church of Jesus Christ, than this was dangerous to the private estate of the Queen. Which Story likewise I thought here, as in convenient place, to be adjoynted and noticed, to be known to all Posterity, according as I have it faithfully recorded and storied by him, which heard it of the Archbishop Cranmers own mouth declared, in order and form as followeth.

A Discourse touching a certain policy used by Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, in saying King Henry the Eighth from redressing of certain abuses of Ceremonies in the Church, being Embassadors beyond the Seas.

Also the Communication of King Henry the Eighth had with the Embassador of France at Hampton-Court concerning the Reformation of Religion, as well in France, as in England, Anno 1546. Menf.
August.

It chanced in the time of King Henry the Eighth, Step. Gardi- when his Highness died lastly (not many years before his death, conclude a League between the Emperor, the French King, and himself, that the Bishop of Win- chester, Stephen Gardiner by name, was sent in Emba-sage beyond the Seas, for that purpose. In whose absence the Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Cranmer, attending upon the Kings Court, sought occasion somewhat to further the Reformation of the corrupt Religion, not yet fully restored unto perfection. For like as the said Archbishop was always diligent and forward to prefer and advance the sincere Doctrine of the Gospel; so was that other Bishop a contrary Instrument, continually sunning against the same, in whatsoever Coast of the World he remained. For even now he being beyond the Seas, in the temporal Affairs of the Realm, forgot not, but found the means, as a most valiant Champion of the Bishop of Rome, to stop and hinder, as well the good diligence of the said Archbishop, as the godly disposition of the Kings Majesty in that behalf, which thus chanced.

Whilst the said Bishop of Winchester was now remaining beyond the Seas about the Affairs aforesaid, the Kings Majesty and the said Archbishop having conference together for Reformation of some superstitious en-ormities in the Church; amongst other things, the King determined forthwith to pull down the Roods in every Church, and to suppress the accustomed ringing on Al- lallow-night, with a few such like vain Ceremonies; and therefore when the said Archbishop took his leave of the King, to go into Kent his Diocese, his Highness willed him to remember that he should cause two Letters to be devised, by me, quoth the King, to be signed, the one to be directed unto my Lord, and the other unto the Archbishop of York, wherein I will command you both to send forth your Precepts unto all other Bishops within your Provinces, to see those enormities and Ceremonies reformed undelayedly that we have communed of.

So upon this, the Kings pleasure known, when the Archbishop of Canterbury was then come into Kent, he caused his Secretary to conceive and write these Letters according to the Kings mind, and being made in a readines, he sent them to the Court to Sir Anthony Denie, for him to get them signed by the King. When Mr. De- nie had moved the King thereunto; the King made answer, I am now otherwise resolved, for you shall send my Lord of Canterbury word, that simulacra I speak with him about those matters, I have received Letters from my Lord of Winchester, now being on the other side of the Sea, about the conclusion of a League between us and the Emperor, and the French King, and he writeth plainly unto us, That the League will not prosper nor go forward, if we make any other innovation, change, or alteration, either in Religion or Ceremonies, than heretofore hath been already commenced and done. Wherefore my Lord of Canterbury must take patience herein, and forbear until we may ejoy a more apt and convenient time for that purpose.

Reformation of Religion floppeth by the Reformation of the French King, came to the Kings Majesty at Hampton Court, not long before his death.

This Ambassador was Admiral of France, whose name was Monsieur de Amboise, he came to Hampton Court, the 15 day of August, anno 1546. The matter of Reformation again renewed a little betwixt the Kings Majesty and the French King.

The Kings Majesty for the French Ambassador, did not receive him, but only to consider and note the conference and communication had the first night after the said banquet was finished, between the Kings Majesty, the said Ambassador, and the Archbishop of Canterbury (the Kings Highness standing openly in the Banqueting-House, in the open face of all the people, and leaning one Arm upon the Shoulder of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other Arm upon the Shoulder of the Ambassador) touching the establishing of Godly Religion between those two Princes in both their Realms: As by the report of the said Archbishop unto his Secretary, upon occasion of his service to be done in King Edwards Visitation, then being Register in the same Visitation, relation was made on that behalf in this sort.

When the said Visitation was put in a readiness, before the Commissioners should proceed in their Voyage, the said Archbishop sent for the said Register his man unto Hampton Court, and willed him in any wise to make Notes of certain things in the said Visitation; whereof he gave unto him instruction, having then further talk with him touching the good effect and success of the said Visitation. Upon which occasion the Register said unto his Master the Archbishop, I do remember, that you not long ago caused me to conceive and write Letters, which King Henry the eighth should have signed and directed unto your Grace, and the Archbishop of York, for the Reformation of certain enormities in the Churches, as taking down of the Roods, and forbidding of ringing on Alhallow-night, and such like vain Ceremonies. Which Letters your Grace sent to the Court to be signed by the Kings Majesty, but as yet I think that there was never any thing done therein.

Why, quoth the Archbishop again, never heard you those Letters were suppressed and flopped? Whereunto the Archbishop Servant answering again; as it was (said he) my duty to write those Letters, so was it not my part to be inquisitive what became thereupon. Mary, quoth the Archbishop, my Lord of Winchester then being beyond the Seas, about the conclusion of a league between the Emperor, the French King, and the King our Master, and fearing that some Reformation should here pass in the Realm, touching Religion in his absence against his appetite, wrote to the Kings Majesty, bearing him in hand, that the league then towards would not prosper nor go forwards on his Majesties behalf if he made any other innovation, or alteration in Religion, or Ceremonies in the Church, than was already done; which his Advertisement herein caused the King to stay the signing of those Letters, as Sir Anthony Deny wrote to me by the Kings Commandment.

Then said his Servant again unto him; Forasmuch as the Kings good intent took no place then, now your Grace may go forward in those matters, the opportunity of the time much better serving thereunto than in King Henries days.

Not so, quoth the Archbishop. It was better to attempt such Reformation in King Henry the eighth his days than at this time, the King being in his infancy. For if the Kings Father had set forth any thing for the Reformation of abuses, who was he that durst gain say it? Mary; we are now in doubt how men will take the change; or alteration of abuses in the Church, and therefore the Council hath forbore especially to speak thereof; and of other things which gladly they would have reformed in this Visitation, referring all those and such like matters unto the discretions of the Visitors. But if King Henry the eighth had lived unto this day with the French King, it had been past my Lord of Winchester's power to have vilified the Kings Highness, as he did when he was about the same league.

I am sure you were at Hampton Court, quoth the Archbishop, when the French Kings Ambassador was entertained there at those Solemn Banqueting Houses, not long before the Kings death; Namely, when after the Banquet was done the first night, the King leaning upon the Ambassador and upon me; if I should tell what Communication between the Kings Highness and the said Ambassador was had, concerning the establishing of sincere Religion then, a man would hardly have believed it. Nor had I my self thought the Kings Highness had been so forward in those matters as then appeared. I may tell you it passed the pulling down of Roods; and suppressing the ringing of Bells. I take it, that few in England would have believed, that the Kings Majesty and the French King had been at this point, not only within half a year after to have changed the Mass in both the Realms into a Communion (as we now use it) but also utterly to have extirped and banished the Bishop of Rome, and his usurped Power, out of both their Realms and Dominions.

Yea, they were so thoroughly and firmly resolved in that behalf, that they meant also to exhort the Emperor to do the like in Flanders and other his Countries and Seignories, or else they would break off from him. And herein the Kings Highness willed me (quoth the Archbishop) to pen a form thereof to be sent to the French King to consider of. But the deep and most secret Providence of Almighty God, owing to this Realm a sharp scourge for our iniquities, prevented for a time this their most Godly device and intent, by taking to his mercy both these Princes.

A brief Narration of the trouble of Sir George Blage.

Here would also something be said of Sir George Blage, one of the Kings Privy Chamber, who being fallily accused by Sir Hugh Caverley, Knight, and Master Littleton, was sent for by Walsley Lord Chancellor the Sunday before Anne Askew suffered, and the next day was carried to Newgate, and from thence to Guildhall, where he was condemned the same day, and appointed to be burned the Wednesday following. The words which his Accusers laid unto him were these; What if a Mouse should eat the Bread? Then by my consent they should hang up the Mouse. Whereas indeed the words he never spake, as to his lives end he protested. But the truth (as he said) was this, that they craftily to undermine him, walking with him in Pauls Church after a Sermon of Doctor Crome, asked if he were at the Sermon. He said, Yea. I heard say (saith Master Littleton) that he said in his Sermon, That the Mass profitteth neither for the quick nor for the dead. No, saith M. Blage, undetermined of death, wherefore then? be like for a Gentleman when he rideth on hunting, to keep his Horse from stumbling. And so they departing, immediately after he was apprehended (as is shewed) and condemned to be burned. When this was heard among them of the Privy Chamber, the King hearing them whispering together (which he could never abide) commanded them to tell him the matter. Whereupon the matter being opened, and fute made to the King, especially by the good Earl of Bedford, then Lord Privy Seal, the King being fore offended with their doings, that they would come so near him, and even into his Privy Chamber, without his knowledge, sent for Wrisley, commanding citizens to draw out his Pardon himself, and so was he set at liberty. Who coming after to the Kings Presence; Ab my Pig (saith the King to him, for so he was wont to call him.) Yea, said he, if your Majesty had not been better to me than your Bishops were, your Pig had been roasted ere this time.

But to let this matter of Sir George Blage pass, we will now reduce our Story again to Anne Askew and her fellow Martyrs, who the same week were burned, and could find no Pardon.

Anno
1546.

Then the Catholick Fathers, when they had brought this Christian Woman, with the residue (as above hath been declared) unto their Rest; they being now in their Ruff and Triumph, like as the Pharisees when they had brought Christ to his Grave, deviled with themselves how to keep him down still, and to over-tread Tygh for ever. Whereupon consulting with certain of the Council, they made out a freight and hard Proclamation, authorized by the Kings Name, for the abolishing of the Scripture, and all such English Books which might give any light to the setting forth of Gods true Word, and Grace of the Gospel. The Copy and Tenour of which Proclamation is this, as followeth.

A Proclamation for the abolishing of English Books, after the death of Anne Askew, set forth by the King, Anno 1546. the eighth day of July.

THe Kings most excellent Majesty understanding how, under the pretence of expounding and declaring the truth of Gods Scripture, divers lewd and evil disposed persons have taken upon them to utter and sow abroad, by Books imprinted in the English Tongue, sundry pernicious and detestable Errors and Heresies, not only contrary to the Laws of this Realm, but also repugnant to the true sense of Gods Law and his Word, by reason whereof certain men of late, to the destruction of their own Bodies and Souls, and to the evil example of others, have attempted arrogantly and maliciously to impugn the Truth, and therewith trouble the sober, quiet, and godly Religion, united and established under the Kings Majesty in this Realm; his Highness minding to foresee the dangers that might ensue of the said Books, is enforced to use his general Prohibition, Commandment, and Proclamation, as followeth.

The New

Scripture
Books in English restrained.

First, That from henceforth no man, woman, or person, of what estate, condition, or degree soever he or they be, shall after the last day of August next ensuing, receive, have, take, or keep in his or their possession, the Text of the New Testament of Tindall or Coverdale Translation in English, nor any other than is permitted by the Act of Parliament made in the Session of the Parliament holden at Westminster in the four and thirtieth and five and thirtieth year of his Majesties most noble Reign; nor after the said day shall receive, have, take or keep in his or their possession, any manner of Books printed or written in the English Tongue, which be, or shall be set forth in the names of Frith, Tindall, Wickliffe, Joy, Roy, Basil, Bale, Barnes, Coverdale, Turner, Tracy, or by any of them, or any other Book or Books, containing matter contrary to the said Act made in the year thirty four, or thirty five, but shall, before the last day of August next coming, deliver the same English Book, or Books, to his Master in that Household, if he be a Servant, or dwell under any other, and the Master or Ruler of the House, and such other as dwell at large, shall deliver all such Books of these sorts as they have, or shall come to their hands, delivered as aforesaid or otherwise, to the Maior, Bailiff, or chief Constable of the Town where they dwell, to be by them delivered over openly within forty days next following after the said delivery, to the Sheriff of the Shire, or to the Bishops Chancellor, or Commissary of the same Diocess, to the intent the said Bishop, Chancellor, Commissary, and Sheriff, and every of them, may cause them incontinently to be openly burned: which thing the Kings Majesties pleasure is, that every of them shall see executed in most effectual sort, and of their doings thereof make Certificate to the Kings Majesties most honourable Council, before the first day of October next coming.

Burning
Scripture
Books.

And to the intent that no man shall mistrust any danger of such Penal Statutes as be passed in this behalf, for the keeping of the said Books, the Kings Majesty is most graciously consented by this Proclamation to pardon that offence to the said time appointed by the Proclamation for the delivery of the said Books, and commandeth that no Bishop, Chancellor, Commissary, Maior, Bailiff, Sheriff, or Constable, shall be curious to mark who bringeth forth such Books, but only order and burn them openly, as is in this Proclamation ordered. And if any man, after the last day of August next coming, shall have any of the said Books in his keeping, or be proved, and convicted by sufficient witnesses before four of the Kings most honourable Council, to have hidden them, or used them, or any Copy of any of them, or any part of them, whereby it should appear that he willingly hath offended the true meaning of this Proclamation, the same shall not only suffer imprisonment and punishment of his Body at the Kings Majesties will and pleasure, but also shall make such fine and ransom to his Highness for the same, as by his Majesty, or four of his Graces said Council, shall be determined, &c.

The Penalty
limited.

Finally, His Majesty straightly chargeeth and commandeth, that no person or persons, of what estate, degree, or condition soever he or they be, from the day of this Proclamation, presume to bring any manner of English Book, concerning any manner of Christian Religion, printed in the parts beyond the Seas, into this Realm, to sell, give or distribute any English Book printed in outward parts, or the Copy of any such Book, or any part thereof, to any person, dwelling within this his Graces Realm, or any other his Majesties Dominions, unless the same shall be specially licensed so to do by his Highness's express Grant to be obtained in writing for the same, upon the pains before limited, and therewithal to incur his Majesties extremest indignation.

Forasmuch as it is, and always hath been the common guise and practise of the Popes Church, to extinguish, condemn, and abolish all good Books and wholesome Treatises of Learned men, under a false pretence of Errors and Heresies, whereof Examples now abundantly appear in this History above: Now for the better trial hereof, to see and try the impudent and shameless vanity of these Catholick Clergy-men, in mistaking, falsifying, depraving, blaspheming, and slandering where they have no cause, against all right and honest dealing, yea, against their own knowledge, conscience, and manifest verity of Gods Word; I shall therefore desire the attentive Reader, before we pass any further, to consider and expend here two things by the way: First, What Opinions and Articles these men gather out of their Books for Errors and Heresies. Secondly, How wittingly and willingly they writ, pervert, and misconstrue their sayings and writings, in such sense as the writers never spake nor meant, and all to bring them into hatred of the world, after they have burned their Books.

The unwise dealing of the Papists in gathering Heresies where none is;

So did they before with John Wickliffe, John Hus, and Hierome. So did they before with Mr. Luther, Wickliffe, and others, which were set forth by the Papists, and briefly yet do still with all the Protestants, either perverting their sayings otherwise than they meant, or noting for Heresies such as are manifest Principles, and Grounds of our Religion: or else falsely belying them, or untruly mistaking them, either in mangling the places, or adding to their words, as may serve for their molt advantage, to bring them out of credit with Princes and all the People.

For the more evident probation and experience whereof, thou shalt see here (Christian Reader) as in a Table laid before thine eyes, the Book or Catalogue of such Errors, Blasphemies and Heresies, which the Catholick Papists pits in their own Registers have extracted out of their Books, whom in this, and other Proclamations, they have condemned. Whereunto moreover, we have annexed the very places also of the Authors, out of which every Article is gathered, keeping also the same signature of verse and page, which they in their Registers do send unto. So that with little diligence thou maist now, loving Reader, easily perceive, conferring the Articles and Places together, what truth and fidelity these bloody Catholics have used toward the Children of God: First in burning up their Bodies, then in confuting and abolishing their Books, and afterward drawing out Articles, such as they list themselves, out of their Works, to make the People believe what damnable Hereticks they were, as by these Articles hereunder insuing, collected and contained in their own Registers, may well appear. In all which Articles, there is not one (speaking of these Writers which here they have condemned) but either it is a perfect Truth and a Principle of Christian Doctrine, or else it is falsely gathered, or perversely recited, or craftily handled, and maliciously mangled, having either something cut from it, or some more added, or else racked out of its right place, or wrestled to a wrong meaning, which the place giveth not, or else which some other place following doth not better expound and declare. This false and malicious dealing hath always been a common practise amongst Gods enemies from the beginning, to falsifie, wrest, and deprave all things whatsoever maketh not to their faction and affection, be it never so true and just. So began they with Stephen, the first Martyr of Jesus Christ, and so have they continued still, and yet do to this present day.

Long it were to recite, but more grievous to behold what spite and falshood was used in the Articles of the Albigenses, Waldenses, Wickliffe, Swinburne, Bruce, Thorpe, Armachanus, Sir John Oldcastle, John Hus, the Bohemians, and such other. Which thing, if the Booke and Places whence these Articles were gathered against them have suffered to remain, we might more plainly understand. In the mean season, as touching these Articles here present, for so much as the Bishops own Registers have offered them unto us, and do yet remain with the self same Books from whence they are excerpted, I shall therefore desire thee (friendly Reader) first to consider the Articles, and lay them with the places which the Registers themselves do assign, and then judge thy self what is to be thought thereof. The Articles gathered out of the foresaid Books with the Bishops Decree prefixed before the same, is as hereunder followeth.

A Publick Instrument by the Bishops, for the abolishing of the Scripture, and other Books, to be read in English.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Be it known to all and singular, true and faithful People, to whom these present Letters testimonial, or this present publick and authentick Instrument shall come to be seen, read, heard, or understood, and whom this under written shall or may reach, or appertain unto in any manner of wise in time to come; William by the sufferance of Almighty God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all the Realm of England, sendeth greeting in our Lord God everlasting. We signifie unto you all, and let you well to wit and know by these Presents, that the King our Sovereign Lord, hearing of many Books in the English Tongue, containing many detestable Errors, and damnable Opinions, printed in the parts beyond the Seas, to be brought into divers Towns, and sundry parts of this his Realm of England, and sown abroad in the same, to the great decay of our Faith Catholicke, and perillous corruption of his People, unless speedy remedy were briefly provided; his Highness willing evermore to employ all his study and mind, in the high degree which Almighty God hath called him unto, to the weal of his Subjects, that they might live not only in tranquillity and peace, but also be kept pure and cleave of all Contention, and wrong Opinions in Christian Religion; considering also that he, being Defender of the Faith, would be just to him to (suffer such evil Seed sown amongst his People, and so take root that it might overgrow the Corn of the Catholick Doctrine before sown in the Souls of his Subjects; for the repelling of such Books, calling unto him of his great goodness and gracious disposition, not only certain of the chief Prelates and Clerks of his Realm, but also of each University a certain number of the chief Learned men, proposed such of these Books, as his Grace had ready to be read unto them, requiring to hear in that behalf their advice and judgment of them. Who, both by great diligence and mature deliberation, perusing over the said Books, found in them many Errors and Heresies, both detestable and damnable, being of such sort, that they were like briefly to corrupt a great part of his People; (if they might be suffered to remain in their hands any space) gathering also out of them many great Errors and Pervious Heresies, and noting them in writing to the intent to shew for what cause they reputed the said Books damnable, of which hereafter out of each Book gathered many do ensue: albeit many more there be in the said Books, which Books totally do swarm full of Heresies and detestable Opinions.

Heresies and Errors collected by the Bishops out of Heresies the Book of Tindall, named the Wicked Mammon, falsly gathered by the places of the Book annexed to the same, out of the Truths out of the mixed Mammon.

1. First only justifies, Fol. 59.

This Article being a Principle of the Scripture, and the ground of our Salvation, is plain enough by Scripture and the whole Body of the Scripture: neither can any make this an Heresie, but they must make S. Paul an Heretick, and these themselves enemies unto the promises of Grace, and to the Cross of Christ.

2. The Law maketh us to hear God, because we be born under the power of the Devil. Fol. 59.

3. It is impossible for us to consent to the will of God. Fol. 59.

The place of Tindall from whence these Articles be wrested, is in the Wicked Mammon, as followeth. Which place I beseech thee indifferently to read; and then to judge.

In the faith which we have in Christ, and in Gods promises, find we mercy, life, favour, and peace. In the Law we find death, damnation, and wrath, moreover, the curse and vengeance of God upon us. And it, that is to say the Law, is called of Paul, the ministrator of death and damnation. In the Law we are proved to be enemies of God, and that we hate him. For how can we be at peace with God, and love him, seeing we are conceived and born under the power of the Devil, and are his possession and kingdom, his captives and bondmen, and led at his will, and he holdeth our hearts, so that it is impossible for us to consent to the will of God? Much more impossible is it for a man to fulfill the law of his own strength and power, seeing that we are by birth and nature the heirs of eternal damnation, &c.

4. The Law requireth impossible things of us. Fol. 59.

Read the place. The Law when it commandeth that thou shalt not lust, giveth thee no power so to do, but damneth thee because thou canst not so do. If thou wilt therefore be at peace with God, and love him, then must thou turn to the Promises and to the Gospel, which is called of Paul the ministrator of righteousness, and is of the spirit.

5. The Spirit of God turneth us and our nature, that we do good, as naturally as a Tree doth bring forth fruit. Fol. 65.

The place is this: The Spirit of God accompanieth this place faith, and bringeth with her light, wherewith a man becometh boldeth himself in the Law of God, and seeth his miserable bondage and captivity, and humbly himself, and containing abhorreth himself. She bringeth Gods promises of all good morning and things in Christ: God worketh with his word, and in his word, and as his word is preached, faith rooteth her self in the hearts of the Elect: and as faith encreaseth, the power of God loveth the heart from the captivity and bondage under sin, and knitteth and coupleth him to God, and to the will of God, altereth and changeth him clean, fashioneth and forgeth him anew, groweth him power to love and to do that which before was impossible for him either to love or do, and turneth him into a new Nature; so that he loveth that which before he hated, and hateth that which he before loved, and is clean altered and changed, and contrarily disposed, and is knit and coupled fast to Gods will, and naturally bringeth forth good works; that is to say, that which God commandeth to do, and not things of his own imagination; and that doth he of his own accord, as a tree bringeth forth fruit of his own accord, &c.

6. Article. 6. Works do only declare to thee that thou art justified. Fol. 65.

If Tindall say, That works do only declare our justification; he doth not thereby destroy good works; but only sheweth the right use and office of good works to be nothing to merit our justification, but rather to testify a lively Faith, which only justifieth us: The Article is plain by the Scripture and S. Paul.

7. Article. 7. Christ with all his works did not deserve Heaven. Fol. 69.

Read the place. All good works must be done freely with a single eye, without respect of any thing, so that no profit be sought thereby. That commandeth Christ, who be faith, Free have you received, free give again.

For look as Christ with all his works * did not deserve Heaven (for that was his already) but did us service thereinwith, and neither looked for, nor sought his own profit, but ours; and the honour of God his Father only: even so we with all our works may not seek our own profit, neither in this World nor in Heaven, but must and ought freely to work to honour God withal, and without all manner of respect seek our Neighbours profit, and do him service, &c.

8. Labouring by good works to come to Heaven, thou shalt Christ's Blood. Fol. 69.

Read the place. If thou wouldest obtain Heaven with the merits and deservings of thine own works, so doest thou wrong, yea, and shalt the Blood of Christ, and unto thee Christ is dead in vain. Now is the true Believer born of God by Christ's deserving; yea and in Christ was predestinate and ordained unto eternal life before the world began. And when the Gospel is preached unto us, we believe the mercy of God, and in believing, we receive the Spirit of God, which is the earnest of eternal life, and we are in eternal life already, and already feel in our hearts the sweetness thereof, and are overcome with the kindness of God and Christ; and therefore love the will of God, and of love are ready to work freely, and not to obtain that which is given us freely, and whereof we are heirs already, &c.

9. Article. 9. Saints in Heaven cannot help us therein. Fol. 69.

Whether Saints can help us unto Heaven, see the Scriptures; and mark well the Office of the Son of God, our only Saviour and Redeemer, and thou shalt not need to seek any further.

10. To build a Church in the honour of our Lady, or any other Saints, is in vain, they cannot help thee, they be not thy friends. Fol. 71.

Read the place of Tindall. What buildeth thou Churches, foundest Abbeyes, Chauntries and Colledges in the honour of Saints, to my Mother, S. Peter, Paul, and Saints: that be dead, to make of them thy Friends? They need it not, yea, they be not thy Friends; thy Friends are thy poor Neighbours, which need thy help and succour. Then make thy Friends with the unrighteous Mammon, that they may testify of thy Faith, and that thou mayest know and feel that thy Faith is right, and not feigned, &c.

11. All flesh is in bondage of sin, and cannot but sin. Fol. 74.

This Article is evident enough of it self, confirmed by the Scripture, and needeth no Allegations.

12. Thou canst not be damned without Christ be damned, nor Christ be saved without thou be saved. Fol. 76.

Read the place. A Physician serveth not for sick men, and that for such men as feel their sickness, and mourn therefore, and long for health. Christ likewise serveth not for sinners only that feel their sin, and that for such sinners as sorrow and mourn in their hearts for health. Health is the power or strength to fulfil the Law, or to keep the Commandments: Now be that longeth for that health, that is to say, to do the Law of God, is blessed in Christ, and hath a promise that his lust shall be fulfilled, and that he shall be made whole. Blessed are they which hunger and thirst for righteousness sake, (that is, to fulfil the Law) for their lust shall be fulfilled, Matth. 5.

This longing, and the consent of the heart unto the Law of God is the working of the Spirit, which God hath poured into thine heart, in earnest, that thou mightest be sure that God will fulfil all his promises that he hath made thee. It is also the seal and mark which God putteth on all men that he choiceth unto everlasting life.

So long as thou seekest thy sin, and mournest, and consentest to the Law, and longest (though thou be never so weak) yet the Spirit shall keep thee in all temptations from desperation, and certify thine heart, that God for his Truth shall deliver thee, and save thee, yea, and by thy good deeds shalt thou be saved, not which thou hast done, but which Christ hath done for thee. For Christ is thine, and all his deeds are thy deeds. Christ is in thee, and thou in him, knit together inseparably, neither canst thou be damned, except Christ be damned with thee, neither can Christ be saved, except thou be saved with him, &c.

The like comfortable words he hath afterward, fol. 38. which are these. He that deserveth mercy, the same feeleth his own misery and sin, and mourneth in his heart to be delivered, that he might honour God, and God for his Truth must bear him, which faith by the mouth verily of Christ, Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be satisfied. God, for his Truths sake, must put the righteousness of Christ in him, and wash his unrighteousness away in the blood of Christ. And be the sinner never so weak, so feeble and frail, though he have sinned never so oft, and so grievously; yet so long as this lust, desire, and mourning to be delivered, remaineth in him, God seeth not his sins, reckoneth them not, for his Truths sake, and love in Christ. He is not a sinner in the sight of God that would be no sinner. He that would be delivered, hath his heart loose already. His heart smiteth not, but mourneth, repenteth, and consenteth unto the Law and Will of God, and justifieth God, that is, heareth record that God, which made the Law, is righteous and just. And such a heart trusting in Christ's blood, accepted for full righteousness, and his weakness, infirmity, and frailty is pardoned, and his sins are not looked upon, until God put more strength in him, and fulfil his desire, &c.

13. The Commandments be given us, not to do them, but to know our damnation, and to call for mercy of God. Fol. 76.

Read the place. If thou wilt enter into life, keep the Commandments, Matth. 19. 19. First remember that when God commandeth us to do any thing, he doth it not therefore because that we of our selves are able to do that he commandeth, but that by the Law we might see and know our horrible damnation and captivity under which we should sin, and so repent and come unto Christ and receive mercy, &c.

14. Fasting is only to avoid surfeit, and to tame the body; all other purposes be naught. Fol. 81.

The words of Tyndall be these: Fasting is to abstain from surfeiting or overmuch eating, from drunkenness and cares of the world, as thou mayest read, Luke 20. And the end of Fasting is to tame the body, that the spirit may have the free course to God, and may quietly talk with God. For overmuch eating and drinking, and are of worldly business, presseth down the spirit, choaketh it, and tangleth it, that it cannot lift up its self to God. Now be that fasteth for any other intent than to subdue the body, that the spirit may wait on God, and freely exercise it self in the things of God, the same is blind, and wotteth not what he doth, erreth, and sheweth at a wrong mark, and his intent and imagination is abominable in the sight of God, &c.

15. To bid the poor man pray for me, is only to remember him to do his duty; not that I have any trust in his Prayer. Fol. 42.

The place hideth us from our neighbour
in his holiness,
our trust is in God, in Christ, and in the truth of Gods promises.
We have also a promise, that when two or three more agree together in one thing, according to the will of God, God heareth us; notwithstanding as God heareth many, so heareth he few, and so heareth he one, if he pray after the will of God, and desire the honour of God, &c.

16. Though thou give me a thousand pound to pray for thee, I am no more bound now than I was before. Fol. 83.

The words be thefe. If thou give me a thousand pound to pray for thee, I am no more bound than I was before. Mans Imagination can make the Commandment of God neither greater nor smaller, neither can the Law of God either add or diminish. Gods Commandments be as great as himselfe, &c.

17. A good deed done and not of fervent charity, as Christs was, is Sin. Fol. 83.

The words of Tyndal be thefe. Though then thefe Mercy unto thy Neighbour, yet if thou do it not with such burning love, as Christ did unto thee, so must thou knowledgethy Sin, and desire Mercy, in Christ, &c.

18. Every Man is Lord of another Mans goods. Fol. 83.

The words of Tyndal be thefe. Christ is Lord over all, and every Christian is Heir annexed with Christ, and therefore Lord of all, and every one Lord of whatsoever another hath. If thy Brother or Neighbour therefore need, and thou have to help him, and yet shewest not mercy, but withdrawest thy hands from him, then robbest thou him of his own, and art a thief, &c. Read more hereof in the xx. Article following.

19. I am bound to love the Turk with the very bottom of my Heart. Fol. 83.

The place of this Article is this. I am bound to love the Turk with all my might and power, yea and above my power, even from the ground of my heart, after the example that Christ loved me, neither to spare Goods, Body, nor Life, to win him to Christ. And what can I do more for thee, if thou gavest me all the World? Where I see need, there can I not but pray, if Gods Spirit be in me, &c.

20. The worst Turk living hath as much right to my goods as his needs, as my household, or mine own self. Fol. 83.

Read and mark well the place in the Wicked Mammon. In Christ we are all of one degree without respect of persons. Notwithstanding, though a Christian Mans Heart be open unto all Men, and receiveth all Men, yet because that his habilitie of goods extendeth not so far, as this provision is made, that every Man shall care for his own household, as Father and Mother, and thine elders that have holpen thee, Wife, Children, and Servants. If thou shouldst not care and provide for thine Household, then were thou an Infidel, seeing thou hast taken on thee so to do; and forasmuch as that is thy part committed unto thee of the Congregation, when thou hast done thy duty to thine household, and yet hast further abundance of the blessings of God, that cometh thou to the poor that cannot labour, or would labour and can get no work, and are destitute of friends to the poor I mean which thou knowest, to them of thine own Parish. If thy neighbours which thou knowest be served, and thou yet have superfluous, and hearest necessity to be among the Brethren a thousand mile off, to them art thou debtor. Yea, to the very Infidels we be debtors if they need, as far forth as we maintain them not against Christ, or to Blasphemous Christ. Thou is every Man that needeth thy help, thy Father, Mother, Sister, and Brother in Christ; even as every Man that doth the will of the Father; is Father, Mother, Sister, and Brother unto Christ.

Moreover, if any be an Infidel and a false Christian, and forsake his Household, his Wife, Children, and such as cannot help themselves, then art thou bound to them, if thou have wherewith, even as much as to thine own Household, and they have as good right in thy goods, as thou thyself. &c. And if the words

World were thine, yet hath every Brother his right in thy goods, and is heir with thee; as we are all heirs of Christ.

21. Alms do serveth no need. Fol. 84.

The place is this: He that seeketh with his Alms more than to be merciful, to be a Neighbour, to succour his Brothers need, to do his duty to his Brother, to give his Brother that he oweth him, the same is blind, and seeth not what it is to be a Christian man, and to have fellowship in Christs Blood, &c.

22. There is no work better than another to please God, to make Water, to wash dishes; to be a Sower, or an Apostle, all is one; to wash dishes and to preach is all one, as touching the deed to please God. Fol. 44.

The words of Tindal be thefe. As pertaining to good works, understand that all works are good which are done within the Law of God, in faith and with thanksgiving to God, and understand that thou in thy doing pleasest God; whatsoever thou doest within the Law of God, as when thou makest water, &c.

Moreover, put no difference between works, but whatsoever cometh into thy hands, that do, as time, place, and occasion giveth, and as God hath put thee in degree, high or low. As touching to please God, there is no work better than another. God looketh not first on thy works, as the World doth, as though the beautifulnes of the works pleased him, as it doth the World, or as though he had need of them; but God looketh first on the Heart, what Faith thou hast to his words, how thou believest him, and how thou lovest him for his great mercy that he hath shewed thee; he looketh with what Heart thou workest, and not what thou workest; how thou acceptest the degree that he hath put thee in, and not of what degree thou art, whether thou be an Apostle or a Shoemaker. Set this Example before thine eyes: Thou art a Kitchen Page, and walkest thy masters dishes. Another is an Apostle, and preacheth the Word of God. Of this Apostle heark what S. Paul saith, If I preach (saith he) I have ought to rejoyce in, for necessity is put unto me. As who should say, God hath made me so, woe is unto me if I preach not. If I do it willingly (saith he) then have I my reward. That is, then am I sure that Gods Spirit is in me, and that I am elect to eternal life. If I do it against my will, an Office is committed unto me; That is, if I do it not of love to God, but to get a living thereby, and for a worldly purpose, and had lever other-wise live; then do I that Office which God hath put me in, and yet please not God my self, &c. Moreover, howsoever he preach, he hath not to rejoyce in that he preacheth. But if he preach willingly with a true heart, and of Conscience to God, then hath he his reward, that is, then feeleth he the earnest of eternal life, and the working of the Spirit of God in him. And as he feeleth Gods goodness and mercy, so be thou sure he feeleth his own infirmity, weakness, and unworthiness, and mourneth and knowledgeth his Sin. In that the Heart will not arise to work with that full lust and love that is in Christ our Lord. And nevertheless is he yet at peace with God, through Faith and trust in Christ Jesus. For the earnest of the Spirit that worketh in him, testifieth and beareth witness unto his Heart, that God hath chosen him, and that his Grace shall suffice him, which Grace is now not idle in him. In his works putteth he no trust.

Now thou that minisrest in the Kitchen, and art but a Kitchen Page, receivest all things at the hand of God, knowest that God hath put thee in that Office, submittest thy self to his will, and servest thy Master, not as a man, but as Christ himself, with a pure heart, according as Paul only teacheth; putteth thy trust in God, and with him seeketh thy reward. Moreover, there is not a good deed done, but thy Heart rejoyceth therein, yea when thou heardest that the Word of God is Preached by this Apostle, and seest the people turn to God, thou consentest unto the deed, thy Heart breaketh out in joy, springeth and leapeth in thy breast, that God is honoured, and in thine Heart dost the same that the Apostles do, and happily with greater delectation and a more fervent Spirit. Now, he that receiveth a Prophet, in the Name of a Prophet, shall receive the reward of a Prophet; That is, he that consenteth to the deed of a Prophet and maintaineth it,

21. Article. The place annexed.

The words of Tindal be thefe. As pertaining to good works, understand that all works are good which are done within the Law of God, in faith and with thanksgiving to God, and understand that thou in thy doing pleasest God; whatsoever thou doest within the Law of God, as when thou makest water, &c.

The place hideth us from our neighbour in his holiness, our trust is in God, in Christ, and in the truth of Gods promises.

This place answereth for it self sufficiently.

17. Article.

This place tendeth to no such meaning as is in the Article, but only sheweth our good deeds to be imperfect.

19. Article.

To love the Turk to end to win him to Christ, is to Retell but charity.

To Reader how pcevibly this place is wretched. First hercia no mention made of any Turk. Secondly, this place speaking of an infidel, meaneth of such Christians which forsake their own households. Thirdly, by his right in thy goods, he meaneth no property that he hath to claim, but only to put the remembrance of thy Christian duty whatso give.

No difference of men before God, in respect of deeds, but as Paul only in respect of Faith.

the same hath the same Spirit, and earnest of everlasting life, which the Prophet hath, and is elect as the Prophet is.

Now if thou compare deed to deed, there is great difference betwixt walking of duties, and preaching the Word of God. But as touching to please God, none at all. For neither that, nor this pleaseth, but as far forth as God hath chosen a man, hath put his Spirit in him, and purified his heart by faith and trust in Christ, &c.

23 Article.] 23. Ceremonies of the Church have brought the World from God, fol. 86.

The place annexed.

Read the place of Tindall, Seek the Word of God in all things, and without the Word of God do nothing, though it appear never so glorious. Whatsoever is done without the Word of God, that count Idolatry. The Kingdom of Heaven is within us. Luke 7. Wonder therefore at no monstrous appearance, nor at any outward thing without the Word. For the World was never drawn from God, but with an outward shew, and glorious appearance and shining of Hypocrite, and of fained and usurped fasting, praying, watching, singing, offering, sacrificing, hallowing of Superstitious Ceremonies, and monstrous disguising, &c.

24. Article. 24. Beware of good intents: They are Damned of God. Fol. 87.

The place annexed.

25. Article. 25. See thou do nothing but that God biddeth thee. Fol. 87.

The place annexed.

The words of Tindal out of the which these two Articles be gathered are these. Beware of thy good intent, good mind, good affection, or zeal as they call it. Peter of good mind, and of a good affection or zeal, child Christ, because he said that he must go to Jerusalem and there be slain. But Christ called him Satan for his labour, a Name that belongeth to the Devil, and said that he perceived not Godly things, but Worldly. Of a good intent, and of a fervent affection to Christ, the Sons of Zebadee would have had fire to come down from Heaven to consume the Samaritans; but Christ rebuked them, saying, that they wilt not of what Spirit they were; that is, that they understood not how that they were altogether Worldly and Fleishly minded. Peter smote Malchus of a good zeal, but Christ condemned his deed. The Jews of a good intent and of a good zeal slew Christ and persecuted the Apostles, as Paul beareth them record, Rom. 10. I bear them record (saith he) that they have a fervent mind to God-ward, but not according to knowledge. It is another thing then to do of a good mind, and to do of knowledge. Labour for Knowledge that thou mayest know Gods Will, and what he would have thee to do.

Luke 9. Good intents.

Our mind, intent, and affection, or zeal, are blinded, and all that we do of them is Damned of God, and for that cause hath God made a Testament between him and us, wherein is contained both what he would have us to do, and what he would have us to ask of him. Seetherefore that thou do nothing to please God withal, but that he commandeth, neither ask any thing of him but that he hath promised thee, &c.

26 Article.] 26. Churches are for Preaching only, and not as they be used now. Fol. 78.

This Article containeth neither Error nor Heresie, but is plain enough of it self, to all them that have their minds exercised in the Scriptures of God.

27. Article. 27. To worship God otherwise than to believe that he is just and true in his promise, is to make God an Idol. Fol. 87.

The place annexed.

Read the words of Tindall with this Article. God is honored on all sides, in that we count him righteous in all his Laws and Ordinances, and also true in all his Promises. Other worship of God is none, except we make an Idol of him, &c.

28. Article. 28. Pharaoh had no power to let the people depart, at Gods pleasure. Fol. 95.

29. Article. 29. Our Prelates, in sin say they have power. Fol. 95.

The place annexed. Rom. 10.

Read the place in the Wicked Mammon, out of the which these two Articles are gathered. Saint Paul saith, If thou confest with thy Mouth that Jesus is the Lord, and believe with thine heart that God raised him from death, thou shalt be safe: That is, if thou believe that he raised him up again for thy Salvation. Many believe that God is rich and almighty, but not unto themselves: as that he will be good to them, and defend them, and be their God: Pharaoh for pain of the Plague was compelled to confest his Sins, but had yet no power to submit himself unto the Will of God, and to let the Children of Israel go, and to lose so great profit for Gods pleasure. As our Prelates confest their Sins, saying, Though we be never so evil, yet we have the power. And again, the Scribes and the Pharisees, say they, saith in Moses Seat, do as they teach, but not as they do. Thus confest they that they are abominable, &c.

Here follow other Heresies and Errors, collected by the Bishops out of the book Named, The Obedience of a Christian Man, with the places of the Book annexed to the same.

HE saith, We are bound to make satisfaction to our Neighbour, but not to God. Fol. 132.

Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him we have offended, which recompence we are able to make one man to another, and are bound so to do; but to God no man can make any amends or recompence, but only Gods own Son Christ Jesus our Saviour: for else if man could have made satisfaction to God, then had Christ dyed in vain. Gal. 2. Lo, what Heresie or Error is in this Article?

2. He saith, That Children ought not to marry without the consent of their parents. Fol. 120.

The words of Tindall in the Obedience be these: Let the Fathers and Mothers mark how they themselves were disposed at all ages, and by experience of their own infirmities, help their Children, and keep them from occasions. Let them provide marriages for them in season, teaching them also to know, That the most his Wife which the Son taketh, nor be her Husband which the Daughter taketh without the consent or good will of their Elders, or them that have Authority over them. If their friends will not marry them, then are they not to be blame if they marry themselves. Let not the Fathers and Mothers always take the uttermost of their Authority of their Children, but at all times suffer with them and bear their weakness as Christ doth ours, &c.

2. Article. The place annexed.

The Parents consent in Marriage.

3. He saith that Vows are against the Ordinance of God. Fol. 109.

They that say that this Article is an Heresie, let him shew where these Vows in all the New Testament be ordained of God, especially such Vows of single life and wilful poverty, as by the Canon Law be obtruded to young Priests and Novices. S. Paul plainly foretendeth any Widows to be admitted under the Age of threescore years. Is not here throw you a perilous Heresie?

4. He saith, that a Christian Man may not resist a Prince being an Infidel and an Eivniike. This taketh away freewill. Fol. 113.

Saint Peter willet us to be subject to our Princes, 1 Pet. 2. Saint Paul also doth the like, Rom. 13. Who was also himself subject to the power of Nero: and although every Commandment of Nero against God he did not follow, yet he never made resistance against the authority and state of Nero, as the Pope useth to do against the state not only of Infidels, but also of Christian Princes.

5. Whatsoever is done before the Spirit of God cometh and giveth us light, it is damnable Sin. This is against moral virtues. Fol. 113.

What Heresie Aristotle in his Ethike can find by this Article, I cannot tell. Sure I am, that the Word and Spirit of God well considered, can find none, but rather will pronounce the contrary to be a damnable Heresie.

6. He reproveth men that make holy Saints their Advocates to God, and there be saith, That Saints were not rewarded in Heaven for their holy works. Fol. 114.

The words of Tindal be these: They turn from Gods Word, and put their trust and confidence in the Saint, and his merits, and make an Advocate, or rather a God of the Saints, &c. They ascribe Heaven to their imaginations and mad inventions, and receive it not of the liberty of God, by the merits and deservings of Christ, &c.

Verily made Mercie.

The words in the Obedience be these: In the hundred and seventh Psalm thou readest, He destroyed the Rivers, and dried up the Springs of Water, and turned the fruitful Land into barrenness, for the Inhabitants thereof. When the Children of Israel had forgotten God in Egypt, God moved the Hearts of the Egyptians to hate them, and to subdue them with their craft and wyliness, Psalm 105.

In the second Chapter of the first Book of the Kings, God was angry with his people, and moved David to number them, when Joab and the other Lords wondered why he would have them numbred, and because they feared lest some evil should follow, dissuaded the King; yet it holpe not, God so * hardened his heart in his purpose, to have an occasion to slay the wicked people, &c.

8. Paul was of higher Authority than Peter. Fol. 125. The words in the Obedience be these: I suppose (saith he, speaking of Paul) that I was not behind the high Apostles, meaning in Preaching Jesus Christ and his Gospel, and ministering the Spirit. And in the same Chapter he proveth by the Doctrine of Christ, that he was greater than the high Apostles: For Christ saith, To be great in the Kingdom of God, is to do service, and take pain for other. Upon which Rule Paul disputeth, saying, If they be the Ministers of Christ, I am more. In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in Prison more plenteous, in death oft, &c. If Paul Preached Christ more than Peter, and suffered more for his Congregation, then is he greater than Peter, by the testimony of Christ, &c.

9. A Priest ought to have a Wife for two causes. Fol. 133.

The words of Tindall be these: He must have a Wife for two causes; one, That it may thereby be known who is meet for the room: it is unfit for to chargeable an Office, which had never houthold to rule. Another cause is, That Chastity is an exceeding seldom gift, and unchastity exceeding perillous for that degree, in as much as the people look as well unto the living as unto the Preaching, and are hurt at once if the living disagree, and fall from the Faith, and believe not the word, &c.

10. He Condemneth Auricular Confession, Fol. 140. Of this read above.

11. Every Man is a Priest, and we read ne other Priest to be a mean for us unto God. Fol. 144.

The words in the Obedience be these. There is a word called in Latin Sacerdos, in the Greek, ιερεως, in Hebrew Cohan, that is a Minister, an Officer, a Sacrificer, or a Priest, as Aaron was a Priest, and Sacrificed for the People, and was a mediator between God and them, and in the English it should have had some other Name, than Priest, but Antichrist hath deceived us with unknown and strange Terms to bring us into confusion and Superstitious blindness. Of that manner is Christ a Priest: for ever, and all we are Priests through him, and need no more of any such Priest to be a mean for us unto God, &c.

12. He destroyeth the Sacraments of Matrimony and Orders. Fol. 144.

As truly as Matrimony and Orders be Sacraments, so truly is this Article an Heresie.

13. He saith that Purgatory is the Popes invention, and therefore he may do there whatsoever he will. 150.

One of the Popes own Writers saith thus, Souls being in Purgatory are under the Popes jurisdiction, and the Pope may, if he will, evacuate all Purgatory. Furthermore the old Fathers make little mention of Purgatory, the Greek Church never believed the Purgatory: Saint Augustine doubteth of Purgatory, and the Scriptures plainly disprove Purgatory. Saint John saith, The Blood of Jesus Christ the Son of God purgeth us from all Sin. And the Pope saith, Sin cannot be purged but by the Fire of Purgatory: Now whose invention can Purgatory be, but only the Popes?

14. Saints be saved not by their merits, but only by the merits of Christ. Fol. 151.

What can be more manifest and plain by the Scriptures, than this? If say saith, All we have erred, every man in his own ways, and God hath layd upon him all our iniquities, &c.

15. He saith, no Man may be hired to pray, Fol. 155.

The words in the Obedience be true, which are these. To pray one for another are we equally bound: and to pray is a thing that we may always do, whatsoever we have in hand; and that to do, may no man hire another: Christs Blood hath hired us already, &c.

16. Why should I trust, saith he, in Pauls Prayer or Holiness? If Saint Paul were alive, he would compare himself to Saint Paul, and be as good as he, Fol. 159.

The words of Tindall be these. Why am not I also a false Prophet if I teach thee to trust in Paul, or in his Holiness or Prayer, or in any thing saving in Gods Word, as Paul did? If Paul were here and loved me, as he loved them of his time, to whom he was a Servant to preach Christ, what good could he do for me, or with me, but preach Christ, and pray to God for me to open my heart, to give me his Spirit, and to bring me to the full knowledge of Christ? Unto which Port or Haven when I am once come, I am as safe as Paul, joynt heir with Paul of all the promises of God, &c.

17. He saith that all that be baptized, become Christ himself. Fol. 163.

With this Article confer the words of the Obedience, which be these. In Matth. 25. saith Christ, In as much as ye have done it to one of the least of these my Brethren, ye have done it to me. And in as much as ye have not done it unto one of the least of these, ye have not done it unto me. Here seest thou that we are Christs Brethren, and even Christ himself, and whatsoever we do one to another, that we do to Christ, &c.

18. He saith that the Children of Faith be under no Law. Fol. 163.

The words of Tindall be these. I serve thee not because thou art my Master or King, for hope of reward or fear of pain, but for the love of Christ. For the Children of Faith are under no Law, as thou seest in the Epistle to the Romans, to the Galatians, and the first of Timothy, but are free. The Spirit of Christ hath written the lively Law of love in their hearts, which driveth them to work of their own accord, freely and willingly, for the great love sake only which they see in Christ, and therefore need they no Law to compel them, &c.

19. There is no deed so good, but that the Law condemneth it. Fol. 177.

The place in the Obedience is this. Thou hast the story of Peter, how he smote off Malchus eare, and how Christ healed it again: There hast thou in the plain Text great fruit, and great edifying, which I pass over. Then come I, when I preach of the Law, and the Gospel, and borrow this example to expresse the nature of the Law, and of the Gospel, and to paint it unto thee before thine eyes, and of Peter and his Sword make I the Law, and of Christ the Gospel, saying, as Peters Sword cutteth off the ear, so doth the Law. The Law dammeth, the Law killeth and mangleth the Conscience. There is no ear so righteous, that can abide the hearing of the Law. There is no deed so good, but that the Law dammeth it. But Christ, that is to say, the Gospel, the Promises and Testament that God hath made in Christ, healeth the ear and conscience, which the Law hath hurt, &c.

20. To ask of God more than he hath promised, cometh of a false Faith, and is plain Idolatry. Fol. 171.

The words of Tindall are these. Look wherein thou canst best keep the Commandments; thither get thy self, and there abide, &c. If we have infirmities that draw us from the Laws of God, let us cure them with the remedies that God hath made. If thou burn, marry; for God hath promised thee no chastity, as long as thou mayst use the remedy that he hath ordained; no more than he hath promised to slack thine hunger without meat. Now to ask of God, more than he hath promised, cometh of a false Faith, and is plain Idolatry, &c.

21. Our pain taken in keeping the Commandments, doth nothing but purge the Sin that remaineth in the flesh, but to look for any other reward or promotion in Heaven, than God hath promised for Christs sake, is abominable in the sight of God. Fol. 171.

Consider the place in the Obedience, which is this. To look for any other reward, or promotion in Heaven, or in the life to come, than that which God hath promised for Christs sake, and which Christ hath deserved for us with with his pain taking, is abominable in the sight of God: for Christ only hath purchased the reward, and our pain taking to keep the Commandments doth but purge the Sin that remaineth in the Flesh, and certifies us, that we are chosen and sealed with Gods Spirit, unto the reward that Christ hath purchased for us, &c.

22. Article. 22. The Pope hath no other Authority but to preach only. Fol. 173.

Christ said to Peter, Feed my Sheep, John 21. And thou being converted, confirm thy Brethren, Luke 22. And to his Apostles he said, Go ye into all the World and preach the Gospel, &c. Again, Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 1. (saith, That Christ sent him not to Baptize but to preach: to what other Office or Function he sent the Pope, let them judge which consider the Scriptures.

23. Article. 23. If thou bind thy self to chastity to obtain that which Christ purchased for thee, so surely art thou an Infidel. Fol. 175.

Read and confer the place of Tindall which is this. Chastity canst thou not give to God, further than God lendeth it thee. If thou canst not live chaste, thou art bound to marry, or to be damned, &c. For to what purpose thou bendest thy self, must be seen. If thou do it to obtain thereby that which Christ hath purchased for thee, so art thou an Infidel, and hast no part with Christ. If thou wilt see more of this matter, look into Deuteronomy, and there thou shalt find it more largely intrated, &c.

24. Article. 24. He denieth, rebuketh, and damnable miracles. Fol. 176.

The words in Tindall's Obedience be these. And when they cry miracles, miracles, remember that God hath made an everlasting Testament which is in Christs Blood, against which we may receive no miracles, no neither the Preaching of Paul himself if he come again, by his own teaching to the Galatians, neither yet the Preaching of the Angels of Heaven, &c.

Miracles how far to be believed. The end of Gods miracles is good; the end of these miracles is evil. For the offerings, which are the cause of the miracles, do but minister and maintain vice, sin, and all abomination, and are given to them that have too much, so that for very abundance they come out their own shame, and corrupt the whole World with the stink of their filthiness, &c.

25. Article. 25. He saith that no man should serve God with good intent or zeal; for it is plain Idolatry. Fol. 77.

The place is in the Obedience: Remember Saul was cast away of God for ever, for his good intent. God requirith Obedience unto his word, and abhorreth all good intents, and good zeals which are without Gods Word, for they are nothing else but plain Idolatry, and worshipping of false Gods, &c.

Here follow other Heresies and Errours collected by the Bishops, out of the Book called the Revelation of Antichrist, with the places of the Book, out of the which they were gathered, annexed to the same.

Articles out of the Book called the Revelation of Antichrist. 1. To bind a Man perpetually to any Vow of Religion, is without doubt an error. Fol. 19.

The place of the Book called the Revelation of Antichrist. The place of this Article is gathered, is this that followeth: which the Fathers did neither make nor keep, he meaneth Vows, but with the liberty of the Spirit, binding no man perpetually to them. For if they did, without doubt, they erred according to mans fragility.

2. Article. 2. To say the Constitutions of Religion are good because holy men did ordain them, as Augustine, Benedict, Francis, Dominick, and such other, and to follow such examples of Fathers, is to leave the Faith. Fol. 19.

The place annexed. The place of this Article is this. But they object; The Statutes and Ordinances are good. Holy men did make them, as Augustine, Benedict, Bernard, Francis, Dominick, and such other. To this answer, That is even that Christ and the Apostles did mean, That these words should be like to those things which are taught in the Gospel, for that they call counterfeiting of the Doctrine, and privily bringing in of Sects and Heresies, because they take only of the Fathers examples of works, and leave the Faith, &c.

2. Pet. 2.

3. All Moral Divines have a wicked Conscience full of scrupulosity. Fol. 3.

Moral Divines be they whose Doctrine and hope of Salvation consisteth in Moral Vertues, rather than in Christian Faith, apprehending the free promises of God in Christ. And they that be such can never be certified in Confidence of their Salvation, but always be full of fear and scrupulosity. Saint Paul therefore saith, It is therefore of Faith, that it might come by Grace, and the promise might be firm and sure to the whole seed, Rom. 4.

4. Moral Vertues, as Justice, Temperance, Strength, Chastity, described by Natural Reason, maketh a Synagogue, and corrupteth Christs Faith. Fol. 64.

The place of this Article, gathered out of the Revelation, is this: so many be (the Pope he meaneth) corrupted, as he hath fubdued and led under his Laws and Impery. And who is he in the World that is not subject under him, except they be Infants, or peradventure some simple persons, which are reformed by the inflexible Council and provision of God? O thou Man of Sin, O thou Son of Perdition, O thou abomination, O thou Corrupter, O thou Author of evil Consciences, O thou false Master of good Consciences, O thou enemy of Faith and Christian liberty, who is able to rehearse, yea, or to comprehend in his mind the infinite waves of this monstrous Kings evils?

If he had ordained these his Laws in those works of vertues that are commended in the ten Precepts, or else in such as the Philosophers and Natural Reason did describe, as are Justice, Strength, Temperance, Chastity, Mildness, Truth, Goodness, and such other, peradventure they should only have made a Synagogue, or else have ordained in the World a certain Civil Justice, for through these also Faith should have been corrupted, as it was among the Jews. Howbeit, now he keepeth not himself within these bounds, but runneth at riot, and moeth large, raising infinite Tempests of mischief, entailing and drawing us to Ceremonies, and his own fained Traditions, and binding us like asses and ignorant fools, yea and like stocks unto them, &c.

5. Christ took away all Laws, and maketh us free at liberty, and most of all he suppresseth all Ceremonies. Fol. 63, 65.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation, is this: Christ taking away all Laws to make us free and at liberty, did most of all suppress and disannul the Ceremonies which did consist in places, persons, garments, meats, days, and such other, so that their use should be to all men most free and indifferent, &c.

What he meaneth by taking away all Laws, he declarereth a little before, saying, he hath not delivered us from the Law, but from the Power and Violence of the Law, which is the very true loosing. But for all that he hath not taken away from the Powers and Officers, their Right, Sword, and Authority to punish the evil, for such pertain not to his Kingdom, until they are made spiritual, and then freely and with a glad heart they serve God.

6. If the Pope would make all the observations of the Ceremonies, as Lent, fasting, holy-days, confession, Matrimony, Mass, Matrine, and Reliques, &c. free and indifferent, he should not be Antichrist; but now, because he commandeth them in the name of Christ be utterly corrupteth the Church, suppresseth the Faith, and advances Sm. Fol. 67.

If the Pope will infer a necessity of those things, which Christ leaveth free and indifferent, then what doth he make himself but Antichrist? The Article is plain, and is founded upon the doctrine of Christ, and Saint Paul.

7. To believe in Christ maketh sure Inheritors with Christ. Fol. 1.

8. If a Man say, then shall we do no good works? I answer as Christ did: This is the work of God to believe in him whom he hath sent. Fol. 1.

The place of these two Articles, gathered out of the Revelation is this: who is this light that we are exhorted to believe in? Truly it is Christ, as Saint John both testifies; He was the true light that lighteth all men which come into the World. To believe in this light, maketh maketh us the Children of light, and the sure Inheritors with Jesus Christ. Even now have we cruel Adversaries, which set up their bristles, saying, why shall we then do no good works? To these we answer as Christ did to the people in the first of Saint John, which asked him what they should do, that they might work the Works of God? Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the Work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent. And after it followeth, Verily, verily I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. To this also condescendeth Saint John, in his Epistle, saying, These things have I written unto you that believe on the Name of the Son of God, that you may surely know how that you have Eternal Life. What is the Name of the Son of God? Truly his Name is Jesus, that is to say, a Saviour; therefore thou must believe that he is a Saviour.

But what availeth this? The Devils do thus believe and tremble. They know that he is the Son of God, and said unto him, crying, O Jesus the Son of God, what have we to do with thee? They know that he hath redeemed mankind by his passion, and they laboured to let it. For when Pilate was sent down to give Judgment, his Wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just Man, for I have suffered many things this day in my sleep about him. No doubt the she vexed of the Devil, to the intent that she should persuade her Husband to give no Sentence upon him, so that Satan might the longer have had jurisdiction over mankind. They know that he hath suppressed Sin and Death, as it is written, Death is consumed into Victory. Death where is thy Sting? Hell where is thy Victory? The Sting of death is Sin: the strength of Sin is the Law. But thanks be unto God which hath given us Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ; who by Sin damned Sin in the Flesh. For God made him to be Sin for us, that is to say, a Sacrifice for our Sin (and so is Sin taken in many places) which knew do Sin, that we by his means, should be that righteousness which before God is allowed. It is not therefore sufficient to believe that he is a Saviour and Redeemer; but that he is a Saviour and Redeemer unto thee, &c.

9. Numbering of Sins maketh a Man a more Sinner, yet, a blasphemer of the Name of God. Fol. 3.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this; Knowledge thy self a Sinner, that thou mayst be justified. Not that the numbering of thy Sins can make thee righteous, but rather a greater Sinner, yea, and a blasphemer of the Holy Name of God, as thou maist see in Cain, which said that his Sins were greater than that he might receive forgiveness, and so was a Reprobate, &c.

10. God bindeth us to that which is impossible for us to accomplish. Fol. 3.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this; If thou ask of me, why he bindeth us to that which is impossible for us to accomplish; thou shalt have S. Augustines answer, which saith in the second Book that he wrote to Hierome, that the Law was given us, that we might know what to do, and what to eschew, to the intent that when we see our selves not able to do that which we are bound to do, nor avoid the contrary, we may then know what we shall pray for, and of whom we shall ask this strength, so that we may say unto our Father, Good Father command whatsoever pleaseth thee, but give us thy Grace to fulfil that thou commandest. And when we perceive that we cannot fulfil his will, yet let us confess that the Law is good and holy, and that we are Sinners and carnal, sold under Sin. But let us not here flick, for now we are at Hell-gates, and doubtless should fall into utter desperation, except God did bring us again, shewing us his Gospel and promise, saying, Fear not little Flock, for it is your Fathers pleasure to give you a Kingdom, &c.

11. Sin cannot condemn us, for our satisfaction is made in Christ which dyed for us. Fol. 4.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is this; Sin hath no power over us, neither can condemn us, for our satisfaction is made in Christ, which dyed for us that were wicked, and naturally the Children of wrath. But God which is rich in mercy, through the great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead through Sin, hath quickened us with Christ, and with him hath raised us up, and with him hath made us sit in Heavenly places through Jesus Christ, to shew in times to come the exceeding Riches of his Grace in kindness towards us through Christ Jesus: For by Grace are ye saved through Faith, and that not of your selves, for it is the gift of God, and cometh not of works, lest any man should boast himself, &c.

12. I will shew thee an evident Argument and Reason that thou maist know without doubt, who is Antichrist. All they that do pursue are Antichrist; The Pope, Bishops, Cardinals, and their Adherents do pursue; therefore the Pope, Bishops, and Cardinals, and their Adherents, are Antichrists. I wene our Syllogismus be well made. Fol. 9.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation is; I will shew thee an evident Reason that thou mayst know without doubting which is the very Antichrist: and this Argument may be grounded upon their furious persecution, which Paul doth confirm, writing to the Galatians. We (dear Brethren) are the Children of Promise, as Isaac was (not the Sons of the bondwoman, as Ismael;) but as he that was born after the flesh did persecute him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Mark Pauls Reason. By Isaac are signified the Elect, and by Ismael the reprobate. Isaac did not persecute Ismael, but contrary, Ismael did persecute Isaac. Now let us make our Reason.

Bar. All they that do persecute are Ismael, be Reprobates and Antichrists.

ba. But all the Popes, Cardinals, Bishops, and their Adherents do persecute.

ra. Therefore all the Popes, Cardinals, Bishops, and their Adherents be Ismael, Reprobates and Antichrists.

I wene our Syllogismus is well made, and in the first figure.

Read the place, and see how he proveth the parts of this Argument more at large.

13. I think verily, that so long as the Successors of the Apostles were persecuted and martyred, there were good Christian Men, and no longer. Fol. 10.

The Bishops of Rome in the Primitive Church were under persecution the space welnear of three hundred years; under the which persecution, as good as thirty of them and more dyed Martyrs. Since that time have succeeded two hundred and four Popes which have lived in great wealth and abundance, amongst whom if the Book of Revelation think that there be not four to be found good Christian men, I think no less but that he may so think without any Heresie.

14. It is impossible that the word of the Cross should be without affliction and persecution. Fol. 10.

Saint Paul saith, whosoever will live virtuously in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. And how then can this be true in Paul, and in this man Heresie?

15. That the Apostles did ever curse any man truly we cannot read in Scripture: for Christ commanded them to bless those that cursed them. Fol. 11.

Upon what good ground of the Revelation this Heresie is wrung out, let the place be conferred, which is written in these words following: They are as merciful as the Woolf is on his prey. They were ordained to bless men, but they curse as the Devil were in them. Paul saith that he hath power to edifie, and not to destroy. But I wot not of whom these bloody Beasts have their Authority, which do so much rejoyce in cursing and destruction. We read how Paul did Excommunicate the Corinthians (and that for a great transgression) to the intent that he might be ashamed of his iniquity, and desired again the Corinthians to receive him with all charity: but that the Apostles did curse any man, truly we cannot read in Scripture, for Christ commanded them to bless those that cursed them, and to pray for those that persecuted them, &c.

16. By Works, Superstitions, and Ceremonies, we decay from the Faith, which alone doth truly justify and make holy. Fol. 15.

Note here, good Reader, how perversely and corruptly this Article is drawn. For where the place of this Book, which is written, fol. 15. expressly speaketh of trusting to works, meaning that we should put no confidence in works, but only in Faith in Christ Jesus, this Article, to make it appear more Infamous and Heretical, leaveth out the false trust and speaketh simply, as though works should decay Faith. Read the place, which is written in these words following: Daniel calleth not this word Peschiam, any manner of Sin, but those special and chief Sins, which resist and fight against the truth and that Faith: as are the trusting in Works, Superstitions and Ceremonies, by the which we decay from the Faith, &c.

17. Article. 17. The abusing of the Mass with all his Solemnities, with vigils, years-minds, foundations, burials, and all the busines that is done for the dead, is but a face and a cloak of Godliness, and deceiving of the people: As if they were good Works, rather for the dead than for the quick. Fol. 24.

True Godliness consisteth in Faith, that is, in the true knowledge of the Son of God, whom he hath sent, and in the observation of Gods Commandments. All their Rites and Additions instituted by Man, are no part of true Godliness. And who so putteth trust and confidence therein, as being things meritorious for the dead, is deceived. Such Funerals Saint Augustine calleth rather refreshings of the living, than relievings and helps of the dead.

18. Article. 18. To keep and observe one day to fast, another to abstain, to forbear such a meat upon the fasting day to deserve Heaven thereby, is a wicked face and cloak, and against Paul. Fol. 29.

The truth of this Article is manifest enough, to be void of all Error and Heresie, unless it be Heresie, to believe and hold with the Scripture. Saint Paul faith, if Heaven and our Righteousness come by the Law, then Christ dyed in vain. Galatians the second.

19. Article. 19. The multiplication of holy days, of Feasts of Corpus Christi, of the Visitation of our Lady, &c. is a wicked face and colour, and indeed foolish, unprofitable and vain. Fol. 30.

This Article likewise needeth no Declaration, containing in it a true and necessary complaint of such superfluous Holy-days of the Popes making. Which as they bring with them much occasion of Wickedness, Idleness, Drunkenness, and Vanity, and so having also joyned unto them opinion of Religion, and meritorious Devotion and Gods service they gender Superstition, and nourish the people in the same.

20. Article. 20. Keeping of Virginity and Chastity of Religion is a devilish thing. Fol. 30.

The place, cited in the Book of the Revelation of Antichrist, doth sufficiently open it self, speaking and meaning only of those Monkish Vows, which by the Canonical Constitution of the Pope are violently forced upon Priests and Monks, the coercion whereof Saint Paul doth rightly call the Doctrine of Devils. And here note by the way another trick of a Popish Caviller. For where the words of the Book speak plainly of the chastity of the Religious, he fraudently turning it to an Universality faith, the chastity of the Religion, whereby it might seem to the simple Reader more odious and Heretical: the words of the place be these.

1 Tim. 4. Keeping of Virginity and Chastity of the Religious seemeth to be a Godly and a Heavenly thing: but it is a devilish thing. Of the which it is spoken in the fourth of the first Epistle to Timothy, Forbidding to marry, &c. Whereas again our most Reverend Father maketh that thing necessary that Christ would have free, whereof Daniel in the 11. Chapter speaketh, He shall not be desirous of Women. Here Daniel meaneth that he shall refuse and abstain from marriage, for a cloak of Godliness, and not for love of Chastity.

21. Article. 21. Worshipping of Reliques is a proper thing, and cloak of advantage against the precept of God, and nothing but the affection of Men. Fol. 30, 31.

These be the words in the Rev. This (the worshipping of Reliques he meaneth) is a proper and most fruitful cloak of advantage. Out of this were invented innumerable Pilgrimages, with the which the foolish and unlearned people might lose their labour, money and time, nothing in the mean season regarding their Houses, Wives and Children, contrary to the commandment of God; when as they might do much better deeds to their Neighbours, which is the precept, &c.

22. Article. 22. There is but one special Office that pertaineth to thine Orders, and that is to preach the Word of God. Fol. 36.

Of this matter sufficient hath been said before in the two and twentieth Article alledged out of the Book of Obedience.

23. Article. 23. The Temple of God is not Stones and Wood, neither in the time of Paul was there any House which was called the Temple of God. Fol. 36.

The place of this Article is this: which is an Adversary (the Pope he meaneth) and is exalted above all that is called God or that is worshipped: so that he shall sit in the Temple of God and shew himself as God. Doth he not sit in the Temple of God, which faith and professeth himself to be the Master in the whole Church? What is the Temple of God? Is it Stones and Wood? doth not Paul say, The Temple of God is holy, which Temple are ye? Neither in the time of Paul was there any House, which was called the Temple of God, as we now call them. What meaneth this titling, but reigning, teaching and judging? Who, from the beginning of the Church, durst presume to call himself the Master of the whole Church, but only the Pope? &c.

24. Article. 24. He that fasteth no day, that fasts no Mattens, and doth none of the Precepts of the Pope, sinneth not, if he think that he doth not sin. Fol. 43.

The place in the Revel. is this: Because he feareth the Consciences under the Title and pretence of Christs Name, he maketh of those things which in themselves are no Sins very grievous offences. For he that believeth that he doth sin if he eat Flesh on the Apostles Even, or say not Mattens and Prime in the morning, or else leave undone any of the Popes Precepts, no doubt he sinneth; not because the deed which he doth is sin, but because he believeth it is sin, and that against this foolish Belief and Conscience he offendeth. Of which foolish Conscience only the Pope is Head Author; for another doing the same deed, thinking that he doth not sin, truly offendeth not. And this is the cause that the Spirit of Paul complaineth that many shall depart from the Faith. And for this foolish Conscience, mens Traditions be pernicious and noysome, the snares of Souls, hurting the Faith and the liberty of the Gospel. If it were not for this cause they should do no hurt. Therefore the Devil through the Pope abuteth these Consciences to stablish the Laws of his Tyranny, to suppress the Faith and liberty, and to replenish the World with Error, Sin, and Perdition, &c.

25. Article. 25. Christ ordained the Sacrament of the Altar only to nourish the Faith of them that live; but the Pope maketh it a good work, and a Sacrifice to be applied both to the quick and dead. Fol. 48.

The place is this: Satan hated the Sacrament, and knew no way how to suppress and disanul it: Therefore he found this craft, that the Sacrament, which Christ did only ordain to nourish and stablish the Faith of them that live, should be counted a good work and Sacrifice, and bought and sold; and so Faith is suppressed, and this wholsom ministry is applied, not to the quick, but unto the dead, that is to say, neither to the quick, neither yet to the dead. Oh the incredible fury of God, &c.

26. Article. 26. These signs (he speaketh of miracles and visions, or apparitions) are not to the encrease of Faith and Gospel, for they are rather against the Faith and Gospel, and they are the operation of Satan, and lying signs. Fol. 49.

The place is as followeth; Who is able to number the monstrous marvels only of them that are departed? Good Lord, what a sea of lies hath invaded us of Apparitions, Conjurings, and Answers of Spirits? By the which it is brought to pass, that the Pope is also made the King of them that are dead, and reigneth in Purgatory, to the great profit of his Priests, which had all their living, riches, and pomp out of Purgatory. Howbeit they should have less if they did so well teach the Faith of them that live, as they do riddle them that are good.

26. Article.

The place containeth a true complaint of false illusions, and may well be born.

Neither was there since the beginning of the World, any work found of so little labour and great advantage. For truly to this purpose were gathered almost the Possessions of all Princes and rich men. And through these riches sprang up all pleasures and idleness, and of idleness came very Babylon and Sodom, &c.

Neither are these signs to the encrease of the Faith and Gospel (for they are rather against the Faith and Gospel) but they are done to stablish the tyranny of these faces and recdels, and to set up and confirm the trust in works. Among these Illusions are those Miracles to be reputed, which are shewed in Visions, Pilgrimages, and worshippings of Saints, as there are plenty now adays, which the Pope confirmeth by his Bulls, yea, and sometime doth canonize Saints that he knoweth not. Now behold what is the operation of Satan in lying signs, &c.

27. The people of Christ do nothing, because it is commanded, but because it is pleasant and acceptable unto them. Fol. 63.

The words out of which this Article is gathered, are these: They are the people of Christ, which willingly do hear and follow him, not for any fear of the Law, but only enticed and led with a gracious liberty and faithful love; not doing any thing because it is commanded, but because it is pleasant and acceptable unto them, though it were not commanded: for they that would do otherwise, should be counted the people of the Law and Synagogue, &c.

28. In the whole new Law is no urgent precept, nor grievous, but only exhortations to observe things necessary for souls health. Fol. 63.

The place of this Article gathered out of the Revelation, is this: A Christian should work nothing by compulsion of the Law, but all through the Spirit of Liberty, as Paul saith in the second of the first Epistle to Timothy.

The Law is not given to a righteous man: for whatsoever is done by compulsion of the Law, is sin, for it is not done with a glad and willing spirit, but with a contrary will, and rebelling against the Law, and this truly is sin. Therefore in the fourth of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, he calleth the Preachers of the New Testament the Ministers of the Spirit, and not of the Letter, because they teach Grace, and not the Law. Wherefore in the whole New Testament are there no urgent or grievous Precepts, but only exhortations to observe those things which are necessary to our health. Neither did Christ and his Apostles at any time compel any man. And the Holy Ghost was for that cause called Paraclete, that is to say, an Exhorter and Comforter, &c.

29. All things necessary are declared in the New Testament, but no man is compelled, but to do according to their own will. Therefore Christ teacheth, Matth. 18. That a Rebel should not be killed, but avoided. Fol. 63. 66.

The words in the Revelation are these: In the New Testament are all things declared, which we ought to do and leave undone; what reward is ordained for them that do and leave undone; and of whom to seek, find, and obtain help to do and leave undone: But no man is compelled, but suffered to do according to their own will. Therefore in the eighteenth of Matthew, he teacheth that a Rebel should not be killed, but avoided, and put out of company like a Gentile, &c.

30. Christ forbade that one place should be taken as holy, and another profane; but would that all places should be indifferent. Fol. 68.

The place is this: Christ taketh away the difference of all places, which were worshipped in every place. Neither is there in his Kingdom one place holy, and another profane, but all places are indifferent; neither canst thou more heartily and better believe, trust, and love God in the Temple at the Altar, in the Church-yard, than in thy Barn, Vineyard, Kitchen, or Bed. And to be short, the Martyrs of Christ have honoured him in dark Dungeons and Prisons, &c.

31. He raiseth against all the Rites and Ceremonies of the Mass, as he were mad. Fol. 68.

The place out of which this Article is collected, is as followeth. If a Nun touch the Super-altare, or Corporale, (as they call it) it is a sin. To touch the Chalice is a great transgression. To say a Mass with an unhallowed Heart, is a grievous offence. To go to Mass in Vestiments which are not consecrated, is a heinous crime. It is reputed for a sin, if in celebrating any Sacrament, the Priest doth lack any Ornamēt that pertaineth thereunto. If he call a child, or speak in the words of a Canon, it is a sin. He offendeth also that doth stut or stammer in the words of the Canon. He sinneth that toucheth the holy Relicks of Saints. He that toucheth the Sacrament of the Altar, either with hand or finger, though it be for necessity, to pluck it from the roof of his mouth, committeth such villanous iniquity, that they will scrape and shave off the quick flesh from the part which did touch it. I think at length they will fley the tongue, the roof of the mouth, the throat, and the belly, because they touch the Sacrament. But to hurt thy Neighbour, or privily to convey away any of his goods, or not to help him in his need, is in a manner counted for no sin, nor yet regarded, &c.

32. No labour is now adays more tedious than saying of Mass, Matins, &c. Which before God are nothing but grievous sins. Fol. 70.

33. The sins of Manasses, and other wicked Kings, sacrificing their own children, are but light and childlike offences to those. The cursed Sacrifices of the Gentiles may not be compared to ours, we are seven times worse Gentiles than we were before we knew Christ. Fol. 70.

The words out of which these two Articles are gathered, are these. They are so oppressed (those he meaneth which are under the servitude of the Popes Laws and Decrees) that they fulfil them only with the outward work; for their wills are clean contrary, as we see by experience in troublesome business of Vigils, Masses, and Hours, which both must be said and sung. In the which they labour with such weariness, that now adays no labour is more tedious. Yet nevertheless, the cruel exactors of these most hard works compel men to work such things without ceasing, which before God are nothing but grievous sins; although before men they be good works, and counted for the service of God. Here are invented the intilements of the Senses through Organs, Musick, and diversity of Songs; but these are nothing to the Spirit, which rather is extinct through these wanton trifles. Ah Christ, with what violence, with what power are they driven headlong to sin, and perish through this abomination?

It is horrible to look into these cruel Whirl-pools of Consciences, which perish with so great pains and labour: what light offences to these are the sins wherein Manasses and other wicked Kings sinned by doing Sacrifice with their own Children and Progeny? Truly the cursed Sacrifices of the most rude Gentiles, no not of the Levites, may be compared unto ours. The saying of Christ may be verified in us; seven more wicked Spirits make the end worse than the beginning. For I say, that we are worse Gentiles seven times than we were before we knew Christ, &c.

34. It were better to receive neither of the parts of the Sacrament of the Altar, than the one alone. Fol. 73.

The words be these. Plainly I think that the whole is taken away with I see manifestly the one part gone (for the Bread and the Wine is but one Sacrament) the other is left only for a laughing stock. For he that in one part offendeth against God, is guilty in all. Therefore it were better to receive neither of the parts, than the one alone; for so we might the more surely eschew the transgression of that which Christ did institute, &c.

35. The Law of the Pope that commandeth every man to communicate together upon one day, is a most cruel Law constraining men to their own destruction. Fol. 73.

The place is this. He (the Pope he meaneth) fettereth a most cruel and deadly Snare to tangle the Consciences, suffereth not the use of this Sacrament to be free, but compelleth all together on one certain day once in the year to communicate. Here I pray thee, Christian Brother, how many dost thou think to communicate only by the compulsion of this Precept, which truly in their heart have never never communicate? and all these sin (for they do

The place is succeeded. Men ought not to be driven to this communion with, but to be exhorted with, and left to their own disposition.

And of all these sins the Pope is Author, constraining all men by his most cruel Law to their own destruction, whereas he ought to leave this Communion free to every man, and only call and exhort them, and not compel and drive them unto it, &c.

17. Article. 37. S. Thomas de Aquine savoureth nothing of the Spirit of God. Fol. 83.
- The Doctrine of Thomas Aquine referreth the greatness, or a very great part of our righteousness to opus operatum, and unto merits. The Spirit of God referreth all our righteousness before God, only to our faith in Christ. Now how these favour together, let any indifferent Reader judge.

2. Article. The virtue of Baptism lieth not in hallowed water, or in other outward thing, but only in Faith. Fol. 6.
- The place annexed. The place of these two Articles gathered out of the Sum of the Scripture, is this. The water of Baptism taketh not away our sin; for then were it a precious water, and then it behoved us daily to wash our selves therein. Neither hath the water of the Fount more virtue in it self, than the water that runneth in the River of Rhene. When Philip baptized the Eunuch, the Servant of Cambrice the Queen of Ethiopia, there was then no hallowed Water, nor Candle, nor Salt, nor Cream, neither white Habit; but he baptized him in the first water they came to upon the way. Here mayest thou perceive that the virtue of Baptism lieth not in hallowed water, or in the outward things that we have at the Fount, but in the Faith only, &c. Christ hath healed us (saith S. Paul) by the Bath of regeneration and renovation of the Holy Ghost.

- The place annexed. The place of this Article gathered out of the said Book, is this: The Godfathers and Godmothers be bound to help the Children that they be put to School, to the intent that they may understand the Gospel, the joyful Message of God with the Epistles of S. Paul. God hath commanded to publish, and to shew the Gospel, not only to Priests, but to every Creature: Go ye (saith Christ unto his Disciples) into the universal World, and preach the Gospel to every Creature. For we be all equally bound to know the Gospel and the Doctrine of the New Testament, &c. And S. Paul, writing to the Corinthians, confesseth that he sendeth his Epistles to all the Church, that is to say, to all the Assembly of Christian men, and to all them that call on the Name of Jesus, &c.
4. Article. We think when we believe that God is God, and can our Creed, that we have the faith that a Christian man is bound to have; but so doth the Devil believe. Fol. 17.

5. To believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost be one God, is not the Principal that we must believe: our faith doth not lie principally in that, for so believeth the Devil. Fol. 18.

The place out of the which these two Articles are collected, is this: We think, when we believe that God is God, and can our Creed, that we have the Faith which a Christian is bound to have. The Devil believeth also that there is a God, and Life everlasting, and a Hell, but he is never the better for it; and he trembleth alway for his faith, as saith S. James, The Devils believe, and they tremble. A man might ask, What shall I then believe? Thou shalt believe plainly and undoubtedly, That the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost is one only God, &c. But this likewise believeth the wicked Spirits, and are nothing the better therefore. There is yet another Faith which Christ so much requireth of us in the Gospel, and whereunto S. Paul almost in all his Epistles so strongly exhorteth us, that is, that we believe the Gospel. When our Lord began first to preach, he said, (as reheareth S. Mark) Repent and believe the Gospel. Of this faith read before in the first Article gathered out of the Wicked Mammon, and in the ninth and tenth of the Revelation of Antichrist.

6. If we believe that God hath promised everlasting Life, it is impossible that we should perish. Fol. 20.

Lo here good Reader, another manifest Example of the dishonest dealing and false cogging of these men. For where the place of the Author speaketh expressly of putting our trust in God and his promises, the Article prettily leaveth out our trusting in Gods promise, and faith only, If we believe that God hath promised. Read the place, and confer it with the Article, and then judge whether there be no difference between trusting in the promise that God hath made of everlasting Life, and believing only that God hath made the promise of everlasting Life. The place here followeth as it is there written.

When with a perfect courage we put all our trust in God and in his promises, it is impossible that we should perish, for he hath promised us Life everlasting. And as much as he is Almighty, he may well perform that that he hath promised; and in that he is merciful and true, he will perform his promise made unto us, if we can believe it steadfastly, and put all our trust in him.

7. If thou canst surely and steadfastly believe in God, he will hold his promise. For he hath bound himself to us, and by his promise he oweth us Heaven, in case that we believe him. Fol. 21.

Seeing all our hope standeth only upon the promise of God, what Heresie then is in this Doctrine, to say that God oweth us Heaven by his promise, which is no other to mean but that God cannot break promise? And now judge thou (good Reader) whether is more Heresie to say, That God oweth us Heaven by his promise, as we say; or this, that God oweth us Heaven by the congruity and congruity of our works, as the Papists say.

8. All Christs glory is ours. Fol. 27.

9. We need not to labour to be Christs heirs, and sons of God, and to have Heaven; for we have all these things already. Fol. 24.

The words, out of the which these two Heresies are gathered, be these: We be made his heirs, and all his glory is ours, as S. Paul largely declareth. This hath God given us without our deserving, and we need not to labour for all these things, for these we have already, &c.

They which note these Articles for Heresie, by the True Doctrine made Heresie. Same Judgment they may make Heresie of S. Johns Gospel, and of Pauls Epistle, and of all together. S. John saith, The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them that they may be one, as we also are one. As many as received him, to them gave he power to be the sons of God. S. Paul saith, The same Spirit certifyeth our spirits that we are the sons of God. If we be sons, then are we also heirs, the heirs I mean of God, and heirs annexed with Christ.

10. We need not to labour by our good works to get everlasting Life, for we have it already; we be all justified, we be all the children of God. Fol. 28.

11. All

11. Article. 11. All that think that good works help or profit any thing to get the gift of Salvation, they blaspheme against God, and rob God of his honour. Fol. 28.

12. Article. 12. If we be Circumcised, that is to say, if we put any trust in works, Christ shall not help us. Fol. 18.

13. Article. 13. We deserve nothing of God. Fol. 20.

14. Article. 14. We deserve not everlasting life by our good works; for God hath promised it unto us, before that we began to do good. Fol. 40.

15. Article. 15. Every Christian man must keep Gods Commandments by love, and not by hope to get for his service everlasting life. Fol. 42.

16. Article. 16. The Jews kept the Commandments, and the Law of God; yet they could not come to Heaven. Fol. 43.

17. Article. 17. Men trusting in their good works, are like to the thief on the left side, and are such men as come to the Church daily, keep Holy days and Fasting days, and hear Masses, and these people be soonest damned; for this is one of the greatest Errors in Christendome, to think that thy good works shall help to thy salvation. Fol. 47.

If these Articles be made Heresies, which refer the benefit of our inheritance of life and salvation to Gods gift, and not to our labours; to grace, and not to merits; to faith, and not to the law of works; then let us shut up clean the New Testament, and away with Gods Word, and let up a new Divinity of the Popes making; yea, let us leave Christ with his heretical Gospel, and in his stead set up the Bishop of Rome with his Talmud, and become the Disciples of his Decretals. And certainly, except Christian Princes begin betime to take some zeal of God unto them, and look more seriously upon the matter, the proceedings of these men seem to tend to little better, than to drive us at length from true Christianity, to another kind and form of Religion of their own invention, if they have not brought it well-near to pass already.

18. Article. 18. To serve God in a tediousness, or for fear of Hell, or for the joyes of Heaven, is but a shadow of good works, and such service doth not please God. Fol. 41.

The place is this: Works done in Faith be only pleasant unto God, and worthy to be called good works; for they be the works of the Holy Ghost that dwelleth in us by this Faith. But they that are done by tediousness and evil will, for fear of Hell, or for desire of Heaven, be nothing else but shadows of works, making Hypocrites. The end of our good works is only to please God, acknowledging that if we do never so much, we can never do our duty; for they that for fear of Hell, or for the joyes of Heaven do serve God, do a constrained service, which God will not have. Such people do not serve God, because he is their God and their Father, but to have their reward, and to avoid his punishments; and such people are hired men and waged servants, and are not children. But the children of God serve their Father for love, &c.

19. Article. 19. We must love death, and more desire to dye, than to fear death. Fol. 26.

Although our Nature be frail and full of imperfection, so that we do not as we should, yet doing as we ought, and as we are led by the Scriptures to do, we should not dread, but desire rather to dye and be with Christ, as the place it self doth well declare, which is this:

We must love death, and more desire to dye and to be with God, as did S. Paul, than to fear death. For Jesus Christ died for us, to the intent that we should not fear to dye, and he hath slain death, and destroyed the sting of death, as writeth S. Paul, saying, O death where is thy sting? Death is swallowed up in victory. And to the Philippians, Christ is to me life, and Death is to me advantage.

20. Article. 20. God made us his Children and his Heirs, while we were his Enemies, and before we knew him. Fol. 44.

I marvel what the Papists mean in the Registers to condemn this Article as an Heretic, unless their purpose be utterly to impugn and gainstand the Scripture, and the Writings of S. Paul, who in the Fifth Chapter to the Romans, and other his Epistle, imputeth even the same Doctrine in all respects, declaring in formal words that we be made the Children and Heirs of God, and that we were reconciled unto him when we were his Enemies.

21. Article. 21. It were better never to have done good work, and ask mercy therefore, than to do good works, and think that for them God is bound to a man by promise. Fol. 48.

22. Article. 22. We can shew no more honour to God, than faith and trust in him. Fol. 48.

The place out of the which these two Articles be gathered, is this: It were better for thee a thousand fold that thou hadst been a sinner, and never had done good deed, and to acknowledge thine offences and evil life unto God, asking mercy with a good heart, lamenting thy sins, than to have done good works, and in them to put thy trust, thinking that therefore God were bound to thee. There is nothing which (after the manner of speaking) bindeth God, but firm and steadfast faith and trust in him and his promises, &c. For we can shew unto God no greater honour, than to have faith and trust in him: For whosoever doth that, he confesseth that God is true, good, mighty, and merciful, &c.

23. Article. 23. Faith without good works, is not little or feeble faith, but it is no faith. Fol. 50.

24. Article. 24. Every man doth as much as he believeth. Fol. 50.

The place out of which these two Articles be gathered, is this: If thy faith induce thee not to do good works, then hast not thou the right faith, thou dost but only think that thou hast it. For S. James saith, That faith without works is dead in it self. He faith not that it is little or feeble, but that it is dead; and that which is dead, is not: therefore when thou art not moved by faith unto the love of God, and by the love of God unto good works, thou hast no faith, but faith is dead in thee; for the Spirit of God, that by faith cometh into our hearts to stir up love, cannot be idle: Every one doth as much as he believeth, and loveth as much as he hopeth, as writeth S. John; He that hath this hope that he is the Son of God, purifieth himself as he is pure: He faith not, he that purifieth himself hath it is hope, for the hope must come before, proceeding from the faith, as it becometh that the Tree must first be good which must bring forth good fruit.

25. Article. 25. We cannot be without motions of evil desires; but we must mortifie them in resisting them. Fol. 52.

They which note this Article of Heresie, may note themselves rather to be like the Pharisee, Luke 18. who, foolishly flattering himself in the false opinion of his own righteousness, was not subdued to the righteousness, which standeth before God by faith, and therefore went home to his House less justified than the Publican. If the Scriptures condemn the heart of man to be crooked, even from his youth, Genes. 6. and also condemneth all the righteousness of man to be like a filed cloth, and if S. Paul could find in his flesh no good thing dwelling, but sheweth a continual resistance between the old man and the new, then must it follow, that these Pharisees, which condemn this Article of Heresie, either carry no flesh, and no old man about them to be resisted; or verily, say what they will, they cannot choose but be cumbered with evil motions for the inward man continually to fight against. The place of the Author sufficiently defendeth it self, as followeth.

S. Paul biddeth us mortifie all our evil desires and carnal lusts, as uncleanness, covetousness, wrath, blasphemy, detraction, pride, and other like Vices. And unto the Romans the sixth, he saith, Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies: that is to say, albeit we cannot live without the motion of such evil desires, yet we shall not suffer them to rule in us, but shall mortifie them in resisting them, &c.

26. Article. 26. All true Christianity lieth in love of our Neighbours for God, and not in fasting, keeping of Holy days, watching, praying, and singing, and long prayers daily, and all day long hearing Mass, running on Pilgrimage, &c. Fol. 52.

Confer this Article with the Scripture, and thou shalt see no Heresie in it.

The place of this Article is this. Thou hast always occasion to mortifie thine evil desires, to serve thy Neighbour, to comfort him, and to help him with word and deed, with counsel and exhortation, and other semblable means. In such love towards our Neighbour, for the love of God, lieth all the Law and the Prophets, as faith Christ, yea, and all Christianity; and not in fasting, keeping of Holy-days, watching, singing, and long Prayers, daily, and all day long hearing of Masses, setting up of Candles, running on Pilgrimages, and such other things, which as well the Hypocrites, proud People, envious and subject to all wicked affections do, &c.

27. Many Devils in Divinity, and not only in common people, believe that it is the part of Christian Faith only to believe that Jesus Christ hath loved here in Earth. Fol. 53. 54. The place is this. We believe that Jesus Christ hath here lived on Earth, and that he hath preached, and that he died for us, and did many other things. When we believe these things after the Story, we believe that this is our Christian Faith. This not only the simple People believeth, but also Doctors in Divinity, which are taken for wise men. Yea, the Devil hath also this faith, as faith S. James, The Devils believe, and they tremble. For as we have said before, the Devil believeth that God is God, and that Jesus Christ hath here preached, that he died, was buried, and rose again. Thus must we also believe, that this is not the Faith wherof speaketh the Gospel, and S. Paul, &c.

Of this Faith, and what it is, read before in the place of the fourth and fifth Articles of this Book, and of the first Article gathered out of the wicked Mammon, and the ninth and tenth Articles of the Revelation of Antichrist.

28. He that doth good against his will, he doth evil. Fol. 56.

The place is this. All good Deeds, which are not done by love and good will, are sin before God, as faith S. Augustine. He that doth good against his will, doth evil: albeit that he doth be good. For that which I do against my will, I hate; and when I hate the Commandment, I hate also him that hath commanded it, &c.

29. No man doth more than he is bound to do, and therefore no man may make other partakers of their good works. Fol. 59.

The words be these. The Prophet Isaiah faith, We are all as an unclean thing, and all our justice is as it were a filthy cloth: and therefore I can never marvel enough, that many of the religious persons would make other partakers of their good works, seeing that Christ faith in the Gospel, When ye have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants, we have done but that which was our duty to do. For none doth more than he is bound to do, but only Jesus Christ (which only, as faith S. Peter, never did sin, neither was there deceit found in his mouth) hath done that he was not bound to do. And as the Prophet Isaiah faith, Hath taken upon him our infirmities, and born our sorrows; he was wounded for our offences, and smitten for our wickedness, and by his stripes we are made whole, &c.

30. Christ hath gotten Heaven by his Passion; but that right hath he no need of, but hath granted it to all them that believe in his Promises. Fol. 59.

Read the place. Jesus Christ possesseth the Kingdom of Heaven by double right. First, Because he is the Son of God, and very Inheritor of his Kingdom. Secondly, Because he hath gotten it by his Passion and Death. Of this second right he hath no need, and therefore he giveth it to all them that believe and trust in him and his promises.

31. If God had promised us Heaven for our good works, we should ever be unsure of our Salvation. Fol. 59.

32. Be our sins never so great, that it seemeth impossible to us to be saved, yet without any doubt we must believe to be saved. Fol. 59.

The words out of the which these two Articles be gathered are these: If God hath promised Heaven unto us because of our works, we should ever then be unsure of our Salvation. For we should never know how much, nor how long we should labour to be saved, and should ever be in fear that we had done too little, and so we should never dye joyfully. But God would assure us of Heaven by his promise, to the intent we should be certain and sure, for he is the Truth, and cannot lye: and also to the intent that we should have trust and hope in him. And notwithstanding that after the greatness and multitude of our sins, it seem to us a thing impossible, yet always we must believe it without any doubt, because of his sure promise; and whosoever doth this, he may joyfully dye, and abide the judgment of God, which else were intolerable. Read more hereof before in the eleventh Article taken out of the wicked Mammon.

33. If thou love thy Wife, because she is thy Wife, that is no love before God, but thou shalt love her because she is thy sister in God. Fol. 82.

The words be these. Our Saviour Christ hath commanded nothing so strictly, as to love one another, yea, to love our enemies also: then how much more should the Man and Wife love together? But there be but few that know how to love the one the other as they ought to do. If thou love thy Wife only because she is thy Wife, and because she serveth and pleaseeth thee after the flesh, for Beauty, Birth, Riches, and such like, this is no love before God. Of such love speaketh not S. Paul, for such love is among Harlots, yea, among brut Beasts: but thou shalt love her because she is thy Sister in the Christian Faith, and because she is Inheritor together with thee in the glory of God, and because ye serve together one God, because ye have received together one Baptism, &c. Thou shalt also love her for her Vertues, as chastity, chastity, and diligence, faithfulness, patience, temperance, severity, obedience, and other godly Vertues, &c.

34. It is nothing but all incredulity, to run in Pilgrimages, and seek God in one certain place, which is like mighty in all places. Fol. 62.

The matter of this Article is evident to all indifferent and learned judgments, to be void of all doubt of Heresie.

35. Men should see that their Children come to Church to hear the Sermon. Fol. 89.

The place of this Article is this: On the Festival days thou shalt bring thy Children to the Church to hear the Sermon; and when thou shalt come home, thou shalt ask them what they have kept in memory of the Sermon. Thou shalt teach them the Christian Faith. Thou shalt admonish them to live well and to put all their hope and trust in God, and rather to dye than to do any thing that is against the will of God; and principally thou shalt learn them the contents of the Prayer of our Saviour Christ, called the Pater noster; that is to say, how they have another Father in Heaven, of whom they must seek for all goodnes, and without whom they can have no good thing: and how that they may seek nothing in all their works, and in all their intents, but the honour of their heavenly Father: and how they must desire that this Father would govern all that they do or desire: and how that they must submit all to his holy will, which cannot be but good, &c. Thou shalt buy them wholesome Books, as the holy Gospel, the Epistles of the holy Apostles, yea, both the New and the Old Testament, that they may understand and drink of the sweet Fountain and Waters of Life.

36. Thou shalt not vex or grieve, by justice or otherwise, the poor that cometh unto thee: for thou mayest not do it without sin. Fol. 97.

The place is this: Thou shalt not vex or grieve by justice, &c. as Christ faith: Resist not evil, but whosoever striketh thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also, &c. S. Paul faith, Render not evil for evil; and if it be possible, and as much as is in you, live in peace with all men, not revenging your selves, my beloved, but give place to wrath: for it is written, To me the vengeance, and I will render it, saith the Lord God.

37. Some text of Canon Law suffereth war, but the teaching of Christ forbiddeth all wars. Nevertheless, when a City is besieged, or a Country invaded, the Lord of the Country is bound to put his life in jeopardy for his Subjects. Fol. 119.

38. So a Lord may use horrible war charitably and christianly.

As touching war, to be moved or stirred first of our parts against any People or Country upon any rash cause, as Ambition, Malice, or Revenge, the Gospel of Christ giveth us no such Sword to fight withal. Notwithstanding, for defence of Country and Subjects, the Magistrate, being invaded or provoked by other, may lawfully, and is bound to do his best; as the City of Marburgh did well in defending it self against the Emperor, &c.

39. The Gospel maketh all true Christian men servants to all the World. Fol. 79.

He that compiled this Article, craftily to make the matter to appear more heinous, leaveth out the latter part which should expound the other, that is, by the rule of Charity; for that the Author addeth withal. By which Rule of Charity, and not of Office and Duty, every Christian man is bound one to help another, as Christ himself being Lord of all, yet of Charity was a servant to every man to do him good: Read the place of the sum of the Scripture in the Page as in the Article it is assigned.

40. The Gospel is written for all Persons, Estates, Princes, Dukes, Popes, Emperours. Fol. 112.

They which noted this Article for an Heresie, I suppose could little well either what God, or what the Scripture meant.

41. When Judges have hope that an evil doer will amend, they must be always merciful, as Christ was to the woman taken in Adultery. The Temporal Law must obey the Gospel; and them that we may amend by warning, we shall not correct by Justice. Fol. 113.

The purpose of the Book whence this Article is written being well understood, intendeth not to bind Temporal Judges and Magistrates from due execution of good Laws, but putteth both them, and especially Spiritual Judges, in remembrance by the example of Christ, to discern who be penitent Offenders, and who be otherwise; and where they see evident hope of earnest repentance and amendment, if they be Ecclesiastical Judges, to pardon them; if they be Civil Magistrates, yet to temper the rigour of the Law as much as conveniently they may, with merciful moderation, which the Greeks do call ἐπιείκεια.

And thus much hitherto of these Heresies and Articles collected by the Bishops, and inserted in their own Registers out of the Books above specified. The names of the Bishops and Collectors were these, Sir Thomas Moor Lord Chancellor, William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, Tonfall Bishop of London, Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, Richard Sampson Dean of the Chappel, Richard Woolman Master of the Requests, John Bell, Dr. Wilson, with a great number more, as in the Registers doth appear. Ex Regist. Cant. & Lond.

I shall not need, I trust, (gentle Reader) further here to stay with reciting more places, when these already rehearsed may suffice for a tale and a trial for thee, sufficient to note and consider how falsely and most slanderously the Catholics have depraved and misreported the Books and Writings of good men; who might almost gather Heresies as well of S. Johns Gospel, and S. Pauls Epistles, as out of these places. Thus may we see, what cannot malice do, being set on mischief? or what cannot the spirit of spite and cavilling find out, being inflamed with hatred, and blown with the billows of Ambition and Iniquity? And as they have done with these, the like parts they have and do practise still against all other, whoseever in defence of Truth dare touch never so little either the Popes Crown, or the Bellies of his Clergy; for these two sores in no case they can abide to be touched. And hereof only cometh all this crying out, Heresie, Heresie, Blasphemy, Error, and Schism. Although the Doctrine be never so found and perfect after the Scripture, yet if the Writer be not such in all points (especially in these two above touched) as will sing after their tune, and dance after their Pipe, he is by and by an Heretic, by virtue of their Inquisition. So did they with the Articles of the learned Earl Joannes Pius Alendulus. So did they with J. Reulme or Campion. So did they all with good John Coker here in England. Also with the spirit of lying and caviling the Catholics' Paculties of Lozain, Spain, and Paris, condemned the Works and Writings of Erasmus, and many more. So full they are of Censures, Articles, Suspitions, Offences, Inquisitions. So capricious they be in taking, so rash in judging, so slanderous of report, so practised in depraving, misconstruing, and wresting true meanings unto wrong purposes; briefly, so pregnant they be in finding Heresies where none are, that either a man must say nothing, or serve their Devotion, or else he shall procure their displeasure, that is, shall be deemed for an Heretic. Yes, and though no just cause of any Heresie be mingled, yet where they once take disliking, they will not stick sometimes with false Accusations to press him with matter which he never spake nor thought. If Luther had not stirred against the Popes Pardons and Authority, he had remained still a white Son of the Mother Catholic Church, and all had been well done whatsoever he did. But because he adventured to touch once the triple Crown, what Floods of Heresies, Blasphemies, and Articles were cast out against him, enough to drown a whole World? what lies and forged crimes were invented against him?

Here now cometh Staphylus and furious Sarius, with their Fraternity, and say, That he learned his Divinity of the Devil. Then followeth another certain Chronographer, who in his flying Story reporteth most falsely, That Luther died of drunkenness. With like malice the said Chronographer writeth also of Mr. Bucer, falsely affirming upon his Information, That he should deny at his death Christ our Messiah to be come: When not so, but only Dr. Redman, which preached at his Burial, but also all English men, which knew the name of Bucer, did know it to be contrary.

So was it laid against one Singleton, Chaplain some time to Queen Anne Bullen, that he was the murderer of Packington, and afterward, that he was a stirrer up of Sedition and Commotion; who also suffered as a Traytor for the same: Wherein very deed the true cause was for nothing else, but for preaching the Gospel unto the People, whose purpose was ever so far from stirring Sedition, that he never once dreamed of any such matter, as he himself declared and protested to one Richard Lante his Scholar, who is yet alive, and can testify the truth hereof. But this is no new practise amongst the Roman Bishops; whereof enough hath been said before in the Story of Sir John Oldenfile, and Sir Roger Allen, &c.

Another like practise of such malicious slander we find also in one Merial a Bricklayer, whose Name, with falsly belied and contrived of the Papists, his Abjuration, remaineth yet in the Registers of the Bishop of London.

The Story is this, and not unworthy to be remembered. In the Year of our Lord 1534. which was about the first beginning of Queen Anne Bullen, at what time Purgatory and such Trumpery began to grow in contempt; Stokesley Bishop of London made a Sermon in the Shrouds upon the Sunday before May-day. Where he preaching in the commendation of the virtue of Masses, declared to the People that for a little cost, if they procured Masses to be said, Wives might deliver their Husbands, and Husbands their Wives out of the bitter pains of Purgatory. At his Sermon, besides many other, was Thomas Merial, a zealous favourer of Gods Word; who, being in the Watch on May-Eve, made a relation of these words of the Bishop unto the Company about him, amongst whom then was one John Twisford, a furious Papist, and who had the same time the setting up of the Stakes in Smithfield, wherewith the good Saints of God were burned.

This Twisford, which then kept a Tavern, and had an old grudge against the said Merial for striking his Boys, hearing these words, allured home to his house certain Persons, to the number of ten, whose names were these; Blackwell, Lawrence Hylton, Thomas Clarke, John Duffield, William Knapsham, Thomas Hiler, Thomas a Cutler, Allen Rye, with another that was the tenth. Besides these he procured also secretly Mr. Chambers Clerk, whose name was Bright. And when he had easily overcome them with Wine, and made them report what words he listed and which they knew not themselves, the Clerk by and by received the same in writing. Merall, that he should hold and affirm, That the Passion of Christ doth not help them which came after him, but only them which were in Limbo before: and also that he should say, That his Wife was as good as our Lady. Upon this Writing of the Notary, he was immediately brought to Bishop Stokesley, and there by the deposition of these ten false Witnesses wrongfully accused, and also for the same should have been condemned, had not Dr. Barret the same time bid him speak one word (which he knew not) as the Sentence was in reading, whereby the Condemnation was stayed, and he put to do open Penance, and to bear a Fagot. Notwithstanding the said Merall swore before the Bishop that he never spake nor meant any such words as there was said unto him, but only recited the words of the Bishops Sermon, reporting the same in the Person of the Bishop, and not his own. Which also was testified to be true by the Oath of three other, to wit, William Tompson, Gregory Newman, and William Wit, who being in the foresaid Watch the same time, did take upon their Oath before the Bishop, that his words were no other, but as is above declared. Which three Witnesses at the second Edition hereof were also living, with the Wife of the foresaid Merall, who would then also be sworn that the same was true: Whereas contrary, the other ten persons be all gone, and none of them all remaining. Of whom moreover, the most of all the said ten came to a miserable end; whereas the other three which testified the truth with Merall, being living at the second Edition hereof, did see the end of all the other. And as for Twyford, which was the Executioner of Frish, Bayfield, Bainebam, Teakesbury, Lambert, and other good men, he died rotting above the ground, that none could abide him, and so came to a wretched end. Ex testim. uxoris, Meralli, W. Tompson, Gregorij Newman, W. Wit, &c.

Of this malicious and perverse dealing of these men contrary to all truth and honesty, in delaming them for Heretics which indeed are none, and with opprobrious railing to slander their Cause, which is nothing else but the simple truth of Christs Gospel, who listeth to search further (if these examples hitherto recited do not suffice) let him read the Story of Merindoll and Angrongne. Let him consider the furious Bull of Pope Marinus; the like slanderous Bull also of Pope Leo the Tenth, with the Edict of Charles the Emperour against Luther. Also let him survey the railing Stories of Sarius the Monk of Colen, the Book of Ofim, of Lindus, the Chronology of Gembrardus, the Story of Cochleus against the Hussites and the Lutherans, with the Preface of Conradus Brunus the Lawyer preixed before the same, wherein he most falsely and untruly railing against these Protestants, whom he calleth Heretics, chargeth them to be blasphemers of God, contemners of God and Men, Church-robbers, cruel, false liars, crafty deceivers, unfaithful, promise-breakers, disturbers of publick peace and tranquility, corrupters and subverters of Commonweals, and all else that naught is.

In much like sort was Socrates accused of his Country-men for a corrupter of the youth, whom Plato notwithstanding defendeth. Aristides the just lacked not his unjust Accusers. Was it not objected unto S. Paul, That he was a subverter of the Law of Moses, and that we might do evil that good might come thereof? How was it laid to the Christian Martyrs in the Primitive Church for worshipping of an Asses Head, and for sacrificing of Infants. And to come more near to these our latter days, you heard likewise how falsely the Christian Congregation of the Frenchmen gathered together in the night at Paris, to celebrate the holy Communion, were accused of filthy commixtion of men and women together, and the King the same time, Henry the Second, was made to believe that Beds with Pillows and Mats were found there in the floor where they lay together; whereupon the same time divers were condemned to the fire, and burned. Finally, what Innocency is so pure, or Truth so perfect, which can be void of these slanders and calumnies, when also our Saviour Christ himself was noted for a Wine drinker, and a common haunter of the Publicans, &c.

Even so likewise it pleaseth our Lord and Saviour Christ to keep and to exercise his Church under the like kind of Adversaries now reigning in the Church, who under the name of the Church will needs maintain a portly State and Kingdom in this World; and because they cannot uphold their Cause by plain Scripture and the Word of God, they bear it out with facing, railing, and slandering, making Princes and the simple People believe, that all be Heretics, Schismatics, Blasphemers, Rebels, and Subverters of all Authority and Commonweals, whosoever dare reply with any Scripture against their doings.

It is written of Nero, that when he himself had burnt the City of Rome six days and seven nights, he made open Proclamations that the innocent Christians had set the City on fire, to stir the People against them, whereby he might burn and destroy them as Rebels and Traitors.

Not much unlike seemeth the dealing of these religious Catholics, when they be the true Heretics themselves, and have burnt and destroyed the Church of Christ, make out their Exclamations, Bulls, Briefs, Articles, Books, Censures, Letters, and Edicts against the poor Lutherans, to make the People believe, that they be the Heretics, Schismatics, Disturbers of the whole World. Who if they could prove them as they reprove them to be Heretics, they were worthy to be heard. But now they cry out upon them Heretics, and can prove no Heresie; they accuse them of Error, and can prove no Error; they call them Schismatics, and what Church since the World stood, hath been the Mother of so many Schisms as the Mother-Church of Rome? they charge them with diffention and rebellion; and what diffention can be greater than to dissent from the Scripture and Word of God? Or what rebellion is like, as to rebel against the Son of God, and against the will of his eternal Testament? They are disturbers, they say, of Peace and Publick Authority; which is as true, as that the Christians set the City of Rome on fire. What Doctrine did ever attribute so much to Publick Authority of Magistrates, as do the Protestants? or who ever attributed less to Magistrates, or depoted more Dukes, Kings, and Emperours, than the Papists? They that say that the Bishop of Rome is no more but the Bishop of Rome, and ought to wear no Crown, is not by and by a rebel against his King and Magistrates, but rather a maintainer of their Authority; which indeed the Bishop of Rome cannot abide. Briefly, wilt thou see whether be the greater Heretics, the Protestants or the Papists? Let us try it by a measure, and let this measure be the glory only of the Son of God, which cannot fail. Now judge, I beseech thee, whosoever knoweth the Doctrine of them both, whether of these two do ascribe more or less to the Majesty of Christ Jesus our King and Lord; the Protestants which admit none other Head of the Church, nor Justifier of our Souls, nor forgiver of our Sins, nor Advocate to his Father, but him alone, or else the Papists which can abide none of these Articles, but condemn the same for Heresie. Which being so (as they themselves will not deny) now judge, good Reader, who hath set the City of Rome on fire, Nero, or else the Christians.

But to return again to the purpose of our former matter, which was to shew forth the Proclamation of the Bishops, for the abolishing of English Books above rehearsed, as being corrupt and full of Heresie, which notwithstanding we have declared to contain no Heresie, but found and wholesome Doctrine, according to the perfect Word and Scripture of God.

Here now when the Prelats of the Popes side had procured this Edict and Proclamation aforesaid, for the condemnation of all such English Books, printed or unprinted, which made against their advantage, they triumphed not a little, weening they had made a great hand against the Gospel for ever to rise again, and that they had established their Kingdom for ever, as indeed to all mens thinking it might seem no less. For who would have thought, after so streight, so precise, and so solemn a Proclamation, set forth and armed with the Kings terrible Authority; also after the cruel execution of Anne Askew, Lactis, and the rest: Item, After that they had the busie searching moreover, and names taking of many other, of whom some were chased away, some apprehended and laid up divers in present peril, and expectation of their attachment, who would have thought (I say) other-otherwise possible, but that the Gospel must needs have an overthrow? seeing what sure work the Papists here had made, in stringing up their side, and throwing down the contrary.

Gods power But it is no new thing with the Lord, to shew his power against mans presumption, who when he counteth himself most sure, then is he furthest off, and when he supposeth to have done all, then is he new to begin again. So was it in the Primitive Church before Constantinus time, that when Nero, Domitianus, Marcianus, Decius, and other Emperours impugning the Gospel and profession of Christ, did not only constitute Laws and Proclamations against the Christians, but also did ingrave the same Laws in Tables of Brass, minding to make all things firm for ever and a day; yet we see how with a little turning of Gods hand, all their puissant devils, and brazen Laws turned all to wind and dust. So little doth it avail for man to wrestle against the Lord and his proceedings. Howsoever mans building is mortal and ruinous, of brittle brick, and mouldring stones; yet that which the Lord taketh in hand to build, neither can time waste, nor man pluck down. What God setteth up, there is neither power nor striving to the contrary. What he intendeth, standeth; what he blesteth that prevaileth. And yet mans unquiet presumption will not cease still to erect up Towers of Babel against the Lord, which the higher they are builded up, fall with the greater ruine. For what can stand, that standeth not with the Lord? Which thing as in example of all ages is to be seen; so in this late Proclamation devised by the Bishops, is in like manner exemplified.

Towers of Babel The which Proclamation, thought it was fore and terrible for the time, yet not long after, by reason of the Kings death (whom the Lord shortly thereupon took to his mercy) it made at length but a Castle come down. So that where the Prelates thought to make their Jubile, it turned them to the Threnes of Jeremy. Such be the admirable workings of the Lord of Hosts, whose Name be sanctified for ever.

Mans device This do I not infer for any other purpose, but only for the works of the Lord to be seen; premonishing thee (good Reader) withal, that as touching the King (who in this Proclamation had nothing but the Name only) here is nothing spoken but to his laud and praise. Who, of his own nature and disposition, was so inclinable and forward in All things virtuous and commendable, that the like enterprise of redress of Religion hath not lightly been seen in any other Prince Christianized. As in abolishing the stout and almost invincible Authority of the Pope, in suppressing Monasteries, in repressing custom of Idolatry and Pilgrimage, &c. Which enterprises as never King of England did accomplish (though some began to attempt them) before him; so yet to this day we see but few in other Realms dare follow the same.

The praise of K. Henry 8.

If Princes have always their Counsel about them, that is but a common thing. If sometimes they have evil Counsel ministered, that I take to be the fault rather of such as are about them, than of Princethemselves. So long as Queen Anne, Thomas Cromwel, Bishop Cranmer, Master Doctor Buts, with such like were about him, and could prevail with him, what Organ of Christs Glory did more good in the Church than he? as is apparent by such Monuments, Instruments, and Acts set forth by him, in setting up the Bible in the Church, in exploding the Pope with his vile Pardons, in removing divers Superstitious Ceremonies, in bringing into order the inordinate Orders of Friars and Sects, in putting Chantry Priests to their pensions, in permitting white meat in Lent, in destroying pilgrimage-worship, in abrogating idle and superstitious holy days, both by Act publick, and also by private Letters sent to Boner tending to this effect.

By the King.

The Kings Letter to Boner. Right Reverend Father in God, right trusty and well beloved, we greet you well. And whereas considering the manifold inconveniences which have ensued, and daily do ensue to our Subjects by the great superfluity of Holy-days, we have by the assents and consents of all you the Bishops and other notable persons of the Clergy of this our Realm, in full congregation and assembly had for that purpose, abrogated and abolished such as be neither Canonical, nor meet to be suffered in a Commonwealth, for the manifold inconveniences which do ensue of the same, as is rehearsed, and to the intent our determination therein may be duly observed and accomplished, we have thought convenient to command you immediately upon the receipt hereof, to address your commandments in our Name to all the Curates, Religious Houses, and Colledges within your Dioceses, with a copy of the Act made for the Abrogation of the holy days aforesaid a transumpt whereof ye shall receive hereunto, commanding them and every of them, in no wise, either in the Church or otherwise, to indite or speak of any of the said days and feasts abolished, whereby the people might take occasion either to murmur, or to contemn the order taken therein, and to continue in their accustomed idleness, the same notwithstanding; but to pass over the same with such severe silence, as they may have like abrogation by disuse, as they have already by our Authority in Convocation. And forasmuch as the time of harvest now approacheth, our pleasure is ye shall with such diligence and dexterity put this matter in execution, as it may immediately take place for the benefit of our Subjects at this time accordingly without failing, as ye will answer unto us for the contrary.

Given under our Signet, at our Monastery of Chertsey, the eleventh day of August.

Thus while good Counsel was about him, and could be heard, he did much good. So again when sinister and wicked Counsel under subtil and crafty pretences had gotten once the foot in, thrusting truth and verity out of the Princes ears, how much Religion and all good things went prosperously forward before, so much of the contrary side all revolved backward again. Whereupon proceeded this Proclamation above mentioned, concerning the abolishing and burning of English Books.

K. Henry according as his Counsel was advised him, so was he led.

Which Proclamation bearing the Name of the Kings Majesty, but being the very deed of the Popish Bishops, no doubt had done much hurt in the Church among the Godly sort, bringing them either into great danger, or else keeping them in much blindness, had not the thornes of the Kings days stopped the malignant purposes of the foresaid Prelates, calling the King to leave that by death unto the people, which by his life he would not grant. For within four Months after, the Proclamation coming out in August, he deceased in the beginning of January, in the eight and thirtieth year of his Reign, Anno 1547, leaving behind him three Children, who succeeded him in his Kingdom, King Edward, Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth; of whom it remaineth now to prosecute (by the permission and suffrance of Christ our high Lord and Prince) in the process of this history, according as the order of their succession, and Acts done by them in the Church shall require: after that first I shall have prosecuted certain other matters by the way, according to my promise here to be inserted.

To proceed therefore in the History of these Scottish matters, next after the mention of Descent Spation and Mister Nisbet a Gurdy, with whom we engaged before, the order of time would require next to infer the memory of Sir John Borthwicke, Knight, commonly called Captain Borthwicke. Who being accused of Heresie, as the Papists call it, and cited therefore, Anno 1540. and not appearing, and cleaving out into other Countries, was condemned for the same being absent, by the sentence of Desmond Banton, Archbishop of Saint Andrews, and other Prelates in Scotland, and all his goods confiscated, and his Picture at last burned in the open market place. Whose story, with his Articles objected against him, and his confutations of the same, here ensue in Process under expressed as followeth.

The Act or Process or certain Articles against Sir John Borthwicke, Knight, in Scotland, with his answer and confutation of the said Borthwicke; whose Preface to the Reader here followeth.

BY the help of a certain friend of mine there came certain Articles unto my hand, for the which the Scottish Cardinal, and such other like of his Sect and Affinity did censure me as an Heretick. And forasmuch as this condemnation should not lack his Cloak or defence, they gathered together a great number of witnesses, where as besides the bare Names of the witnesses they alledged none other proof at all. Wherefore I thought good to borrow some labour in refelling those Articles which they could not prove, partly that I might take away from all true Christians the occasion of all evil suspicion, as though that I being vanquished or overthrown by their threatenings would deny Christ; and partly that their errors being thereby made manifest, they would even for very shame repent, or else hereafter the Lord abuse the favor or modesty of such witnesses to shed blood. Therefore I will add confirm by evident testimonies of the Scriptures those things which in times past I have taught, and afterward I will refell their vain sophistication, whereby they go about to subvert the truth of God.

Sir John Borthwicke Knight, commonly called Captain Borthwicke, being accused, suspected, slandered, and convicted by witnesses, without all doubt of greater estimation than he himself, in the year of our Lord, 1540. the eight and twentieth day of May, in the Cloister of Saint Andrews in the presence of the most reverend Fathers, Gavinne Archbishop of Glasgow, Chancellor of Scotland, William Bishop of Aberdeen, Henry of Candiac, a, John Bishop of Brecknock, and William of Dunbar Bishop, Andrew of Melrose, George of Dumerveling, John of Passet, John of Londro, Robert of Rillo, and William of Rullo Abbots, Margaret of Quarnerne and John of Pennan Priors, Maister Alexander Kalster Vicar of Ryman, Reclor of Law, official of Saint Andrews, John Winton Subprior, John Anand and Thomas Emmingham, Canons of Saint Andrews, and Maister John Mayer and Peter Capel and Batchelours of Divinity and Doctors, Marin Ballfour Bachelor of Divinity, and of his fellow Priors of the Friers Agustinians of the same City, John Tulidaffe, Warden of the Friers Minors, and John Patterson of the same Covent; and also in the presence of the most noble, mighty and honourable Lords, George of Hume, James of Arrois, William Marshall, William of Montros, Earle, Malcolm Lord of Flemming, Chamberlain of Scotland, John Lord of Linsey, John Lord of Erskine, George Lord of Seroun, James Hamelton of Ermarie, Walter Lord of Saint John, Maister James of Culatten Clerk to the Kings Register, with divers other Lords, Barons, and honest persons, being called and gathered together for witnesses, that he did hold, publish and teach these errors following.

The first Article.

That can only Enter the Pope, as Christs Vicar hath, and no other can exercise greater Authority over Christens than he, than any other Bishop or Prelate.

Borthwicke.

That holy ones do magnifie their Lord by like title as common Thieves and Robbers are accustomed to prefer the Captains and Ringleaders of their Robberies and Villenies, calling them in every place the most honest and good men, whereas likewise it is evident that in the whole World there is no man more given to riot, which more greedily doth seek after all kind of delicateness and wantonness, and finally aboundeth with all kind of vice, as Treason, Murder, Rapine, and all kind of such evils. Furthermore, whereas they affirm him to be the Vicar of Christ here in Earth, it shall be easily convinced, when as it shall be made manifest, that he neither hath nor can exercise more Power or Authority over Christians than any other Bishop or Prelate. For unto that Office of being Vicar they refer that great Authority the which they do so greatly boast and brag of, which being taken away, the Office of Vicar doth also fall and decay. But now to attempt the matter, I will first demand of the maintainers of their prebeminency and Authority, whereupon they will ground the same? know that they will answer unto me that Peter had power and Authority over the other Apostles, and consequently over the Universal Church, the which power by succession is translated unto the Bishops of Rome. But how unflatteringly do they lye herein, any may easily perceive which hath but any small spark of judgment in him, when as he shall hear the Testimonies of the Scriptures, which we will alledge to confirm this opinion. For Peter, in the fifteenth of the Acts, in the Council doth declare what is to be done, and admonisheth us what of necessity we ought to do. And he there did also hear other speak, and did not only give them place to say their minds, but also permit and receive their judgment; and whereas as they decreed, he followed and obeyed the same. Is this then to have power over others? Furthermore, whereas in his first Epistle he writeth unto Bishops and Pastors, he doth not command them as a Superiour or head over them, by Power and Authority, but maketh them his fellow companions, and gently exhorteth them as is accustomed to be done between equals of degree; for these are his words: I beseech and desire the Bishops and Pastors which are amongst you, for so much as I myself am also a Bishop, and a witness of the afflictions of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed, that they diligently feed the Flock of Christ, which is committed unto them. Why then do they so challenge unto them the authority of Peter, which he never acknowledged in himself? Truly I do not doubt, but if that Peter were here present, he would with like severity rebuke their folly and madness, as Moses in times past did unto Josua, which burned with too earnest a zeal towards him. I doubt not but that many in this rained Authority of Peter do seek out more vain helps to maintain and uphold the Tyranny of Popes, rather than to make him ruler and governor over all other. For whereas in the eight Chapter of the Acts he is commanded by his fellows to go with John unto Samarina, he did not refuse so to do. Inasmuch then as the Apostles do send him, they declare thereby, that they do not count him as their Head and Superiour, and in that he doth obey them, and taketh upon him the Office or Ministry committed unto him, he confesseth thereby that sauley with the Apostles, but no rule over the Apostles.

vour and Grace among the Gentiles, than Peter had amongst the Jews; and finally, when as Peter did not faithfully execute his Office and Ministry, he was by him rebuked, and Peter became obedient to his correction. All these things do evidently prove, that there was equality between Paul and Peter, and also that Peter had no more power over the residue of the Apostles, than he had over Paul. The which thing S. Paul even of purpose doth intreat of, lest that any man should prefer Peter or John before him in the Office of Apostleship, which were but his Companions, and not Lords over one another: whereupon these places of Scripture work this effect, that I cannot acknowledge Peter to be Superior or Head over other Apostles, neither the Pope over other Bishops. But I acknowledge and confess Christ to be the only Head of the Church, the Foundation and high Priest thereof, the which with one Oblation hath made perfect for evermore all those which are sanctified. And I boldly do affirm and say with Saint Gregory, that whosoever calleth himself, or desireth to be named or called the Head or Universal Priest or Bishop, in that his pride he is the forerider or predecessor of Antichrist; forasmuch as through his pride he doth exalt himself above all others. Furthermore, whereas they alledge out of the old Law, the high Priesthood and the Supreme Judgment, which God did institute and ordain at Jerusalem; I answer thereunto, that Christ was that high Bishop, unto whom the right and title of Priesthood is now transported and referred. Neither is there any man so impudent, which will take upon him to succeed in the place or degree of his Honour; forasmuch as this Priesthood doth not consist only in learning, but in the propitiation and mercy of God, which Christ hath fulfilled by his Death, and in the Intercession, by the which he doth now intreat for us unto his Father.

multitude it self, whereof he took his Name. Besides this, the Church should be stayed; or builded upon over weak a foundation, if it should have Peter for the ground or Foundation thereof, who being amazed and overcome with the words of a little wench, did so instantly deny Christ. Now therefore I think there is no man but he doth understand how these Romish builders do wrest the Scriptures hither and thither, and like unto the rule or square, do apply them according to their wills, to what end and use they themselves think good. Furthermore in that they do alledge out of the twentieth Chapter of John, Feed my Sheep; it is an overchildish Argument; for to Feed is not to bear rule and Dominion over the whole Church. Besides all this, as Peter had received Commandment of the Lord, so doth he exhort all other Bishops to feed their Flock in his first Epistle and fifth Chapter. Hereby a man may gather by these words of Christ, that either there was no Authority given unto Peter more than unto others, or else that Peter did equally communicate that Right and Authority, which he had received, unto others, and did not reserve it unto himself after his death, to be transported unto the Bishops of Rome. As for such Reasons as they do alledge which are not gathered and taken out of holy Scriptures, I pass them over, lest I might seem to contend with shadows.

The second Article.

That Indulgences and Pardons; granted by our Supreme Head the Pope, are of no force, strength, or effect; but tend only to the abuse of the people and the deceiving of their Souls.

Borthwike.

It shall be evidently declared, that Indulgences and Pardons are of none effect, after that I have first of all taught what they do call Indulgences or Pardons. They say, they are the Treasure of the Church, that is to say, the merits of Christ, of the Saints, Apostles and Martyrs, which they impudently affirm to have performed and merited more at Gods hand, at the time of their death, than was necessary or needful for them; and that of the abundance of their merits there did so much superabound, which was not only sufficient for themselves, but also might redound to the help of others: And because so great a goodness should not be superfluous or in vain, they affirm and teach that their Blood was mixed and joynt with the Blood of Christ; and of them both the Treasure of the Church was compound and made for the remission and satisfaction of Sins. How cunning and notable Cooks these are, which can make a confection of so many sundry herbs. Furthermore, they do faine the custody and keeping of this Treasure to be committed wholly to the Bishop of Rome, in whose power consisteth the dispensation of so great Treasures, that either by himself he may give or grant, or otherwise give power unto other to give the same. And hereupon rise the plenary Indulgences and Pardons granted by the Pope for certain years, by Cardinals for an hundred days, by Bishops for forty days. This is the judgment and opinion which they hold of the Indulgences. But I pray you, who taught those Saints to work or deserve for other, but only Satan, who would utterly have the merits of Christ extinguished and blotted out, which he knoweth to be the only remedy of Salvation? For if the Scripture doth teach us that no man of himself can deserve or work their Salvation, how did the Saints then work or merit for others? It is manifest that Christ faith in the seveneenth of Luke, When ye have done all that which is com- No man of himself can manded you to do, yet, faith he, ye are unprofitable work his servants. Besides this, all that which may be deserved or merited in the righteousness of man, in the threefoore and fourth Chapter of Esaie, is compared unto the Garment menstruous and defiled, to be cast out.

There are almost infinite places in the Scripture, wherein mans power is so extenuate, and the corruption and frowardness of our nature so made manifest, that even in the best and most perfect works there lacketh not imperfection. Notwithstanding the parable of the ten Vir-

Augustine.

Whereas also they do alledge out of the 16. Chapter of Matthew, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock, &c. If they do think that this was particularly spoken unto Peter, Saint Ciprian, and Saint Augustine shall sufficiently answer them, that Christ did it not for this purpose, to prefer one man above all the residue, but that thereby he might commend and set forth the Unity of the Church, for so faith S. Ciprian, In the person of one man God gave unto them all the Keyes, that he might thereby signify the Unity of them all. For even as Peter was, even the very same were all the residue, being indued with like fellowship of honor and dignity. But it was convenient that it should take his original of one, that the Church of God might be manifested to be one only. Saint Augustine words are these, If the mystery of the Church were not in Peter, the Lord would not have said unto him, I will give unto thee the Keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven. If this were spoken unto Peter, the Church hath them not. If the Church have them, then Peter when he received the Keyes, did figure the whole Church. Again, when as they were all demanded and asked, only Peter answered, Thou art Christ. Then was it said unto him, I will give unto thee the Keyes, as though that he alone had received the power of binding and loosing; for like as he alone spake that for them all, so he, as it were, bearing the person of that Unity, received the same with them all. Therefore for them all, because he is united unto them all; Another one Argument they do gather upon the words which Christ spake unto Peter, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. The which words are not found to be spoken unto any other of the Apostles. The which Argument shall easily be dissolved, if we did understand and know why Christ did give Peter that Name, which otherwise was called Simon. In the first Chapter of Saint John, Christ speaketh thus unto him, Thou shalt be called Cephas. The which by interpretation signifieth Peter, in that point having respect unto the constant confession of Christ, which he had made, like as God changed the Name of Abraham, who at first was called Abram, because he should be a Father of many Nations: then even as Abraham took his Name of the multitude, which should come forth of his seed, so likewise Peter took his Name of the constant confession of Christ, which indeed is the true Rock whereupon the Church is builded, and not Peter himself; no otherwile than Abraham, which was not the

The Parable, the Virgin, and the Church, as is noted.

Virgins, written in the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew, ought to put us out of all controversie and doubt: There Christ describeth two kinds of men, the one kind of holy men which observe and keep the inward righteousness of the heart, as the oil of faith; the other sort is of such which having no mind of their oil, are answered by them which are wise, No, lest that there be not sufficient for you and for us, but go you rather to them which do sell, and buy for your selves: In the which place it is manifestly declared how vainly the second sort of men do flie to the patronage of the Elect, by whose merits they think to be saved.

Now let us weigh and consider upon what places of Scripture they build or establish their feigned invention of Pardons; they alledge the saying of S. Paul to the Colossians, I supply or fulfill the afflictions of Christ, which were wanting in my flesh, for his Body which is the Church. But Paul in this place doth not refer that defect or supplement to any work of Redemption, Expiation, or Satisfaction, but to those Afflictions, by the which the Members of Christ, that is to say, all faithful should be afflicted, so long as they live in the flesh; wherefore he saith, that this doth yet remain of the Passions of Christ, that those Afflictions which once he suffered in his own Body, he now daily suffereth in his Members. For Christ hath vouchsafed to honour us with this honour, that he doth impute, and call our Afflictions to be his. And whereas S. Paul doth add this word for the Church, he doth not understand thereby for their Redemption, Reconciliation, Satisfaction, or Expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and the profiting of the same, as in the second Epistle to Timothy, he saith, That for the Elect sake he suffered all these things that they might obtain salvation. But to the intent no man should think that Salvation to depend upon those things which he himself had suffered, he added further, The which is in Christ. As touching the reason that the Blood of the Martyrs is not shed in vain without fruit or profit, and their fore ought to be conferred to the common utility and profit of the Church; I answer that the profit and fruit thereof is abundant to glorifie God by their death, to subscribe and bear witness unto the truth by their blood, and by the contempt of this present life to witness, that he doth seek after a better life by his constancy and steadfastness, to confirm and establish the faith of the Church, and subdue and vanquish the Enemy.

The third Article.

That the Pope is an open user of Simony, daily selling the gifts of the spiritualities, and that it is lawful for all Bishops to be coupled and joined in Matrimony.

Borthwicke.

This Article hath his several parts, for those things which we have spoken or answered unto the Article before-written; do sufficiently declare, that the Pope is not only a user of Simony, but also a notable Deceiver, which selleth such kind of Merchandise as can in no place help or prevail; forso much as his Pardons are nothing less than such as he feigneth them to be. Doth he not then shew himself a manifest Deceiver, when as he maketh Fairs and Markets of them? But to the intent I will not seem in this behalf vainly to labour or travel, I will pass unto the second part, whereas I do say, that it is not only done against the Word of God, but also against Equity and Justice, to forbid Priests to marry, forso much as it is not lawful for any man by any means to forbid that thing which the Lord hath left at liberty. For S. Paul, in the Thirteenth Chapter unto the Hebrews, declareth that Matrimony is lawful for all men, saying, That Marriage and the undefiled Bed, or Chamber, is honourable amongst all men. And in the first to the Corinthians, and seventh Chapter, he saith, For avoiding of whoredom, let every man have a wife of his own. But I know what their oblique and stiff-necked will answer unto me, That the same is spoken and meant of others, and not of Priests. But what will they answer unto me, as touching that which is written in the first to Timothy, and third Chapter, A Bishop ought to be without rebuke, Priests marriage, is lawful.

the Husband of one Wife: and by and by after he saith, Deacons ought to be the Husbands of one Wife, the which should rule and govern their Children and Family uprightly? Unto these Paul affirmeth Matrimony to be meet and necessary, let them say what they can to the contrary. What could be more vehemently spoken against their wicked tyranny, than that which by the Holy Ghost he declareth in the fourth Chapter of the same Epistle, That in the latter days there should come wicked men which should forbid Matrimony, and callest them not only deceivers, but also wicked spirits, attending unto the Doctrine of wicked spirits; but these men think that they have very well escaped, when as they wrest this Sentence to those old ancient Hereticks the Tasians; They (say these men) did condemn Matrimony, we do not condemn it, but only forbid Church-men to marry, unto whom we think Matrimony is not convenient. As though that albeit this Prophecy were first of all complete and fulfilled in the Tasians, that it did not also redound unto them; or as though this their subtil sophistification were worthy to be regarded, that they do not deny or prohibit Matrimony, because they do not forbid it unto all men generally. Like as if a Tyrant would contend and affirm his Law to be good, by the extremity and violence whereof only one part of the City is oppressed. But now let us hear the Reasons of the contrary part: It becometh, say they, a Priest to differ from the common sort of the people by some notable mark or token. But read S. Paul, whereas he describeth the perfect Image of a good Bishop, did he not reckon and account Marriage amongst the other good gifts which he required to be in them? But I know very well how these men interpret Paul. Verily that a Bishop ought not to be chosen, which hath married his second Wife. But also it appeareth openly by the Text, that this interpretation is false, forso much as he doth by and by declare and shew what manner of women the Wives of Bishops and Deacons ought for to be. Wherefore S. Paul numbeth Matrimony amongst the principal vertues pertaining unto a Bishop. And these men do teach it to be an intolerable vice amongst the Orders of the Church, and not being content with that general reproach or slander, they call it in the Canons, the uncleanness, polluting, and defiling of the flesh. Now let every man consider with himself out of what Shop this stuff is taken. God instituted Matrimony, Christ sanctified it with his presence, by turning water into wine, and vouchsafed so to honour it, that he would have it the Image or Figure of his love and friendship with the Church: What can be more famous or notably spoken to the commendation and praise of Wedlock? But these unshamefast faces do call it a filthy and unclean thing, alledging the Levitical Priests, which, as often as they came unto the Office of Ministration, were bound to lye apart from their Wives, whereby they being clean and undefiled, might handle the holy things: and our Sacraments, forso much as they are much more noble and excellent than theirs, and daily used, it would be a very uncomely thing that they should be handled by married men. As though that the Office of the Ministry of the Gospel were all one with the Levitical Priesthood. For they, as Figures, did represent Christ, which being Mediator between God and Man, by his singular and absolute purity and cleanness should reconcile the Father unto us, forso much as on no part sinners could exhibit or shew forth any type or form of his Sanctity or Holiness: yet to the intent they might shadow him out with certain similitudes or lineaments they were commanded that whensoever they should come unto the Sanctuary or holy Place, they should purifie themselves above all mens order or fashion: for then did they most near and properly figure Christ which appeared in the Tabernacle as Peace-maker to reconcile the people unto God. This Image or Personage, forso much as our Ecclesiastical Pastors at this day do not take upon them to execute, in vain are they compared unto them. Wherefore the Apostles, without all exception, upon a fire and good ground both pronounce and say, That marriage is honourable amongst all men, and that Whoremongers and Adulterers do abide the judgment of God. Besides all this, the Apostles themselves by their examples do prove that Matrimony is worthy of any Office or Function, be it never so excellent, for S. Paul himself it witness, that they did not only keep their Wives, but also carried them about with them.

That all those Heresies commonly called the Heresies of England, or at the least, the greater or most part of them are to be now presently understood and known by the Englishmen to be of themselves good and just, and to be observed of all Faithful Christians as most true and comfortable unto the Law of God, and that he be persuaded many persons to embrace the said Heresies.

Borthwicke.

Saint John in his eleventh Chapter, declareth how Caiaphas high Bishop of Jerusalem did prophesie that Jesus should dye for the people, which thing he spake being utterly ignorant. The like Image of blindness we have now presently in our luxurious Cardinal of Saint Andrews, and his Adherents, which accused Religion of Heresie, which in the year of our Lord, 1540. was had in estimation in England, at the which time they proclaimed me an Achiereticke, although they esteem the same Religion for most Christian; for what Religion at the time was used in England, the like the whole Realm of Scotland did embrace: in this point only the Englishmen differed from the Scots, that they had cast off the Yoke of Antichrist, the other not. Idols were worshipped of both Nations, the prophaning of the Supper and Baptism was like unto them both, wicked Superstition reigned on both parts, and true worship was deformed and defaced with detestable Hypocrite.

Truly it is most false that they do affirm and say, that I had subscribed unto such kind of Heresies, as though they had been conformable unto the Law of God, when as nothing is more adverse or repugnant thereunto: for even now of late, God of his goodness and mercy had opened my dazling eyes, and had thrown me out of the filthy flow of Idolatry and Superstition, in the which amongst others I have so long time wallowed and trembled. Neither is it any less absurd, that they affirm me to have allured many to embrace the same, except peradventure they do understand that I have oftentimes willed that the Yoke of Antichrist would be shaken and cast off from the Necks of the Scots, as it is from the English men; which thing with sincere and upright heart, and with an earnest mind I do now also wish and desire.

The fifth Article.

That the Scottish Nation and their Clergy be altogether blinded, whom he did also say and affirm that they had not the true Catholick Faith. And this he did openly teach and preached also, that his Faith was much better and more excellent, than the Faith of all the Clergy in the Realm of Scotland.

Borthwicke.

No man will deny that people to be blinded which neither heareth Christ nor his Apostles. Such is the people of Scotland, I speak of those unto whom the verity and truth of Christ hath not yet opened or manifested itself. There is no cause therefore why they should accuse me of Heresie. Furthermore, how far off the Nation and the people of Scotland be from the hearing of Christ, albeit the premises do sufficiently declare, in that they do challenge unto the Romish Antichrist the Authority which Christ and his Apostles do declare Christ himself to be ended withal, and that contrary to the word of God they forbid Priests to marry; I will add something more unto it, whereby the matter may be more evident. Christ calleth himself the door whereby all men ought to enter in, the tenth Chapter of John. Contrariwise, the Scots do say and affirm, that we must enter in by the Virgin Mary and Saint Peter. Christ in the fourth of John saith, The time shall come when as the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and Truth the Scots build themselves high Temples and Chappels for Idols, in the which, even as Israel in times past, they commit fornication. Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews, and tenth Chapter, saith, That Christ by one only Oblation hath made perfect all those for evermore, which are sanctified: which saying confirmeth also the words of Christs hanging upon the Crose, saying, It is finished; signifying that by his death there was a final end set to all Sacrifices, which are offered up for Sins. But the Scottish Churchmen, as they are Blasphemers indeed, do they brag and boast that they daily offer up Christ for the Sins both of the quick, and of the dead. God commandeth us that we shall not worship any Image; the Scots do not only fall down flat before Images, but also offer up Incense unto them. Saint Paul teacheth us that Christ is made our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; the Scots, being wise men in their own conceits, prefer and embrace Traditions feigned and invented out by mans head before the Law of God, they stablish righteousness in their own works, sanctification in holy Water and other external things, redemption in pieces of lead, which they do buy of their great Antichrist. Who then will quarrel with me, that I do lye that the people of Scotland are blind? and that my Faith, which doth only behold the Word of God, is much more better and excellent than theirs?

The 6. Article.

Agreeable to the ancient Errors of John Wickliff and John Hus Arch-Heresicks condemned in the Council of Constance, he hath affirmed and preached, That the Clergy ought not to possess or have any Temporal possessions, neither to have any Jurisdiction or Authority in Temporallities, even over their own Subjects, but that all these things ought to be taken from them, as it is at this present in England.

Borthwicke.

The Lord in the eighteenth Chapter of the Book of Numbers said thus unto Aaron, Thou shalt possess nothing in their Land, neither shalt thou have any portion amongst them, I am thy Portion and Inheritance amongst the Children of Israel: for unto the Sons of Levi I have given all the Tithes of Israel, that they should possess them for their Ministry which they do execute in the Tabernacle of the Congregation. Albeit I do not doubt, but that the Order of the Levites and of the Clergy is far different and variable. For the Administration of their sacred and holy things, after their death, passed unto their Posterity as it were by right of Inheritance, which happeneth not unto the Posterity of our Clergy in these days. Furthermore, if any heritage be provided or gotten for them, I do not gainsay but that they shall possess it. But still I do affirm, That all Temporal Jurisdiction should be taken from them. For when as twice there rose a contention amongst the Disciples, which of them should be thought the greatest, Christ answered; The Kings of Nations have Dominion over them, and such which have power over them are called beneficial: you shall not do so; for he which is greatest amongst you shall be made equal unto the youngest or least, and he which is the Prince or Ruler amongst you shall be made equal unto him that doth minister. Minding thereby, and willing utterly to debar the Ministers of his Word from all terrene and civil Dominion and Empire. For by these points he doth not only declare that the Office of a Pastor is distinct and divided from the Office of a Prince and Ruler, but that they are in effect so much different and separate, that they cannot agree or joyn together in one man. Neither is it to be thought that Christ did set or ordain a harder Law then he himself before did take upon him. Forasmuch as in the twelfth of Luke certain of the company said unto him, Master command my Brother that he divide his Inheritance with me. He answered; Man, who made me a Judge or Divider amongst you? We see therefore that Christ even simply did reject and refuse the Office of a Judge, the which thing he would not have done if it had been agreeable unto his Office or Duty. The like thing also he did in the 8th Chapter

The Levitical Law is no necessary rule now binding. But he meaneth here of ecclesiastical possessions of Abbeyes, and Religious Houses added to them, but the Princes may diminish or convert them otherwise upon considerations. Civil Dominion differeth from Ecclesiastical.

John, when as he refused to give Judgment to the Woman taken in Adultery, which was brought before him. Whereas they do allege that Moses did supply both Offices at once, I answer, that it was done by a rare miracle. Furthermore, that it continued but for a time until things were brought unto a better state. Besides that, there was a certain firm and rule prescribed him of the Lord, then took he upon him the Civil governance, and the Priesthood he was commanded to resign unto his Brother; and that not without good cause, for it is against nature, that one man should justice both charges: wherefore it was diligently foreseen and provided for in all ages. Neither was there any Bishop, so long as any true face or shew of the Church did continue, who once thought to usurp the right and title of the Sword. Whereupon in the time of Saint Ambrose this proverb took his Original, That Emperors did rather wish or desire the Office of Priesthood, than Priests any Empire. For it was all mens Opinions at that time, that sumptuous Palaces did pertain unto Emperors, and Churches unto Priests. Saint Bernard also writeth many things which are agreeable unto this our Opinion; as is this his saying, Peter could not give that which he had not, but he gave unto his Successors that which he had, that is to say, carefulness over the Congregation; for when as the Lord and Master faith, That he is not constitute or ordained Judge between two, the Servant or Disciple ought not to take it scornfully if that he may not judge all men. And left that he might seem in that place to speak of the Spiritual Judgment, he straightway annexeth, Therefore, faith he, your Power and Authority shall be in offence and transgression, not in possessions. For this purpose, and not for the other, have you received the Keyes of the Kingdom of Heaven. Why then do you invade other mens bounds or borders? The rest I pass over for brevities sake.

Falsely, and against the honour, estate, and reverence of the sacred Majesty of the King of Scots, he hath said, bolden, and affirmed, that our most noble King of Scots, Defender of the Christian Faith, would appropriate unto himself all the possessions, lands, and rents of the Church, given and granted by his Predecessors, and also by himself, and convert them unto his own private use. And for this end and purpose, as he hath many times written unto him, so hath he with his whole endeavour persuaded our said noble Lord and King thereunto.

It is no marvel though these mad Dogs do so bark against me, whom they think to have counselled the Kings Majesty (I would to God I had also thoroughly persuaded him) that he should take away from these unjust sacrilegious possessors, the riches wherewith all they are fitted and engreased like Swine. For this is the nature of Dogs, if any man go about to take away the bone out of their mouth, by and by to snatch at him and tare him with their teeth. It is out of all controversie unto such as have any wit at all, that such were very childish, that is to say, ignorant of all learning and judgment, which did so fat and feed with their possessions these Belly-beasts. For who would not judge it more then childish, to bestow the Kings Victuals or meat upon the bellies of the Prophets of Baal and Jesabel? But all they which at this present do endure such filthy sinks (I will not call them Dens of Thieves) with such revenues, they do follow the steps of Jesabel; for what other thing do they, when as daily they are bleating and bowing before their Images, burning of Incense, and fall flat down before their Altars, but that which is times past the Prophets of Baal did when as they transported the worship of God unto an Idol? Wherefore if Daniel and Ellas were spotted with Heresie when they would have destroyed the Priests of Baal, grant that I also must be an Heretic.

But forasmuch as then he did nothing but which was commanded him of the Lord, that was able to kill the Prophet which had allured the people to follow strange Gods, he could not truly and justly be accused of Heresie.

He; for neither can my Adversaries spot me therewithal, except peradventure they will condemn in me that (whereas Ellas dealt more rigorously with the Prophets of Baal, for he cast them into the Brook Kidron) I required or desired no more, but that the riches which was wickedly bestowed upon them, and their possessions might be taken from them.

The eighth Article.

He willed and desired, and oftentimes with his whole heart prayed that the Church of Scotland might come and be brought to the same point and state, and to like ruine as the Church of England was already come unto.

Borthwike.

If the Church of Israel decayed, when as in the time of Zorobabel, Nehemias, and other holy men, it was released and set at liberty out of Babylon; I grant also, that it was ruine unto the English men, to have departed and gone away out of Babylon, the Mother of all Whoredoms, upon whose rotten and filthy paps and breasts they have a long time depended and hanged, being made drunk with the Wine of her Whoredom and unchastity. They had rather cause to give me thanks, who with so sincere and good a heart wished unto them so happy a fall. But these unthankful persons thought it not enough with slander and reproach to tear me under, but now also, as blind rage and madness hath taken away all sincerity and uprightness of mind and judgment, they lye in wait, and lay snares for my life.

The ninth Article.

He hath openly bolden, said, and affirmed, preached, and taught, that the Laws of the Church, that is to say, the sacred Canons, approved and allowed by the holy Catholic and Apostolick Church, are of no force, strength, or effect; alledging therefore and affirming, that they are made and invented contrary to the Law of God.

Borthwike.

God forbid that I should say, that those things which are approved by the holy Catholic Church should be of no effect or value. For well I know, that the holy Apostolick Church hath never allowed, ordained, or taught any thing which she hath not learned of the Lord: the Apostles are witnesses thereof, Peter and Paul, whereof the one of them dareth not freely utter or speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by himself for the obedience of the Gentiles.

The other exhorteth, That if any man speak, he should speak the praises of God: but I condemn those Laws which the Bishops of Rome had made according to their own will and mind, and say that they are spiritual, pertaining unto the Salvation of the Soul, and necessary unto everlasting life, so much as the writings of the Apostles do evidently declare, that there was no Authority known amongst them to make or ordain any Ordinances or Laws.

Furthermore, the Scriptures do manifestly shew the same, how oftentimes, even by the Lords own mouth this foresaid Authority is taken from the Ministers of the Church, so that no excuse for them remaineth, but that they be plain Rebels against the Word of God, how many follow do presume or take upon them to appoint or set any new Laws upon the people of God. Which thing is more manifest and evident than the light it self, in many places of the Scripture. For in the three and twentieth Chapter of Jeshaiah, it is written; You shall observe and do all that is written in the Law of Moses, neither shall you swerve from that, either to the right hand or to the left hand. But that which is written in the twelfth Chapter of Duteronomy ought to move them somewhat the more.

Whatsoever I command, faith the Lord, that shall ye observe and do; thereunto you shall add nothing, neither shall you take any thing from it. The like he had said before in the fourth Chapter of the same Book. And again, Moses in the thirteenth Chapter of the same Book doth witness, that he did put forth life and blessing unto Israel, when as he gave them that Law which he had received of the Lord. How can they then excuse themselves of Perjury, which ordain new Laws to live by; But let us proceed further, and see what Authority the Priests of Levi's stock had to make Laws. I do not deny, but that God, in the seventeenth Chapter of Deuteronomy, ordained under a great penalty, that the Authority of the Priests should not be contemned, but had in Reverence. But in the second of Malachy he also declareth under what condition they are to be heard, whereas he saith, He hath made a Covenant with Levi, that the Law of truth should be in his mouth; and by and by after he addeth, The lips of the Priest shall keep and maintain wisdom, and the Law they shall require at his mouth, which is the Messenger of the Lord of Hosts. Therefore it is fit and necessary, if a Priest will be heard, that he doth hear himself the Messenger of God, that is to say, that he faithfully report and declare the commandments which he hath received of the Lord. For whereas Malachy speaketh of hearing of them, he putteth this specially, that they do answer according to the Law of the Lord. Therefore like as the Levitical Priests did break their Covenant made with God, if they did teach any other Law than that which they had received of him; so likewise these men must either acknowledge themselves to be Covenant-Breakers, or else they may not bind the Consciences of men with any new Law.

Furthermore, what Power the Prophets had universally, it is very lively described in Ezekiel, in his 33. Chapter.

Thou Son of Man, saith the Lord, I have made thee a guide unto the House of Israel, thou shalt hear the Word out of mine own mouth, and declare it unto them from me. He then which is commanded to hear of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbidden to rehearse or speak any thing of himself? For what other thing is it to speak from the Lord, but so to speak that he may boldly affirm and say, that it is not his word, but the Word of the Lord which he speaketh?

Further, God by his Prophet Jeremy calleth it chaff, whatsoever doth not proceed from himself. Wherefore none of the Prophets have opened their mouths at any time to speak, but being premonished before the Word of God. Whereupon it happeneth, that these words are so often pronounced by them, The Word of the Lord; the charge or burthen of the Lord; the Vision of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord; the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

Now that we may also confirm that which is before spoken, by the examples of the Apostles, that they have taught nothing but that which they have learned of the Lord, the Law which Christ prescribed unto them, when as he inducted them with the dignity and honour of the Apostleship, is somewhat more profoundly to be repeated. In the last Chapter of Matthew, he commandeth them to go forth and teach, not such things as they themselves did rashly invent and devise, but those things which he had commanded them.

Furthermore, Paul in the second to the Corinthians, denieth that he hath any dominion or rule over the Faith of the Corinthians, albeit he was ordained by the Lord to be their Apostle. If you require and desire a further reason of the moderation of Saint Paul, read the tenth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, whereas he teacheth, That Faith cometh by hearing, it cometh not by the Dreams of the Bishop of Rome, or by any other Bishop, but only by the Word of God; neither ought any man to think it strange, that neither Christ restrained his Apostles by the Law, that they should not teach any thing but that which they had learned of the mouth of the Lord. He set the same Law upon himself, because it should not be lawful for any man to refuse it.

My Doctrine saith Christ is not mine, but his which sent me, my Fathers; he which hath been the only and eternal Counsellour of the Father, which also is ordained by the Father, the Lord and Master over all, for so much as yet he doth the Office and part of a Minister, he doth by his example prescribe unto all Ministers, what rule and order they ought to follow in teaching; wherefore the Power of the Church is not such, that it may at her own will and discretion teach new Doctrines, either, as they term it, frame new Articles of Faith, either establish new Laws, but is subject unto the Word of the Lord, and as it were included in the same. But now let us behold what defence they do bring for their Constitutions. The Apostles, say they, and the Elders of the Primitive Church, established a Decree, besides the commandment of Christ, whereby they did command all people to abstain from all things offered unto Idols, Suffocation, and Blood. If that were lawful for them to do, why is it not lawful for their Successors, as often as necessity shall require, to imitate and to follow them in doing the like?

But I deny that the Apostles in that behalf did make any new Decree or Ordinance, so much as Peter in the same Council pronounceth God to be tempted, if any yoke be laid upon the necks of the Disciples: Even he himself doth subvert and overthrow his own Sentence if they consent to lay any yoke upon them. But a yoke is laid upon them if the Apostles by their own Authority do decree to prohibit the Gentiles not to touch any thing offered unto Idols or strangled; but you will say, they do write they should abstain from those things. I grant that they do so write: But what doth Saint James declare? That the Gentiles which are converted unto God are not to be troubled and vexed in such extern Decrees and outward Elements, as these be. And the Apostle sufficiently declareth that he goeth about nothing less then to restrain the liberty of the Gentiles, but only to admonish and warn them how they should moderate and rule themselves among their Brethren, lest they should abuse their liberty to the offence of others.

They alledge furthermore, that which is written in the three and twentieth of Matthew, the Scribes and Pharisees have sitten in the Chair of Moses, therefore all things whatsoever they command you to observe and keep, the same observe and do, but do you not as they do. I answer, the Lord in this place doth inveigh against the manners of the Pharisees, simply instructing his Hearers which before he had taught, that albeit they could perceive or see nothing in their life which they should follow yet for all that they should not refuse to do the things which they did teach by the Word, I say by the Word, and not of their own head.

The tenth Article.

Others and many ways he hath said, bolden, and also affirmed, and openly taught that there is no Religion to be observed or kept, but simply to be abolished and destroyed, as it is now in England; and despising all Religion, affirming that it is but abusing of the People, he hath taught that their habit and vestures are deformed and very monstrous, having in them no manner of utility or holiness, inducing and alluring as much as in him lay, all the adherents of his opinion, that all Religion in the Kingdom of Scotland should be subverted and utterly taken away, to the great offence of the Catholick Church, and the diminishing and detriment of the Christian Religion.

The Prophet Isaiah in his fifth Chapter crieth out, saying, We be unto you which call evil good, and good evil; darkness light, and light darkness, sower sweet, and sweet sower. And it followeth in the same place, in the said Prophet, We, saith he, to you that be wise and sapient in your own eyes and prudent in your own estimation. No man can deny but that the Cardinal of Scotland and his Adherents be under this most heavy and grievous curse, when as they do so generally confound the Christian Religion and their wicked Montery, that they do entitle them both by one name of Holiness. I trust I will make it appear more manifest than the day, that they do it by a sacrilegious audacity or boldness unto such as setting apart all preposterous affection will embrace the truth, when as the doth manifestly shew herself.

But before I enter into the matter, I will all men to understand, that I do not touch that kind of Monkerie, which Saint Augustine and other do so often make mention of; as in which the Monks being gathered together utterly contemning and despising the Vanities of this world, did lead a most chaste and godly life, living in prayers, reading, and disputations, not puffed up with pride, nor contentious with frowardness, neither full of envy, no man possessed any things of his own, no man was chargeable or burdensome unto others, they wrought with their Hands to get that which might sustain the Body, the Spirit and minde not let and hindered from God. Whatsoever did superabound more than was necessary for their sustentation, as by the restraint of their delicious and delicate fare much did redound of the labours of their Hands, it was with such diligence distributed unto the poor and needy, as it was not with greater diligence gotten by them which did give the same.

For they by no means went about to have abundance lying by them, but sought all means possible that nothing should remain by them more than sufficient: besides this, no man was forced to any extremity, which he could not bear or suffer, no man had any thing laid upon him which he refused, neither was he condemned of the rest, which confessed himself unable to imitate or follow; they had always in their mind how commendable a thing love and charity was; they remembered that all things are clean to them which are clean. Therefore they did not refuse or reject any kinds of meat as polluted or defiled; but all their whole industry and labour was applied to subdue lust and concupiscence, and to retain love amongst Brethren. Many of them did drink no Wine, yet notwithstanding they thought not themselves defiled therewithal. For unto such as were sick and diseased, who could not recover the health of their Body without the same, they did most gently permit it. And whereas many foolishly refused the same, they brotherly admonished them to take heed that they became not rather the weaker than the holier, through their vain superstition.

Precepts of men more exactly exacted than the precepts of God.

Hitherto I have repeated that which Saint Augustine writeth of the Monks of his time, whereby I would as it were paint out in a Table, what manner of Monkerie there was in the old time, that all men might understand how great difference there is between that and the Monkerie in these our later days. For he would have all extreme Compulsion to be taken away in such things as by the Word of God are left to us at liberty. But now adays there is nothing more severely and cruelly exacted. For they say it is a remediless offence if any do but never so little swerve from their prescript order in colour or kind of garment, or in any kind of meat, or in any other frivolous or vain ceremony.

Saint Augustine doth straightly affirm that it is not lawful for Monks to live idle upon other mens labour; he plainly denyeth that in his time there was any such example of any well ordered Monastery: but our Monks do constitute the principal part of holiness in idleness, which they call a contemplative life; wherefore the state or Monkerie of the old time, and of these our days, is in all points so divers, that scarce can any thing be more unlike, I will not say utterly contrary; for our Monks not content with that godliness to the study and desire whereof Christ commandeth all his continually to be intentive, they imagine a new kind of godliness, I know not what, by the mediation whereof they are more perfect, than all other. But it is a most pestilent error (which all godly men ought to abhor) to fain any other rule of perfection, than that common rule delivered unto the whole Universal Church, which we suppose to be sufficiently approved in the refutation of the Article before passed. Now I also pass over with silence the great Blasphemy, whereby they compare their Monastical Confession unto Baptism. I also hold my peace that they do dissipate and divide the Communion of the Church, when, as they do separate themselves from the lawful society and fellowship of the faithful, and claim unto themselves a peculiar minitery and private Administration of the Sacraments: but as Saint Augustine witnesseth, it was so far off, that the Monks in times past had any several Church or Administration of the Sacrament from others, as that they were a part and portion of the common people albeit that they dwelt asunder.

But if a man may touch the manner of these our Monks, what shall I call the Cloisters in these our days, otherwise then Brothel Houses, Swine sties, and dens of discord. Besides that, I will pass over their Fairs and Markets, which in these later days they do make of their Reliques of Martyrs, to build up Sodom again. Wherefore I conclude that this their kind of life which they claim unto themselves, is utterly wicked and naughty, the which is not established or grounded upon any certain calling of God, neither allowed by him: wherefore I may be bold to say that it is unlawful, because their Conscience hath nothing whereby to sustain it self before God, and whatsoever is not of Faith is sin.

And furthermore, so long as they do intangle and bind themselves with so many and so perverse and wicked kinds of worshipping, as the Monkerie now adays doth contain in it, I may well say that they are not consecrated unto God, but unto the Devil. For why, was it lawful for the Prophets to say, that the Israelites did offer their Children unto wicked Spirits, and not unto God, because that they did corrupt and violate the true worshipping of God with prophane Ceremonies? Is it not lawful then to speak the like of our Monks, which together with their Cows have put on a thousand snares of most wicked superstitions? Let every man now weigh and consider with himself, if I have done wickedly to with such Religions, as is this our Monkerie, to be utterly extinguished and rooted out. Moreover all Christian Princes should rightly and truly do their office, if as in times past Jehus pulled down and overthrew the High Places which his Elders the Kings of Juda had builded so they would abolish and drive away this kind of Monks.

It is plainly manifest by lawful proofs, that the said John Borthwike had, and presently hath divers Books suspected of Heresie, condemned as well by the Papal, as also Regal and ordinary Authority, and prohibited by the Law: that is to say, specially the New Testament commonly printed in English, Oecolampadius, Melancthon, and divers Treatises of Erasmus and other condemned Hereticks, also a Book intituled Vno dissidentium, the which containeth most manifest and great Errors and Heretical Assumptions, and hath read and studied the same as well openly as privily, and hath presented and communicated them unto others, and also hath instructed and taught many Christians in the same, to the end and purpose to divert and turn them away from the true Christian and Catholick Faith.

Borthwike.

O good God! who can suffer so great a Blasphemy? with what a filthy Cankered Stomack do these Romish Swine note the New Testament with Heresie? who would not judge it a most Venemous Tongue which dare pronounce and utter such contumacious words against the Holy Gospel of our Saviour Christ? Truly these men (howsoever they do pronounce me an Arch-Hereticke) do fill up the measure of all other Hereticks (I will not say Blasphemers) as the Jews which put Christ to death did of all other Murderers. How then shall these Serpents and flock of Vipers escape and flee the judgment of everlasting fire? I do not greatly stand or stay, that they do suspect Oecolampadius, Melancthon, or Erasmus, neither am I so mad to plead their cause, who as they are men of singular learning and eloquence, so do their writings manifestly declare, how falsely and wickedly these hypocrites impute this crime and slander of Heresie unto them.

It is manifest, that the said John Borthwike was so obstinate in all the foresaid Errors and Heresies, and so maintained and taught them with such an obdurate heart and mind, that he would not by any means be persuaded from them by his Friends and divers other persons which did dearly love and favour him, but chose rather obstinately to persevere in his said Errors.

Borthwike.

Borthwike.

I am willingly contented to be reduced to the Catholick Faith, but if that Satan raise up any storms or tempests against that, those I do something resist. Wherefore they most shamefully lye which do otherwise jest or talk of me; for I know not by what reason they call them my Friends which so greatly laboured to convert me, neither will more esteem them, than the Madianites, which in times past called the Children of Israel to do sacrifice unto their Idols. And furthermore, I desire the most high and mighty God, that he will never suffer me to swarve or turn away from this so holy, godly, and Christian obliancy and stubborness. The man is blest that hath set his whole hope and confidence upon the Lord, and hath not regarded or looked upon the proud or those which follow after lies.

The Sentence of Condemnation against Sir John Borthwike Knight, by the Cardinals, Bishops, and Abbots in Scotland, Anno 1540.

OF all which the Premises and many other Errors by him holden, spoken, published, affirmed, preached and taught, the common fame and report is, that the said Sir John Borthwike is holden, reputed, and accounted of very many as an Heretick, and principal Heretick, which holdeth evil Opinions of the Catholick Faith.

Where we David by the Title of St. Stephen in Mount Celia, Prelate and Cardinal of the holy Church of Rome, Archbishop of Saint Andrews, Primate of the whole Kingdom of Scotland, and born Legate of the Apostolick See, sitting after the manner of Judges in our Tribunal Seat, the most holy Gospels of God being laid before us, that our judgment might proceed from the face of God, and our eyes might behold as I look upon equity and justice, having only God and the verity and truth of the Catholick Faith before our eyes, his holy Name being first called upon; having, as is before said, hereupon holden a Council of wise Men, as well Divines as Lawyers, We pronounceth, declare, decree, determine, and give sentence, that the said Sir John Borthwike, called Captain Borthwike, being suspected, infamed, and accused of the Errors and Heresies before said, and wicked Doctrines manifestly condemned, as is aforesaid, and by lawful proofs against him in every of the premises had, being convicted and lawfully cited and called, not appearing, but as a Fugitive, Runaway, and absent, even as though he were present, to be an Heretick, And is, and hath been convicted as an Heretick; And as a convicted Heretick and Heresiarch to be punished and chastened with due punishment, and afterward to be delivered and left unto the Secular Power. Moreover, we confiscate and make forfeit, and by these presents declare and decree to be confiscated and made forfeit all and singular his goods, moveables and unmoveables, howsoever and by whatsoever Title they be gotten, and in what place or part soever they be, and all his Offices whatsoever he hath hitherto had, reserving notwithstanding the Dowry and such part and portion of his goods, as by the Law, Custom and Right of this Realm unto persons confiscate ought to appertain. Also we decree, that the Picture of the said John Borthwike being formed, made, and painted to his likeness, be carried through this our City to our Cathedral Church, and afterward to the Market-Cross of the same City, and there in token of malediction and curse, and to the terror and example of others, and for a perpetual remembrance of his obliancy and condemnation, to be burned. Likewise we declare and decree, that notwithstanding, if the said John Borthwike be hereafter apprehended and taken, he shall suffer such like punishment due by order of Law unto Hereticks, without any hope of grace or mercy to be obtained in that behalf. Also we plainly admonish and warn, by the tenour of these presents, all and singular faithful Christians, both Men and Women, of what dignity, state, degree, order, condition, or preeminence soever they be, or with whatsoever dignity or honour Ecclesiastical or Temporal they be honoured,

Not long after the burning of David Stratton and Mr. Gurlay above mentioned, in the days of David Beaton, Bishop, and Cardinal of Saint Andrews, and George Treicheton Bishop of Dunkelden, a Canon of Saint Colmes Inch, and Vicar of Dolone called Dean Thomas Forret, preached every Sunday to his Parishioners out of the Epistle or Gospel as it fell for the time; which then was a great novelty in Scotland, to see any man preach, except a Black-Frier or a Gray-Frier: and therefore the Friers envied him, and accused him to the Bishop of Dunkelden (in whose Diocese he remained) as an Heretick, and one that shewed the Mysteries of the Scriptures to the Vulgar people in English, to make the Clergy detestable in the sight of the People: The Bishop of Dunkelden, moved by the Friers instigation, called the said Dean Thomas, and said to him, My Joy Dean Thomas, I love you well, and therefore I must give you my counsel, how you shall rule and guide your self. To whom Thomas said, I thank your Lordship heartily. Then the Bishop began his counsel after this manner.

My Joy Dean Thomas, I am informed that you preach the Epistle or Gospel every Sunday to your Parishioners, and that you take not the Cow, nor the uppermost Cloth take as from your Parishioners, which thing is very prejudicial to the Churchmen; and therefore my Joy Dean Thomas, I would you took your Cow and your uppermost Cloth as other Churchmen do, or else it is too much to preach every Sunday; for in so doing you may make the people think that we should preach likewise. But 'tis enough for you, when you find any Good Epistle, or any good Gospel, that setteth forth the liberty of the holy Church, to preach that, and let the rest be.

Thomas answered, My Lord, I think that none of my Parishioners will complain that I take not the Cow, nor the uppermost Cloth, but will gladly give me the same, together with any other thing that they have; and I will give and communicate with them any thing that I have, and so my Lord, we agree right well, and there is no discord among us.

And

And where your Lordship saith, it is too much to preach every Sunday; indeed I think it is too little, and also would wish that your Lordship did the like. Nay, nay, Deane Thomas (saith my Lord) let that be, for we are not ordained to Preach. Then said Thomas, where your Lordship biddeth me preach, when I find any good Epistle, or a good Gospel, truly my Lord, I have read the New Testament and the Old, and all the Epistles and Gospels, and among them all I could never find an evil Epistle, or an evil Gospel; but if your Lordship will shew me the good Epistle, and the good Gospel, and the evil Epistle and the evil Gospel, then I shall preach the good, and omit the evil. Then spake my Lord stoutly and said, I thank God that I never knew what the Old and New Testament was, (and of these words rose a Proverb which is Common in Scotland, Ye are like the Bishop of Dunkeld, that knew neither new nor old Law;) therefore Dean Thomas; I will know nothing but my Portuise and my Pontifical. Go your way, and let be all these Fantasies, for if you persevere in these erroneous opinions, ye will repent it when you may not mend it. Thomas said, I trust my cause be just in the Presence of God; and therefore I pass not much what do follow thereupon, and so my Lord and he departed at that time. And soon after a Summons was directed from the Cardinal of Saint Andrews, and the said Bishop of Dunkeld upon the said Dean Thomas Forret, upon two Black Friars, called Frier John Kelow, and another called Benarage, and upon one Priest of Striveling called Dumcane Symphon, and one Gentleman called Robert Foster in Striveling, with other three or four, with them of the Town of Striveling; who at the day of their appearance after their summoning, were condemned to the death without any place for recantation, because (as was alleged) they were Heresiarchs, or chief Hereticks and Teachers of Heresies, and especially because many of them were at the Bridal and Marriage of a Priest, who was Vicar of Iwubody beside Striveling, and did eat Flesh in Lent at the said Bridal, and so they were all together burnt upon the Castle Hill at Edenborough, where they that were first burnt to the Stake godly and marvellously did comfort them which came behind.

Their Causes.

First, there was a certain Act of Parliament made in the Government of the Lord Hamelton, Earl of Arran, and Governour of Scotland, giving privilege to all Men of the Realm of Scotland, to read the Scriptures in their Mother Tongue and Language, including nevertheless all reasoning, conference, convocation of people to hear the Scriptures read or expounded. Which liberty of private reading being granted by publique Proclamation, lacked not his own fruit, so that in sundry parts of Scotland thereby were opened the eyes of the elect of God to see the truth, and abhor the Papistical Abominations. Amongst the which were certain persons in S. Johnston, as after is declared.

At this time there was a Sermon made by Frier Spense, in Saint Johnston, alias called Perth, affirming Prayer made to Saints to be so necessary, that without it their could be no hope of Salvation to Man. Which Blasphemous Doctrine a Burges of the said Town, called Robert Lambie, could not abide, but accused him in open audience of Erroneous Doctrine, and adjured him in Gods name to utter the truth: The which the Frier, being stricken with fear, promised to do: but the trouble, Tumult, and stir of the people increased so, that the Frier could have no audience, and yet the said Robert, with great danger of his life escaped the Hands of the Multitude, namely of the Women, who contrary to nature addressed them to extreme cruelty against him.

At this time in the year of our Lord, 1543, the Enemies of the truth procured John Charruons, who favoured the truth, and was Provost of the said City and Town of Perth, to be deposed from his Office by the said Governors Authority, and a Papist called Master Alexander Marbeck to be chosen in his Room, that they might bring the more easily their wicked and ungodly enterprise to an end.

After the deposing of the former Provost, and Election of the other, in the Month of January the year aforesaid, on Saint Pauls day, came to Saint Johnston, the Governor, the Cardinal, the Earl of Argyll, Justice Sir John Cambel of Lundie, Knight, and Justice Desfort, the Lord Borwick, the Bishops of Dunblane, and Orkney, with certain other of the Nobility. And although there were many accused for the Crime of Heresie (as they term it) yet these persons only were apprehended upon the said St. Pauls day, Robert Lambie, William Anderson, James Hunter, James Raveleson, James Founleson, and Hellen Stirke his Wife, and were callt that night in the Spay Tower of the said City the morrow after to abide judgement.

Upon the morrow, when they appeared and were brought forth to judgement in the Town, was laid in general to all their charge the violating of the Act of Parliament before exprest, and their conference and assemblies in hearing and expounding of Scripture against the tenor of the said Act. Robert Lambie was accused in special for interrupting of the Frier in the Pulpit; which he not only confessed, but also affirmed constantly, that it was the duty of no man, which understood and knew the truth, to hear the same impugned without contradiction; and therefore sundry which there were present in judgement, who hid the knowledge of the Truth, should bear the burden in Gods presence for consenting to the same.

The said Robert also with William Anderson, and James Raveleson were accused for hanging up the Image of Saint Francis in a cord, nailing of Rams Horns hanging to his head, and a Cowes rump to his tail, and for eating of a goose on Alhallow Even.

James Hunter being a simple man and without learning, and a Fletcher by occupation, so that he could be charged with no great knowledge in Doctrine, yet because he often used that suspect company of the rest, he was accused.

The Woman Hellen Stirke was accused, for that in her Child-bed she was not accustomed to call upon the name of the Virgin Mary, being exhorted thereto by her neighbours, but only upon God for Jesus Christs sake, and because she said in like manner, that if the herself had been in the time of the Virgin Mary, God might have looked to her humility and base estate, as he did to the Virgin, in making her the Mother of Christ, thereby meaning, that there were no merits in the Virgin, which procured her that honour to be made the Mother of Christ, and to be preferred before other Women, but Gods only free mercy exalted her to that estate. Which words were counted most execrable in the face of all the Clergy, and of the whole multitude.

James Raveleson aforesaid, building a Houfe, set upon the round of his fourth flair the three Crowned Diadem of Peter carved of Tree, which the Cardinal took as done in mockage of his Cardinals Hat, and this procured no favour to the said James at their Hands.

These forenamed persons upon the morrow after Saint Pauls day were condemned and judged to death, and that by an Assise, for violating (as was alleged) the Act of Parliament, in reasoning and conferring upon Scriptures, for eating Flesh upon days forbidden,

After Sentence given, their hands were bound, and the men cruelly intreated. Which thing the Woman beholding, desired likewise to be bound by the Sergeants with her Husband for Christ's sake.

There was great intercession made by the Town in the mean season for the life of these persons aforesaid, to the Governour, who of himself was willing so to have done, that they might have been delivered. But the Governour was so subject to the appetite of the cruel Priests, that he could not do that which he would. Yea, they menaced to afflict his Enemies and to depose him, except he assuaged their cruelty.

There were certain Priests in the City, who did eat and drink before in these honest mens Houses, to whom the Priests were much bounden. These Priests were earnestly desired to intreat for their Hostels at the Cardinals hands: but they altogether refused, desiring rather their death, than preservation. So cruel are these Beasts from the lowest to the highest.

Then after, they were carried by a great band of Armed men (for they feared Rebellion in the Town except they had their Men of War) to the place of Execution, which was common to all Thieves, and that to make their cause appear more odious to the People.

Robert Lambe at the Gallows-foot made his Exhortation to the People, desiring them to fear God, and leave the Leaven of Papistical abominations, and manifestly there prophesied of the ruine and plague which came upon the Cardinal thereafter. So every one comforting another, and assuring themselves that they should Sup together in the Kingdom of Heaven that Night, they commended themselves to God, and died constantly in the Lord.

The Woman desired earnestly to die with her Husband, but she was not suffered; yet following him to the place of Execution, she gave him comfort, exhorting him to perseverance and patience for Christs sake, and parting from him with a kiss, said on this manner, Husband, rejoice, for we have lived together many joyful days; but this day, in which we must die, ought to be most joyful unto us both, because we must have joy for ever; therefore I will not bid you good Night, for we shall suddenly meet with joy in the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Woman after that was taken to a plate to be drowned, and albeit she had a Child sucking on her Breast, yet this moved nothing the unmerciful hearts of the Enemies. So after he had commended her Children to the Neighbours of the Town for Gods sake, and the sucking Barn was given to the Nurse, she sealed up the Truth by her death. Ex Regist. & instrumentis à Scotia missis.

The Condemnation of Mr. George Wifchart Gentleman, who suffered Martyrdom for the Faith of Christ Jesus at St. Andrews in Scotland, An. 1546. Mar. 1. with the Articles objected against him, and his Answers to the same.

With most tender affection and unfeigned heart consider (gentle Reader) the uncharitable manner of the Accusation of Mr. George Wifchart, made by the bloody Enemies of Christs Faith. Note also the Articles whereof he was accused, by order digested, and his meek Answers so far as he had leave and leisure to speak. Finally, ponder with no dissembling Spirit the furious rage and tragical cruelties of the malignant Church, in persecuting of this blessed Man of God; and of the contrary, his humble, patient, and most godly Answers made to them suddenly without all fear, not having respect to their glorious menaces and boisterous threats, but charitably and without stop answering, not moving his countenance, nor changing his visage, as in his Accusation hereafter following manifestly shall appear.

But before I enter into his Articles, I thought it not impertinent somewhat to touch concerning the life and conversation of this godly man, according as of late it came to my hands, and certified in Writing by a certain Scholar of his, sometime named Emery Tynley, whose words of Testimonial, as he wrote them to me, here follow.

About the Year of our Lord 1543. there was in the University of Cambride came Mr. George Wifchart, commonly called Mr. George of Benets Colledge, who was a Man of Tall stature, Bald-headed, and on the same a round French-Cap of the best; judged to be of melancholy complexion by his Physionomy, black haired, long bearded, comely of personage, well spoken after his Country of Scotland, courteous, lowly, lovely, glad to teach, desirous to learn, and was well travelled, having on him for his habit or cloathing, never but a Mantle or Frieze Gown to the Shoes, a black Millian Fustian Doublet, and plain black Hose, coarse new Canvass for his Shirts, and white falling Bands and Cuffs at his hands. All the which Apparel he gave to the Poor, some weekly, some monthly, some quarterly, as he liked, saving his French-Cap, which he kept the whole year of my being with him.

He was a Man modest, temperate, fearing God, hating covetousness; for his Charity had never end, night, noon, nor day; he forbore one meal in three, one day in four for the most part, except something to comfort Nature. He lay hard upon a puff of Straw, and coarse new Canvass Sheets, which when he changed, he gave away. He had commonly by his Bed-side a Tub of Water, in the which, (his People being in Bed, the Candle put out and all quiet) he used to bathe himself, as I being very young, being assured, often heard him, and in one light Night discerned him; he loved me tenderly, and I him, for my age, as effectually. He taught with great modesty and gravity, so that some of his People thought him severe, and would have slain him, but the Lord was his defence. And he, after due correction for their malice, by good exhortation amended them and went his way. O that the Lord had left him to me his poor Boy, that he might have finished that he had begun! For in his Religion he was as you see here in the rest of his life, when he went into Scotland with divers of the Nobility, that came for a Treaty to King Henry the Eighth. His Learning was no less sufficient, than his desire; always prest and ready to do good in that he was able, both in the House privately, and in the School publicly, professing and reading divers Authors.

If I should declare his love to me, and all men, his charity to the poor, in giving, relieving, caring, helping, providing, yea, infinitely studying how to do good unto all, and hurt to none, I should sooner want words than just cause to commend him.

All this I testify with my whole heart, and truth, of this godly man. He that made all, governeth all, and shall judge all, knoweth that I speak the truth, that the simple may be satisfied, the arrogant confounded, the hypocrite disclosed.

To the said Mr. George being in Captivity in the Castle of St. Andrews, the Dean of the same Town was sent by the commandment of the Cardinal, and his wicked Counsel, and there summoned the said Master George, that he should upon the Morning following appear before the Judge, then and there to give account of his feditious and heretical Doctrine.

To whom Mr. George answered, What needeth he said he, my Lord Cardinal to summon me to answer for my Doctrine openly before him, under whose power and dominion I am thus straightly bound with Irons? May not my Lord compel me to answer of his extortion? Or believeth he that I am unprovided to render account of my Doctrine? To manifest your selves

Mr. George Wifchart answered to the Dean that summoned him to appear.

Mr. George Wifchart answered to the Dean that summoned him.

what man ye are, it is well done that ye keep your old Ceremonies, and Constitutions made by men.

Upon the next morning, the Lord Cardinal caused his Servants to address themselves in their most warlike array, with Jack, Knapikal, Splent, Speare, and Ax, more ferring for the Warr, than for the preaching of the true Word of God.

Mr. Wicliart brought again before the Bishop.

And when these armed Champions marching in warlike order had conveyed the Bishops into the Abbey Church, incontinently they sent for Master George, who was conveyed into the said Church by the Captain of the Castle, accompanied with an hundred men addressed in manner aforelaid; Like a Lamb led they him to Sacrifice. As he entred into the Abbey Church Door, there was a poor man lying, vexed with great infirmities asking of his Alms, to whom he flung his purse. And when he came before the Lord Cardinal, by and by the Subprior of the Abbey, called Dean John Wiclym, stood up in the Pulpit, and made a Sermon to all the Congregation there then assembled, taking his matter out of xiii. Chapter of Matthew, whose Sermon was divided into four principal parts.

Mr. Wicliart caeth his purse to a poor man.
The Sermon of John Wiclym.

The first part was a brief and short declaration of the Evangelist.

Here he defined.

The second part, of the interpretation of the good feed. And because he called the Word of God the good feed, and Herefies the evil feed, he declared what Herefies was, and how it should be known; which he defined on this manner, Herefies is a false opinion defended with pertinacy, clearly repugning the Word of God.

The cause of Herefies.

The third part of the Sermon was, the cause of Herefies within that Realm, and all other Realms. The cause of Herefies (quoth he) is the ignorance of them which have the cures of mens Soules: to whom it necessarily belongeth to have the true understanding of the Word of God, that they may be able to win again the false Doctors of Herefies, with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; and not onely to win again, but also to overcome them, as saith Paul. A Bishop must be faultless, as it becometh the Minister of God, not stubborn, nor angry, no drunkard, no fighter, nor given to filthy lucre, but barborous, one that loveth goodnest, sober minded, righteous, holy, temperate, and such as cleaveth unto the true Word of Doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholesome learning, and to improve that which they say against him.

Ti. 17.

The manner to know an Herefick.

The fourth part of his Sermon was how Herefies should be known. Herefies (quoth he) be known after this manner: as the Goldsmith knoweth the fine gold from the imperfect, by the Touchstone; so likewise may we know Herefies by the undoubted Touchstone, that is, the true, sincere, and undefiled Word of God. At the last he added, That Hereficks should be put down in this present life. To which Proposition the Gospel appeared to repugn, which he intreated of; Let them go unto the Harvest; the Harvest is the end of the world. Nevertheless, he affirmed that they should be put down by the Civil Magistrate and Law. And when he ended his Sermon, incontinently they caused Master George to ascend into the Pulpit, there to hear his Accusation and Articles. And right against them stood by one of the fed flock, a Monister, John Lauder, laden full of curlings written in Paper. Of which he took out a Roll, both long and also full of curlings, threats, maledictions, and words of devillish spight and malice, saying to the innocent Mr. George so many cruel and abominable words and he hit him so spightfully with the Popes thunder, that the ignorant people dreaded left the earth then would have swallowed him up quick. Notwithstanding he stood still with great patience, hearing his sayings, not once moving or changing his countenance.

The Gospel was of letting the tares to grow unto Harvest.

John Lauder accuser.

The way to fear the ignorant.

When that this fed Sow had read throughout all his lying menacings, his face running down with sweat, and frothing at his mouth like a Boar, he spit at Master George's face, saying, what answerest thou to these sayings, thou runnagate Traitor, Thief, which we have duly proved by sufficient witness against thee? Master George hearing this, kneeled down upon his knees in the Pulpit, making his prayer to God. When he had en-ended his prayer, sweetly and Christianly he answered to them all in this manner.

Master George his Answer.

Many horrible sayings unto me a Christian man, many words abominable to hear ye have spoken here this day, which not onely to teach, but also to think, I thought ever great abomination. Wherefore I pray your Discretions quietly to hear me, that ye may know what were my sayings and the manner of my Doctrine. This my Petition (my Lord) I desire to be heard for three causes.

Three causes why Master Wicliart desired to be heard.

The first is, Because through preaching of the Word of God, his glory is made manifest. It is reasonable therefore, for the advancing of the glory of God, that ye hear me, teaching truly the pure Word of God, without any diffimulation.

The second reason is, Because that your health springeth of the Word of God; for he worketh all things, by his Word. It were therefore an unrighteous thing if ye should stop your Ears from me, teaching truly the Word of God.

The 2. cause

The third reason is, because your Doctrine uttereth many Blasphemous and abominable words, not coming of the inspiration of God, but of the Devil, with no less peril than of my life. It is just therefore and reasonable that your Discretions should know what my words and Doctrine are, and what I have ever taught in my time in this Realm, that I perish not unjustly, to the great peril of your Soules. Wherefore both for the glory and honour of God, your own health, and safeguard of my life, I beseech your Discretions to hear me, and in the mean time I shall recite my Doctrine without any colour.

Mr. Wicliart's Doctrine.

First and chiefly, since the time I came into this Realm I taught nothing but the ten Commandments of God, the twelve Articles of the Faith, and the Prayer of the Lord in the Mother Tongue. Moreover, in Dundee I taught the Epistle of Saint Paul to the Romans. And I shall shew your Discretions faithfully, what fashion and manner I used when I taught, without any human dread; so that your Discretions give your Ears benevolent and attent.

The cry of the Scribes and Pharisees

Suddenly then with an high voice cried the Accuser, the fed Sow, Thou Herefick, Runnagate, Traitor, and Thief, it was not lawful for three to preach. Thou hast taken the Power at thine own hand, without any Authority of the Church. We forethink that thou hast been a Preacher so long. Then all the whole Congregation of the Prelates, with their Complices, said these words; If we give him licence to preach, he is so crafty, and in the Holy Scripture so exercised, that he will perfwade the people to his opinion, and raise them against us.

Wicliart appeals to the Lord Governor, the Governor.

Master George seeing their malicious and wicked intent appealed from the Lord Cardinal to the Lord Governor, as to an indifferent and equal Judge. To whom the Accuser, John Lauder aforelaid, with hoggish voice answered; Is not my Lord Cardinal the second Person within this Realm, Chancellor of Scotland, Archbishop of Saint Andrews, Bishop of Morrois, Commendator of Aberbrothok, Legatus natus; Legatus a Latere?

The style and titles of the Archbishop of St. Andrews.

And so reciting as many Titles of his unworthy honours as would have laden a Ship, much sooner an Ass; Is not he (quoth John Lauder) an equal Judge apparently unto thee? Whom other desirest thou to be thy Judge?

To whom this humble man answering, said, I refuse not my Lord Cardinal, but I desire the Word of God to be my Judge, and the Temporal Estate, with some of your Lordships mine Auditors, because I am here my Lord Governors Prisoner. Whereupon the prideful and scornful people that stood by mocked him, saying, Such man, such Judge; speaking seditious and proachful words against the Governor and other the Nobles, meaning them also to be Hereficks. And incontinent without all delay they would have given Sentence upon Master George, and that without further Process, had not certain men there counselled the Cardinal to read again the Articles, and to hear his Answers thereupon, that the people might not complain of his wrongful Condemnation.

The words which people against the Governor.

And

And shordly to declare, these were the Articles following, with his Answers, as far as they would give him leave to speak. For when he intended to mitigate their feelings, and shew the manner of his Doctrin, by and by they stopped his mouth with another Article.

1 Thou false Heretick, Runnagate, Traitor and Thief, deceiver of the people, thou despitest the Holy Church, and in it like calf condemnest my Lord Governors Authority. And this we know for surety, that when thou preachedst in Dundee, and was charged by my Lord Governors Authority to desist, nevertheless thou wouldst not obey, but perseveredst in the same; and therefore the Bishop of Brothne cursed thee, and delivered thee into the Devils Hands, and gave thee in commandment that thou shouldst preach no more. That notwithstanding, thou didst continue obstinately.

Answer. My Lords, I have read in the Acts of the Apostles, that it is not lawful to desist from the preaching of the Gospel for the threats and menaces of men. Therefore it is written, We shall rather obey God than Man. I have also read in the Prophet Malachy, I shall curse your blessings, and bless your cursings, believing firmly, that the Lord will turn your cursings into blessings.

2 Thou false Heretick didst say, That the Priest standing at the Altar, saying Mass, was like a Fox wagging his tail in July.

Answer. My Lords, I said not so, These were my sayings; The moving of the Body outward, without the inward moving of the Heart, is naught else but the playing of an Ape, and not the true serving of God. For God is a Secret Searcher of Mens Hearts; therefore who will cruelly Adore and Honour God, he must in Spirit and Verity honour him. Then the Accuser stopped his mouth with another Article:

3 Thou false Heretick preachedst against the Sacraments, saying, that there were not seven Sacraments.

Answer. Of the seven Sacraments. My Lords, if it be your pleasures, I never taught of the number of the Sacraments, whether they were seven or eleven. So many as are instituted by Christ are shewed to us by the Evangel, I profess openly. Except it be the Word of God I dare affirm nothing.

4 Thou false Heretick hast openly taught, that Auricular Confession is not a blessed Sacrament. And thou sayest that we should only confesse us to God, and to no Priest.

Answer. My Lords, I say, that Auricular Confession, seeing that it hath no promise of the Evangel, therefore it cannot be a Sacrament. Of the Confession to be made to God, there are many Testimonies in Scripture, as when David saith, I thought I would knowledge mine iniquity against my self unto the Lord, and he forgave the punishment of my sin, Psalms, 32. Here Confession signifieth the secret knowledge of our sins before God. When I exhorted the people in this manner, I reprov'd no manner of Confession. And further Saint James saith, Knowledge your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed. When that he had said these words, the Bishops and their Complices cried and prinned with their teeth, saying, See ye not what colours he hath in his speaking, that he may beguile us and seduce us to his opinion?

5 Thou Heretick didst say openly, that it was necessary to every man to know and underſtand his Baptism, and what it was, contrary to general Councils and the Estate of the Holy Church.

Answer. My Lords, I believe there be none so unwise here, that will make Merchandize with a French Man, or any other unknown stranger, except he know and understand first the condition or promise made by the French Man or stranger: So likewise I would that we understood what thing we promise in the name of the Infant unto God in Baptism. For this cause I believe ye have Confirmation. Then said Master Beiter Chaplain, that he had the Devil within him, and the Spirit of Error. Then answered him a Child, saying, The Devil cannot speak such words as yonder Man doth speak.

6 Thou Heretick, Traitor, Thief, thou saidst that the Sacrament of the Altar was but a piece of Bread baked upon the ashes, and no other thing else, and all that is there done, is but a Superstitious Rise against the Commandment of God.

Answer. Oh Lord God! so manifest Lies and Blaspemies the Scripture doth not teach you. As concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, my Lords, I never taught any thing against the Scripture, the which I shall, by Gods Grace, make manifest this day, I being ready therefore to suffer death.

The lawful use of the Sacrament is most acceptable unto God; but the great abuse of it is very detestable unto him. But what occasion they have to say such words of me, I shall shortly shew your Lordships. I once came to meet with a Jew, when I was sailing upon the water of Rhene. I did inquite of him what was the cause of his pertinacy, that he did not believe that the true Messias was come, considering that they had seen all the Prophecies which were spoken of him, to be fulfilled. Moreover the Prophecies taken away, and the Scepter of Juda, and by many other Testimonies of the Scripture I vanquished him that Messias was come, the which they called Jesus of Nazareth. This Jew answered again unto me, when Messias cometh, he shall restore all things, and he shall not abrogate the Law, which was given to our Forefathers, as ye do.

For why? we see the poor almost perish through hunger amongst you; yet you are not moved with pity toward them: but amongst us Jews (though we be poor) there are no beggars found.

Secondarily, it is forbidden by the Law to fain any kind of Imagery of things in Heaven above, or in the Earth beneath, or in the Sea under the Earth, but one God only is to be honoured: but your Sanctuaries and Churches are full of Idols.

Thirdly, a piece of Bread baken upon the ashes ye adore and worship, and say, that it is your God. I have rehearsed here but the sayings of the Jew, which I never affirmed to be true. Then the Bishops shook their Heads, and spitted on the Earth, and what I meant further in this matter they would not hear.

7 Thou false Heretick didst say, that Extreme Unction was not a Sacrament.

Answer. My Lords, forsooth I never taught any thing of Extreme Unction in my Doctrine, whether it were a Sacrament or no.

8 Thou false Heretick saidst, that Holy Water is not so good as wash and such like. Thou condemnedst Conjurings, and saidst Holy Churches cursings avail not.

Answer. My Lords, as for Holy Water what strength it is of, I taught never in my Doctrin, Conjurings and Exorcisms, if they were conformable to the Word of God I would commend them; but inso much as they are not conformable to the Commandment and Word of God, I reprove them.

9 Thou false Heretick and Runnagate hast said, that every lay-man is a Priest, and such like, Thou saidst, that the Pope hath no more Power, than any other Man.

Answer. My Lords, I taught nothing but the Word of God, I Remember that I have read in some places in St. John and St. Peter, of the which the one saith He hath made us Kings and Priests. The other saith, He hath made us a Kingly Priesthood. Wherefore I have affirmed that any man being cunning in the Word of God, and the true Faith of Jesus Christ, hath this Power given him from God, and not by the Power or Violence of Men, but by the Verue of the Word of God, the which Word is called the Power of God as witnesseth St. Paul evidently enough. And again I say, that any unlearned Man, not exercised in the Word of God, nor yet constant in his Faith, whatsoever Estate or Order he be of, I say, loose, he hath no power to bind or loose, seeing he wanteth the Instrument, by the which he bindeth or looseth, that is to say, the Word of God.

After that he had said these words, all the Bishops laughed, and mocked him. When that he beheld their laughing, Laugh ye (saith he) my Lords? Though that these sayings appear scornful and worthy of derision to your Lordships, nevertheless they are very weighty to me, and of a great value, because they stand not only upon my self, but also the honour and glory of God. In the mean time many godly men beholding the woodness and great cruelty of the Bishops, and the invincible patience of Master George, did greatly mourn and lament.

10 Thou false Heretick saidst, that a man hath no free will, but is like to the Stoikes, which say, that it is not in mans will to do any thing, but that all concupiscence and desire cometh by God, whatsoever kind it be of.

Answer. My Lords, I said not so, truly; I say, that as many as believe in Christ firmly, unto them is given liberty, conformable to the saying of St. John, If the Son make you free, then shall ye verily be free. Of the contrary, as many as believe not in Christ Jesus, they are Bondservants of Sin, He that sinneth is bound to sin.

11 Thou false Heretick saidst, it is as lawful to eat Flesh upon the Friday, as on Sunday.

Answer. Picaeth in your Lordships, I have read in the Epistles of Saint Paul, that who is clean, unto him all things are clean. On the contrary, to the filthy man all things are unclean. A faithful man, clean and holy, sanctified by the Word the Creature of God. But the Creature maketh no man acceptable unto God. So that a Creature may not sanctifie any impure and unfaithful man. But to the faithful man all things are sanctified by the Word of God and Prayer. After these sayings of Master George then said all the Bishops with their Complices; what needeth us any witness against him? hath he not openly here spoken Blasphemy?

12 Thou false Heretick dost say, that we should not pray to Saints, but to God only, Say whether thou hast said this, or no; say shortly.

Answer. For the weakness and Infirmity of the Hearers he said without doubt plainly, that Saints should not be honoured. My Lord (said he) there are two things worthy of Note. The one is certain, the other uncertain. It is found plainly and certain in Scripture, that we should worship and honour one God, according to the saying of the First Commandment, Thou shalt only worship and honour thy Lord God, with all thy Heart. But as for praying to and honouring of Saints, there is great doubt among many, whether they hear, or no, Invocation made unto them. Therefore I exhorted all men equally in my Doctrine, that they should leave the unsure way, and follow that way which was taught us by our Master Christ. He is our only Mediator, and maketh intercession for us to God his Father. He is the Door by the which we must enter in. He that entrencheth in by this Door but climbeth another way, is a Thief and a Murderer. He is the Verity and life. He that goeth out of this way, there is no doubt but he shall fall into the mire; yea verily, is fallen into it already. This is the falshood of my Doctrine, the which I have ever followed. Verily, that which I have heard and read in the Word of God I taught openly, and in no corners. And now ye shall witness the same, if your Lordships will hear me. Except it stand by the Word of God, I dare not be so bold to affirm any thing. These sayings he rehearsed divers times.

13 Thou false Heretick hast Preached plainly, saying that there is no Purgatory, and that it is a fained thing, any man after this life to be punished in Purgatory.

Answer. My Lords, as I have oftentimes said heretofore, without exprets Witnesses and Testimony of the Scripture I dare affirm nothing. I have oft and divers times read over the Bible, and yet such a term found I never, nor yet any place of Scripture applicable thereunto. Therefore I was ashamed ever to teach of that thing which I could not find in the Scripture. Then said he to Master John Lauder his Accuser, If you have any Testimony of the Scripture, by the which you may prove any such place, shew it now before this Auditory. But this doth had not a word to say for himself, but was as dumb as a Beetle in that matter.

14 Thou false Heretick hast taught plainly against the Vows of Monks, Friars, Nuns, and Priests; saying, That whosoever was bound to such like Vows, they Vowed themselves to the Estate of Damnation. Moreover, that it was lawful for Priests to Marry Wives, and not to live sole.

Of sooth, my Lords, I have read in the Evangel, that there are three kinds of chaste men; some are gelded from their Mothers Womb; some are gelded by men; and some have gelded themselves for the Kingdom of Heavens sake. Verily, I say these men are blessed by the Scripture of God. But as many as have not the gift of Chastity, nor yet for the Evangel have overcome the Concupiscence of the Flesh, and have Vowed Chastity; ye have experience, although I should hold my peace, to what Inconvenience they have Vowed themselves.

When he had said these words, they were all dumb, thinking better to have ten Concubines, than one Married Wife.

15 Thou false Heretick and Runnagate sayest, thou wilt not obey our General nor Provincial Councils.

My Lords, what your General Councils are I know not, I was never exercised in them, but to the pure Word of God I gave my labours. Read here your General Councils, or else give me a Book wherein they are contained, that I may read them. If they agree with the Word of God, I will not disagree. Then the ravening Wolves turned into Woodcocks and said, Wherefore let we him speak any further? Read forth the rest of the Articles, and say not upon them. Among these cruel Tygers there was one false Hypocrite, a seducer of the People, called John Graisford Scot, standing behind John Lauder: Back, hausting him to read the rest of the Articles, and not to tarry upon his witty and godly Answers. For we may not abide them, quoth he, no more than the Devil may abide the sign of the Cross, when it is named.

16 Thou Heretick sayest, that it is in vain to build to the honour of God costly Churches, seeing that God remaineth not in the Churches made with Mens Hands, nor yet can God be in so little space as betwixt the Priests Hands.

My Lords, Solomon saith, If that the Heaven of Heavens cannot comprehend them, how much less this House that I have builded? And Job consenteth to the same Sentence. Seeing that he is higher than the Heavens, therefore what canst thou build unto him? He is deeper than Hell, then how shalt thou know him? He is longer than the Earth, and broader than the Sea. So that God cannot be comprehended in one place, because that he is infinite. These sayings notwithstanding, I never said that Churches should be destroyed, but of the contrary I affirm ever, that Churches should be sustained and upholden, that the people should be Congregated into them, there to hear of God. And moreover, wherefore is true Preaching of the Word of God, and the lawful use of the Sacraments, undoubtedly there is God himself: so that both these sayings are true together; God cannot be comprehended in any place, and wherefore two or three are gathered together in his name, there is he present in the midst of them.

Then said he to his Accuser, If you think any otherwise than I say, shew forth your Reasons before this Auditory. Then he without all reason being dumb, and not answering one word, proceeded forth in his Articles.

17 Thou false Heretick contemnest fasting and sayest thou shouldst not fast.

My Lords, I find that fasting is commended in the Scripture; therefore I were a slanderer of the Gospel, if I contemned fasting. And not so only, but I have learned by experience, that fasting is good for the health of the Body; but God knoweth who fasteth the true fast.

18 Thou false Heretick hast Preached openly saying, that the Soul of Man shall sleep till the latter day of Judgment, and shall not obtain life immortal until that day.

God full of mercy and goodnes forgive them that say such things of me: I wot and know surely by the Word of God, that he which hath begun to have the Faith of Iesus Christ, and believeth firmly in him, I know surely that the Soul of that man shall never sleep, but ever shall live an immortal life. The which life from day to day is renewed in grace and augmented; nor yet shall ever perill or have an end, but ever immortall shall live with Christ. To the which life all that beleeve in him shall come, and rest in eternal glory, Amen.

When the Bishops with their Complices had accused this innocent men in manner and form afore said, incontinently they condemned him to be burnt as an Heretick, not having respect to his godly Answers and true Reasons which he alledged, nor yet to their own Consciences, thinking verily that they should do to God good Sacrifice, conformable to the saying of Saint John, They shall excommunicate you: yea, and the time shall come, that he which killeth you, shall think that he hath done to God good service.

The Prayer of Master George Wifhart.

O Immortal God, how long shalt thou suffer the wondres and great cruelty of the ungodly to exercise their fury upon thy Servants which do further thy word in this world, seeing they desire to be contrary, that is, to cloke and destroy the true Doctrine and verity, by the which thou hast loved thy self unto the world, which was all drowned in blindness and misknowledge of thy Name. O Lord, we know surely that thy true Servants must needs suffer, for thy Names sake, Persecution, Affliction and Troubles in this present life, which is but a shadow, as thou hast shewed to us, by thy Prophets and Apostles. But yet we desire thee heartily, that thou conserve, defend and help thy Congregation, which thou hast chosen before the beginning of the world, and give them thy graces to hear thy word, and to be thy true Servants in this present life.

Then by and by they caused the common People to void away, whose desire was always to hear that innocent man to speak. Then the Sons of darkness pronounced their Sentence definitive, not having respect to the judgment of God. And when all this was done and said, the Cardinal caused his Warders to pass again with the meek Lamb into the Castle, until such time as the fire was made ready. When he was come into the Castle, then there came two gray fiends, Frier Seer and his mate, saying, Sir, ye must make your confession unto us. He answered and said, I will make no confession unto you: Go fetch me yonder man that preached this day, and I will make my confession unto him. Then they sent for the Subprior of the Abbey, who came to him with all diligence. But what he said in this confession, I cannot shew.

When the fire was made ready, and the Gallows at the West part of the Castle near to the Priory, the Lord Cardinal dreading that Master George should have been taken away by his Friends, commanded to bend all the Ordinance of the Castle right against that part, and commanded all his Gunners to be ready and stand beside their Guns, until such time as he were burned. All this being done, they bound Master Georges hands behind his back, and led him forth with their Souldiers from the Castle, to the place of their wicked Execution. As he came forth of the Castle Gate, there met him certain Beggars asking him Alms for Gods sake. To whom he answered, I want my hands wherewith I should give you Alms, but the merciful Lord, of his benignity and abundance of grace that feedeth all men, vouchsafe to give you necessities both unto your Bodies and Souls. Then afterward met him two false fiends, I should say Friers, saying, Master George, pray to our Lady, that she may be Mediatrix for you to her Son. To whom he answered meekly, Cease, tempt me not, my Brethren. After this he was led to the fire with a Rope about his neck, and a Chain of Iron about his middle.

The martyrdom of master George Wifhart. The burning of the blessed Martyr Adam Wallace.

When that he came to the fire, he sat down upon his knees and rose again, and thrice he said these words, O thou Saviour of the world have mercy on me. Father of Heaven I commend my Spirit into thy holy hands. When he had made this Prayer, he turned him to the People and said these words.

I beseech you Christian Brethren and Sisters, that ye be not offended in the Word of God for the Affliction and Torments, which ye see already prepared for me; But I exhort you that you love the Word of God, and suffer patiently and with a comfortable heart for the words sake, which is your undoubted Salvation, and everlasting comfort.

Moreover, I pray you shew my Brethren and Sisters, which have heard me oft before, that they cease not, nor leave off the Word of God which I taught unto them, after the grace given to me, for any Persecutions or Troubles in this world, which last not; and shew unto them, that my Doctrine was no old Wives Fables after the Constitutions made by men. And if I had taught mens Doctrine, I had gotten great thanks by men. But for the words sake and true Evangel, which was given to

to me by the grace of God, I suffer this day by men, not sorrowfully, but with a glad heart and mind. For this cause I was sent, that I should suffer this fire for Christs sake. Consider and behold my visage, ye shall not see me change my colour. This grim face I fear not. And so I pray you to do, if that any Persecution come unto you for the Words sake, and not to fear that it shall flay the Body, and afterward have no power to flay the Soul. Some have said of me, that I taught, that the Soul of man should sleep until the last day. But I know surely, and my Faith is such, that my Soul shall Sup with my Saviour Christ this night, ere it be six hours; for whom I suffer this. Then he prayed for them which accused him, saying, I beseech thee Father of Heaven to forgive them that have of any ignorance, or else have of any evil mind, forged any lies upon me, I forgive them with all my heart. I beseech Christ to forgive them that have condemned me to death this day ignorantly.

And last of all he said to the People on this manner; I beseech you Brethren and Sisters to exhort your Prelates to the learning of the Word of God, that they at the last may be ashamed to do evil, and learn to do good. And if they will not convert themselves from their wicked Error, there shall hastily come upon them the wrath of God, which they shall not eschew. Many faithful words said he in the mean time, taking no heed or care of the cruel Torments, which were then prepared for him.

And at last of all the Hangman, that was his Tormentor, fate down upon his knees, and said; Sir, I pray you forgive me, for I am not guilty of your death. To whom he answered, come hither to me. When that he was come to him, he kissed his Cheek, and said, Lo here is a token that I forgive thee. My heart, do thine Office; and by and by he was put upon the Gibbet and hanged, and there burnt to Powder. When that the People beheld the great tormenting, they might not withhold from piteous mourning and complaining of this innocent Lambs slaughter.

A Note of the just punishment of God upon the cruel Cardinal Archbishop of St. Andrews, named Beaton.

The just judgment of God upon D. Beaton, a bloody murderer of Gods Saints.

The death of David Beaton, Archbp. of S. Andrews.

Jo. Hamelton Archbishop of S. Andrews, J. Hamelton a Persecutor.

IT was not long after the Martyrdom of the blessed man of God, Master George Wijnart aforesaid, who was put to death by David Beaton, the bloody Archbishop and Cardinal of Scotland, as is above specified, Anno, 1546. the first day of March, but the said David Beaton Archbishop of St. Andrews, by the just revenge of Gods mighty Judgment, was slain within his own Castle of St. Andrews by the hands of one Leeb and other Gentlemen, who, by the Lord stirred up, brake suddenly into his Castle upon him, and in his bed murdered him the said year, the last day of May, crying out, Alas, alas, slay me not, I am a Priest. And so like a Butcher he lived, and like a Butcher he died, and lay seven months and more unburied, and at last like a Carrion buried in a Dughill, Anno, 1546. Maii uli. Exhibitor. Impressa.

After this David Beaton succeeded John Hamelton Archbishop of St. Andrews, Anno 1549. who to the intent that he might in no ways appear inferior to his Predecessour, in augmenting the number of the holy Martyrs of God, in the next year following called a certain poor man to judgment, whose name was Adam Wallace. The order and manner of whose Story here followeth.

The Story and Martyrdom of Adam Wallace in Scotland.

Adam Wallace Martyr.

THERE was set upon a Scaffold made hard to the Chancelary Wall of the Black-Friers Church in Edinburgh, on Seats made thereupon, the L. Governour. Above him at his back fate Master Gavin Hamelton Dean of Glasgow, representing the Metropolitan Pastor thereof. Upon a Seat on his right hand fate the Archbishop of Saint Andrews. At his back and side somewhat stood the Official Lenthame. Next to the Bishop of St. Andrews, the Bishop of Dunblane, the Bishop of Murray, the Abbot of Dunfermling, the Abbot of Glendace, with other Churchmen of lower estimation, as the Official of St. Andrews, and other Doctrs of that nelt and City. And at the other end of the Seat fate Master Uchillrie. On his left hand fate the Earl of Argyll Justice, with his Deputy Sir John Campbell of Lundy, at his feet. Next him the Earl of Huntley. Then the Earl of Angush, the Bishop of Glasgow, the Prior of St. Andrews, the Bishop of Orkney, the Lord Forbes, Dean John Wemyss Subprior of Saint Andrews, and behinde the seats stood the whole Senate, the Clerk of the Register, &c.

At the further end of the Chancelarie wall in the Pulpit was placed Master John Lauder Parson of Marbattle Accuser, clad in a Surplice, and red Hood, and a great Congregation of the whole People in the Body of the Church, standing on the ground. After that Sir John Ker, Prebendary of Saint Giles Church, was accused, convicted, and condemned, for the false making and giving forth of a Sentence of divorce, whereby he falsely divorced and parted a man and his lawful Wife in the name of the Dean of Roscalrige and certain other Judges appointed by the holy Father the Pope. He granted the falsehood, and that never any such thing was done indeed, nor yet meant nor moved by the foresaid Judges, and was agreed to be banished the Realms of Scotland and England for his life time, and to lose his right hand, if he were found or apprehended therein after, and in the mean time to leave his Benefices for ever, and they to be vacant.

After that was brought in Adam Wallace, a simple poor man in appearance, conveyed by John of Cunnocke Servant to the Bishop of Saint Andrews, and set in the midst of the Scaffold, who was commanded to look to the Accuser; who asked him what was his name? he answered, Adam Wallace. The Accuser said he had another name, which he granted, and said he was commonly called Fene. Then asked he where he was born? Within two mile of Feyle, said he; in Kyle. Then said the Accuser, I repent that ever such a poor man as you should put these Noble Lords to so great embarrassment this day by your vain speaking. And I must speak, said he, as God giveth me grace, and I believe I have said no evil to hurt any body. Would God (said the Accuser) ye had never spoken; but you are brought forth for so horrible crimes of Heresie, as never were imagined nor heard of in this Country before, and shall be sufficiently proved, that ye cannot deny it; and I forethink that it should be heard, for hurting of weak Consciences. Now I will ye thee no more, and thou shalt hear the points that thou art accused of.

Adam Wallace, alias Fene: thou art openly delated and accused for preaching, saying, and teaching of the Blasphemies and abominable Heresies under written. In the first thou hast said and taught that the Bread and Wine on the Altar, after the words of Consecration, are not the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. He turned to the Lord Governour, and Lords aforesaid, saying; I never said, nor taught any thing but that I found in this Book and Writ (having there a Bible at his belt in French, Dutch, and English) which is the Word of God, and if you will be content that the Lord God and his Word be judge to me, and this his holy Writ here it is, and where I have said wrong, I shall take that punishment you shall put to me; for I never said anything concerning this that I am accused of, but that which I found in this Writ.

What didst thou say, said the Accuser? I said, quoth he, that after our Lord Jesus Christ had eaten the Paschal Lamb in his latter Supper with his Apostles, and fulfilled the Ceremonies of the old Law, he instituted a new Sacrament in remembrance of his death then to come. He took Bread, he blessed, and brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, and said, Take ye, eat. Much. 16. ye, this is my Body which shall be broken and given for you. And likewise the Cup, blessed, and bade them drink all thereof, for that was the Cup of the New Testament which should be shed for the forgiving of many. How oft ye do this, do it in my remembrance.

The Sacrament of the Popish Altar. The Doctrine of Adam Wallace touching the Sacrament of the Lords Body.

Then said the Bishop of Saint Andrews and the Official of Louthain, with the Dean of Glasgow, and many other Prelats, We know this well enough. The Earl of Huntley said, Thou answerest not to that which is laid to thee; say either nay or yea thereto. He answered, if ye will admit God and his word spoken by the mouth of his blessed Son Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, ye will admit that which I have said; for I have said and taught nothing but what the Word, which is the Trial and Touchstone, faith; which ought to be judge to me, and to all the World.

Why (quoth the Earl of Huntley) hast thou not a Judge good enough? and trowest thou that we know not God and his Word? Answer to that is spoken to thee. And then they made the Accuser speak the something over again. Thou sayst, quoth the Accuser, and hast taught, that the Bread and the Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Consecration, are not the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

He answered, I never said more than the Writ faith, nor yet more than I have said before. For I know well by St. Paul when he faith, Whosoever eateth this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily, receiveth to himself damnation. And therefore when I taught (which was but seldom, and to them only which required and desired me) I said, That if the Sacrament of the Altar were truly ministered, and used as the Son of the living God did institute it, where that was done, there was God himself by his Divine Power, by the which he is over all.

The Bishop of Orkney asked him, Believest thou not, said he, that the Bread and Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Consecration, is the very Body of God, Flesh, Blood, and Bone?

He answered, I wote not what that word Consecration meaneth. I have not much Latin, but I believe that the Son of God was conceived of the holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary, and hath a natural Body, with hands, feet, and other Members, and in the same Body he walked up and down in the world, preached and taught, he suffered death under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and that by his godly power he raised that same Body again the third day; and the same Body ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father, which shall come again to Judge both the quick and the dead. And that this Body is a natural Body with hands and feet, and cannot be in two places at once, he sheweth well himself; for the which everlasting thanks be to him that maketh this matter clear: when the Woman brake that Ointment on him, answering to some of his Disciples which grudged therat, he said, The Poor shall you always have with you, but me ye shall not have always. Meaning of his natural Body. And likewise at his ascension said he to the same Disciples that were fleshy, and would ever have had him remaining with them Corporally; It is needful for you that I pass away; for if I pass not away, the Comforter the holy Ghost shall not come to you; (meaning that his natural Body behooved to be taken away from them) But be stout and be of good cheer, for I am with you unto the Worlds end.

And that the eating of his very Flesh profiteth not, may well be known by his words which he spake in the sixth of John; where after that he had said, Except ye eat my flesh and drink my Blood, ye shall not have life in you; they murmuring therat, he reproved them for their grofs and fleshy taking of his words, and said, What will ye think when ye see the Son of man ascend to the place that he came from? It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, to be eaten as they took it, and even so take ye it.

It is an horrible Heresie, said the Bishop of Orkney. When he began to speak again, and bade the Lord Governor judge if he had right by the Writ, the Accuser cried, Ad secundum. Nunc ad secundum, answered the Arch-bishop of St. Andrews.

Then was he bidden to hear the Accuser, who pronounced the second Article, and said, Thou saidst likewise, and openly didst teach that the Mass is very Idolatry, and abominable in the sight of God.

He answered and said, I have read the Bible and Word of God in three Tongues, and have understood them so far as God gave me grace, and yet never read I that word Mass in it all: but I found, said he, that the thing that was highest and most in estimation amongst men, and not in the Word of God, was Idolatry, and abominable in the sight of God. And I say the Mass is holden greatly in estimation, and high amongst men, and is not founded in the Word, therefore I said it was Idolatry. and abominable in the sight of God. But if any man will find it in the Scripture, and prove it by Gods Word, I will grant mine Errour, and that I have failed; Otherwise not. And in that case I will submit me to all lawful correction and punishment. Ad tertium, said the Archbishop.

Then said the Accuser, Thou hast said and openly taught, That the God which we worship; is but Bread, sown of Corn, growing of the earth, baked of mens hands, and nothing else.

He answered, I worship the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three Persons in one Godhead, which made and fashioned the Heaven and Earth, and all that is therein of nought; but I know not which God you worship; and if you will shew me whom you worship, I will shew you what he is, as I can by my Judgment.

Believest thou not (said the Accuser) that the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of the Consecration betwixt the Priests hands, is the very Body and Blood of the Son of God, and God himself? What the Body of God, is said he, and what kind of Body he hath, I have shewed you, so far as I have found in the Scripture.

Then said the Accuser, Thou hast preached, said, and openly taught divers and sundry other great Errours and abominable Heresies against all the seven Sacraments, which for shortness of time I premit and overpass. Whether dost thou grant thy foresaid Articles that thou art accused of, or no, and thou shalt hear them shortly. And then repeated the Accuser the three Articles aforesaid shortly over, and asked him whether he granted or denied them?

He answered that which before he had said of his Answers, and that he said nothing but agreeing to the holy word as he understood, so God judge him, and his own Conscience accuse him, and thereby would he abide unto the time he were better instructed by Scripture, and to the contrary proved, even to the death: and he said to the Lord Governour and other Lords, if you condemn and me for holding by Gods Word, my innocent Blood shall be required at your hands, when ye shall be brought before the Judgment Seat of Christ, who is mighty to defend my innocent cause, before whom ye shall not deny it, nor yet be able to resist his wrath; to whom I refer the vengeance, as it is written, Vengeance is mine and I will reward.

Then gave they forth Sentence, and condemned him by the Laws, and so left him to the Secular Power, in the hands of Sir John Campbell Justice Deputy, who also given delivered him to the Provost of Edenborough to be burnt on the Castle-Hill, who incontinent made him to be put in the uppermost house in the Town, with Sir Hugh rons about his Legs and neck, and gave charge to Sir Hugh Terry to keep the Key of the said house, an ignorant Minister and Imp of Satan and of the Bishops; who by direction sent to the poor man two Gray Friars, to instruct him, with whom he would enter into no communing. Soon after that were sent in two black Friars, an English Frier, and another subtle Sophister, called Abraham, with the which English Frier he would have reasoned and declared his Faith by the Scriptures. Who answered, he had no Commission to enter into disputation with him, and so departed and left him.

Then was sent to him a worldly wife man, and not ungodly in the understanding of the Truth, the Dean of Roscalrige, who gave him Christian consolation, amongst the which he exhorted him to believe the reality of the Sacrament after the Consecration. but he would consent to nothing that had not evidence in the holy Scripture, and so passed over that night in singing, and lauding God to the tears of divers hearers, having learned the Psalter of David without Book, to his consolation: For they had before spoiled him of his Bible, which always, till after he was condemned, was with him where ever he went. After that Sir Hugh knew that he had certain Books to read and comfort his Spirit, he came in a rage and took the same from him, leaving him desolate (to his power) of all consolation, and gave divers ungodly and injurious provocations by his devilish venom, to have perverted him a poor Innocent, from the patience and hope he had in Christ his Saviour; but God suffered him not to be moved therewith, as plainly appeared to the hearers and seers for the time.

So all the next Morning abode this poor man in Irons, and provision was commanded to be made for his burning, against the next day. Which day the Lord Governor, and all the Principal both spiritual and temporal Lords, departed from Edinburgh to their other business.

After they were departed, came the Dean of Roscel rige to him again, and reasoned with him after his wit. Who answered as before, he would say nothing concerning his Faith, but as the Scripture testifieth, yea, though an Angel came from Heaven to persuade him to the same; saving that he confessed himself to have received good consolation of the said Dean in other behalf as becometh a Christian.

Then after came in the said Terry again, and examined him after his old manner, and said he would gar Devils to come forth of him ere Even. To whom he answered, You should rather be a godly man to give me consolation in my case. When I knew you were come, I prayed God I might resist your temptations; which, I thank him, he hath made me able to do; therefore I pray you, let me alone in peace. Then he asked of one of the Officers that stood by, Is your Fire making ready? Who told him it was. He answered, as it pleaseth God; I am ready soon or late as it shall please him; and then he spake to one faithful in that company, and bade him commend him to all the Faithful, being sure to meet together with them in Heaven. From that time, to his forth coming to the Fire, spake no man with him.

At his forth coming, the Provost with great menacing words forbade him to speak to any man, or any to him, as belike he had commandment of his Superiors. Coming from the Town to the Castle-Hill, the common People said, God have mercy upon him. And on you too (said he). Being beside the Fire, he lifted up his eyes to Heaven twice or thrice, and said to the People, Let it not offend you that I suffer death this day for the Truths sake; for the Disciple is not greater than his Master. Then was the Provost angry that he spake. Then looked he to Heaven again, and said, They will not let me speak. The Cord being about his Neck, the Fire was lighted, and so departed he to God constantly, and with good countenance to our fights. Ex testimonio & literis à Scotia petitis, Anno 1550.

The Schism that arose in Scotland for the Pater Noster.

After that Richard Marshall, Doctor of Divinity, and Prior of the Black-Friers at the New-Castle in England, had declared in his Preaching at St. Andrews in Scotland, that the Lords Prayer (commonly called the Pater Noster) should be done only to God, and not to Saints, neither to any other Creature; the Doctors of the University of St. Andrews, together with the Gray-Friers, who had long ago taught the People to pray the Pater Noster to Saints, had great indignation that their old Doctrine should be repugned, and stirred up a Gray-Frier, called Frier Taitus, to preach again to the People, that they should and might pray the Pater Noster to Saints. Who finding no part of the Scripture to found his purpose upon, yet came to the Pulpit the first of November, being the Feast of All-hallows, Anno 1551. and took the Text of the Gospel for that day read in their Mass, Blessed are the poor in spirit, for so them pertained the Kingdom of Heaven.

This feeble foundation being laid, the Frier began to reason most impertinently, that the Lords Prayer might be offered to Saints, because every Petition thereof appertaineth to them. For if we meet an Old man in the Street, said he, we will say to him, Good-day Father, and therefore much more may we call the Saints our Fathers; and because we grant also that they be in Heaven, we may say to every one of them, Our Father which art in Heaven. Our Father, God, hath made their Names holy, and therefore ought we as followers of God, to hold their Names holy, and so we may say to any of the Saints, Our Father which art in Heaven, so that hallowed be thy Name. And for the same cause, said the Frier, as they are in the Kingdom of Heaven, so that Kingdom is theirs by possession, and so praying for the Kingdom of Heaven, we may say to them, and every one of them, Thy Kingdom come. And except their will had been the very will of God, they had never come to that Kingdom. And therefore seeing their will is Gods will we may say with every one of them, Thy will be done.

But when the Frier came to the fourth Petition, Touching our daily Bread, he began to be affronted and ashamed, so that he did sweat abundantly, partly because his sophistry began to fail him, not finding such a colour for that part as for the other which went before, and partly because he spake against his own knowledge and Conscience; and so he was compelled to confess that it was not in the Saints power to give us our daily Bread, but that they should pray to God for us, said he, that we may obtain our daily Bread by their Intercession: and so glofed he the rest to the end. Not standing yet content with this detestable Doctrine, he affirmed most blasphemously, that St. Pauls Napkin, and St. Peters Shadow did Miracles, and that the virtue of Eliseus Cloak divided the Waters; attributing nothing to the power of God: with many other Errors of the Papists, horrible to be heard.

Upon this, followed incontinent a dangerous Schism in the Church of Scotland: for not only the Clergy, but the whole People were divided among themselves, one defending the Truth, and another the Papistry: in such sort that there rose a Proverb, To whom say you your Pater Noster? And although the Papists had the upper hand as then, whose words were almost holden for Law (so great was the blindness of that Age,) yet God so inspired the hearts of the common People, that so many as could get the understanding of the bane words of the Lords Prayer in English (which was then said in Latin) utterly detested that Opinion, holding that it should in no wise be said to Saints: so that the Crafts-men and their Servants in their Booths, when the Frier came, exploded him with shame enough, crying, Frier Pater Noster, Frier Pater Noster. Who at the last being convict in his own Conscience, and ashamed of his former Sermon, was compelled to leave the Town of St. Andrews.

In the mean time of this brute there were two Papists set on the Abbey-Church, the one in Latin bearing these words:

*Doctores nostri de Collegio Concludunt idem cum Lucifero.
Quod sancti sunt similes altissimo:
Et se tunc gravatorio
De mandato Officialis,
Ad instantiam fiscalis,
Gaw & Harvey non vari
In premissis connotari.*

The other in English, bearing these words:

*Doctors of Theology, of fourscore of years,
And old jolly Lupops the bald Gray-Friers;
They would be called Rabbi and Magister nofter,
And woe not to whom they say their Pater Noster.*

Shortly, the Christians were so hotly offended, and displeased the Papists on the other side so proud and wilful, that necessary it was, to eschew greater inconveniences, that the Clergy at last should be assembled to dispute and conclude the whole matter, that the Lay-people might be put out of doubt. Which being done, and the University agreed, whoever had been present might have heard much subtle Sophistry. For some of the Popish Doctors affirmed that it should be said to God formaliter, and to Saints materialiter. Others, ultimate, &

A Scottish Proverb.

Frier Taitus noster driven out of St. Andrews.

Mr. D. Grey and Mr. Th. Harvey two Protestants.

A Schism in Scotland by a Sermon of Mr. Marshall a Black-Frier, preaching that the Pater noster should not be said to Saints.

Math. 5.

The Doctrine of the Papists is such, that the Pater noster may be said to Saints, and why non ultimarè. Others said it should be said to God Principaliter, and to Saints minus Principaliter. Others that it should be said to God primariè, and to Saints secundariè. Others that it should be said to God capiendo strictè, and to Saints capiendo largè. Which vain distinctions being heard and considered by the People, they that were simple remained in greater doubtfulness than they were in before: so that a well aged man, and a Servant to the Subprior of Saint Andrews, called the Subprior Thomas, being demanded to whom he said his Pater noster ? he answered, to God only. Then they asked again what should be said to the Saints ? he answered, give them Averand Creeds enow in the Devils name, for that may suffice them well enough, albeit they do spoyl God of his right. Others, making their Vaunts to the Doctors, said, that because Christ (who madethe Pater noster) never came into the Isle of Britain, and so understood not the English Tongue, therefore it was that the Doctors concluded it should be said in Latin.

This perturbation and open slander yet depending, it was thought good to call a Provincial Council to decide the matter. Which being assembled at Edenborough, the Papists being destitute of reason defended their parts with lies, alleging that the University of Paris had concluded that the Lords Prayer should be said to Saints. But because that could not be proved, and that they could not prevail by reason, they used their will in place of reason, and some time despitelike, and injurious talk. As Frier Scot, being asked of one to whom he should say the Pater noster, he answered, saying, say it to the Devil Knave. So the Council perceiving they could profit nothing by reasoning, they were compelled to pass, voting.

But then incontinent they that were called Churchmen were found divided and repugned among themselves. For some Bishops, with the Doctors and Friers consented that the Pater noster should be said to Saints ; but the Bishops of St. Andrews, Cairnes and Archebishops with other more learned men, refused utterly to subscribe to the same. Finally with consent of both the parties, Communion was given by the holy Church to Dean John Wynname, then Subprior of St. Andrews to declare to the People how and after what manner they should pray the Lords Prayer. Who, accepting of the Communion declared that it should be said to God, with some other restrictions, which are not necessary to be put in memory. And so, by little and little, the brute and tumult ceased, Ex testimo. è Scotia allato.

The Martyrdom of the blessed Servant of God, Walter Mille.

Among the rest of the Martyrs of Scotland, the marvellous constancy of Walter Mille is not to be passed over with silence. Out of whose Ashes sprang thousands of his Opinion and Religion in Scotland, who altogether chose rather to die than to be any longer over trodden by the Tyranny of the foresaid cruel, ignorant, and beastly Bishops, Abbots, Monks, and Friers; and so began the Congregation of Scotland to debate the true Religion of Christ against the Frenchmen and Papists, who sought always to depress and keep down the same; for it began soon after the Martyrdom of Walter Mille, of the which the form hereafter followeth.

In the year of our Lord, 1558. in the time of Mary Ducheess of Longawry, Queen Regent of Scotland and the said John Hamilton being Bishop of Saint Andrews, and Primate of Scotland, this Walter Mille (who in his youth had been a Papist) after that he had been in Almain, and had heard the Doctrine of the Gospel returned again into Scotland, and, setting aside all Papistry and compelled Chastity, married a Wife, which thing made him unto the Bishops of Scotland to be suspected of Heresie; and after long watching of him he was taken by two Popish Priests, one called Sir George Trappen, and the other Sir Hugh Tarry Servants to the said Bishop for the time, within the Town of Dyers in Effie, and brought to Saint Andrews and imprisoned in the Castle thereof. He being in Prison, the Papists earnestly travelled and laboured to have seduced him, and threatened him with death and corporal Torments, to the intent they might cause him to recant and forsake the Truth. But seeing they could profit nothing thereby, and that he remained still firm and constant, they laboured to persuade him by fair promises, and offered unto him a Monks portion for all the days of his life, in the Abbey of Dunfermeling, so that he would deny the things he had taught, and grant that they were Heresie; but he, continuing in the Truth even unto the end, despised their threatnings and fair promises.

Then assembled together the Bishop of Saint Andrews, Concilium Murray, Brechin, Cairnes, and Ardians, the Abbots of Dunfermeling, Landeris, Balindrinat, and Towper; with Doctors of Theology of Saint Andrews, as John Gresham Black Frier, and Dean John Wynname, Subprior of St. Andrews, William Tranfion, Provost of the Old Colledge, with divers others, as sundry Friers Black and Gray. These being assembled, and having consulted together, he was taken out of Prison, and brought to the Metropolitan Church, where he was put in a Pulpit before the Bishops to be accused, the twentieth day of April. Being brought into the Church, and climbing up into the Pulpit, they seeing him so weak and feeble of Person, partly by age and travel, and partly by evil treatment, that without help he could not climb up, they were out of hope to have heard him for weakness of voice. But when he began to speak, he made the Church to ring and found again, with so great courage and stoutness, that the Christians which were present were no less rejoiced, than the Adversaries were confounded and ashamed. He being in the Pulpit, and on his knees at Prayer, Sir Andrew Oliphant, one of the Bishops Priests, commanded him to arise and to answer to his Articles, saying on this manner, Sir Walter Mille, arise and answer to the Articles for you hold my Lord here overlong. To whom Walter, after he had finished his Prayer, answered, saying, We ought to obey God more than men, I serve one more mighty, even the Omnipotent Lord: and where ye call me Sir Walter, call me Walter and not Sir Walter, I have been overlong one of the Popes Knights. Now say what thou hast to say.

These were the Articles whereof he was accused, with his Answers unto the same.

Oliphant. What think you of Priests Marriage ? Mille. I hold it a blessed Band: for Christ himself maintained it, and approved the same, and also made it free to all men; but you think it not free to you, ye abhor it, and in the mean time take other mens Wives and Daughters, and will not keep the Band that God hath made. Ye vow Chastity, and break the same. Saint Paul had rather marry than burn; to which I have done, for God never forbad marriage to any man, of what State or degree soever he were.

Oliphant. Thou saiest there be not seven Sacraments. Mille. Give me the Lords Supper and Baptism, and take you the rest, and part them among you. For if there be seven, why have you omitted one of them, to wit, Marriage, and give your selves to slanderous and ungodly Whoredom ?

Oliphant. Thou art against the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and saiest, that the Mass is wrong, and is Idolatry.

Mille. A Lord or a King sendeth and calleth many to a Dinner, and when the Dinner is in readines, he causeth to ring a Bell, and the men come to the Hall, and sit down to be partakers of the Dinner; but the Lord turning his back unto them careth all himself, and mocketh them; to do ye.

Oliphant. Thou deniest the Sacrament of the Altar to be the very Body of Christ really in Flesh and Blood.

Mille. The Scripture of God is not to be taken Carnally but Spiritually, and standeth in Faith only; and as for the Mass it is wrong, for Christ was once offered on the Cross for mans trespass, and will never be offered again, for then he ended all Sacrifice.

Witness to God, was taken by two Popish Priests, G. Trappen, and Sir Hugh Tarry.

The Council of Edenborough could not agree to whom they should say their Pater noster. The Papists maintain their cause with lies and railing, when reason crying lacketh.

That is, to the naming of voices. The Friers and Prelates could not agree among themselves about saying the Pater noster.

Oliph. Thou deniest the Office of a Bishop.
Mille. I affirm that they, whom ye call Bishops, do no Bishops works, nor use the Office of Bishops; (as Paul biddeth, writing to Timothy) but live after their own sensual pleasure, and take no care of the Flock, nor yet regard they the Word of God, but desire to be honoured and called, my Lords.

Oliph. Thou spakest against Pilgrimage, and calledst it a Pilgrimage to whoredom.

Mille. I affirm and say, that it is not commanded in the Scripture, and that there is no greater whoredom in any place, than at your Pilgrimages, except it be in common Brothels.

Oliph. Thou preachedst secretly and privately in Houses, and openly in the Fields.

Mille. Yea man, and on the Sea also, saying in a Ship.

Oliph. Wilt thou not recant thy erroneous Opinions? And if thou wilt not, I will pronounce Sentence against thee.

Mille. I am accused of my life; I know I must die once, and therefore as Christ said to Judas, Quod facis fac citius. Ye shall know that I will not recant the Truth, for I am Corn, I am no Chaff; I will not be blown away with the wind, nor burst with the flail; But I will abide both.

These things rehearsed they of purpose, with other light trifles, to augment their final Accusation, and then Sir Andrew Oliphant pronounced Sentence against him, that he should be delivered to the Temporal Judge, and punished as an Heretic, which was to be burnt. Notwithstanding, his boldness and constancy moved so the hearts of many, that the Bishops Steward of his Regality, Provost of the Town, called Patrick Learmond, refused to be his Temporal Judge, to whom it appertained, if the cause had been just. Also the Bishops Chamberlain, being therewith charged, would in no wise take upon him so ungodly an Office. Yea, the whole Town was so offended with his unjust Condemnation, that the Bishops Servants could not get for their money so much use of as one Cord to tie him to the Stake, or a Tar-Barrel to burn him, but were constrained to cut the Cords of their Masters own Pavilion to serve their turn.

Nevertheless one Servant of the Bishops more ignorant and cruel than the rest, called Alexander Simmerwall, entreprising the Office of a Temporal Judge in that part, conveyed him to the Fire, where, against all natural reason of man, his boldness and hardness did more and more increafe, so that the Spirit of God working miraculously in him, made it manifest to the People, that his Cause and Articles were most just, and he innocently put down.

The Burning of Walter Mille.

Now when all things were ready for his death, and he conveyed with Armed men to the Fire, Oliphant bade him pass to the Stake: and he said, Nay, but wilt thou put me up with thy hand and take part of my death, thou shalt see me pass up gladly; for by the Law of God I am forbidden to put hands upon my self. Then Oliphant put him up with his hand, and he ascended gladly, saying, Intraibo ad Altare Dei, and desired that he might have space to speak to the People; the which Oliphant and other of the Burners denied, saying, That he had spoken overmuch, for the Bishops were altogether offended that the matter was so long continued. Then some of the young men committed both the Burners and the Bishops their Masters to the Devil, saying, that they believed they should lament that day, and desired the said Walter to speak what he pleased.

And so after he made his humble Supplication to God on his knees, he arose, and standing upon the Coals, said on his wife. Dear Friends, this cause why I suffer this day is not for any Crime laid to my charge (albeit I be a miserable Sinner before God,) but only for the defence of the Faith of Jesus Christ, set forth in the New and old Testament unto us; for which as the faithful Martyrs have offered themselves gladly before, being assured after the death of their Bodies of eternal Felicity, so this day I praise God, that he hath called me of his mercy among the rest of his Servants to seal up his Truth with my life: which as I have received it of him, so willingly I offer it to his glory. Therefore as you will escape the eternal Death, be no more seduced with the Lies of Priests, Monks, Friars, Priors, Abbots, Bishops, and the rest of the Set of Antichrist; but depend only upon Jesus Christ and his mercy, that ye may be delivered from condemnation. All that while there was great mourning and lamentation of the Multitude; for they perceiving his patience, stoutness and boldness, constancy and hardness, were not only moved and stirred up, but their hearts also were so inflamed, that he was the last Martyr that died in Scotland for the Religion. After the last of his Prayer, he was hoisted up upon the Stake, and being in the Fire, he said, Lord have mercy on me; Pray People while there is time: and so he constantly departed.

Persecution in Kent.

IN revolving the Registers of William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, I find moreover besides these above comprehended, in the time and Reign of King Henry, the Names of divers other, whereof some suffered Martyrdom for the like testimony of Gods Word, and some recanted, which albeit here they do come a little out of order, and should have been placed before in the beginning of King Henries Reign, yet rather than they should utterly be omitted, I thought here to give them a place, though somewhat out of time, yet not altogether, I trust, without fruit unto the Reader, being no less worthy to be Registered and preserved from oblivion, than other of their Fellows before them.

A Table of certain true Servants of God and Martyrs omitted, which were burned in the Diocess of Canterbury, under William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury; with the Names of their Persecutors and Accusers, Anno 1511.

The Articles whereupon these five blessed Martyrs were Accused and Condemned by the for, and Judges and Witnesses, were these as follow.

- FIRST, For holding that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the very true Body of Christ, but only material Bread in substance.
2. That Auricular Confession was not to be made to a Priest.
3. That no power is given of God to Priests, of ministring Sacraments, saying Mass, or other Divine Service, more than to Lay-men.
4. That the solemnization of Matrimony is not necessary to salvation of Souls, neither was instituted of God (for a Sacrament they meant.)
5. That the Sacrament of Extream Unction is not available nor necessary to Souls health.
6. That the Images of the Cross, of the Crucifix, of the blessed Virgin, and other Saints, are not to be worshipped; and that they which worship them do commit Idolatry.
7. That Pilgrimages to holy Places, and holy Relicks be not necessary, nor meritorious to Souls health.
8. That Invocation is not to be made to Saints, but only to God, and that he only heareth their Prayers.
9. That holy Bread and holy Waier have no more virtue after their Consecration than before.
10. That they have believed, taught, and holden all and every of the same damnable Opinions before; as they did at that present.
11. That where they now have confessed their Errours, they would not have so done but only for fear of manifest proofs brought against them, or else but for fear to be convicted by them, they would never have confessed the fame of their own accord.
12. That they have communed and talked of the said damnable Errours heretofore with divers other Persons, and have had Books concerning the same.

The order and form of Proceedings against these five Martyrs aforesaid: and first of William Carder, Anno 1511.

William Carder being convented before William Warham Archbishop, and his Chauceller Cuthbert Tonstall, Doctor Sylvester, Doctor Welles, Clement, Brown, with other more, the Notaries being William Paking, and David Couper, the Articles and Interrogatories above specified were laid unto him. Which Articles he there and then denied, affirming that he never did; nor doth hold any such Opinion, otherwise than becometh that every Christian man should do, ready to conform himself in all points to their Doctrine; and therefore to clear himself the better against those Interrogatories objected against him, he stood in denial of the same. The like also did every of the other four Martyrs after him.

All which notwithstanding, the uncharitable Archbishop seeking all advantages against him that he might, and more then right Law would give, brought in against him such witnesses, as before were abjured, whom he knew, for fear of relapse, durst do none other but disclose whatsoever they knew, to wit, Christopher Grebil, William Rich, Agnes Ives, John Grebil, Robert Hills, and Steven Castelm. Whose Depositions being taken, and the said Carder being asked what he could say for himself, he had nothing, he said, to produce against their Attestations, but submitted him unto their mercy: saying moreover, that if he had ever any misbelief of the Sacraments of the Church, contrary to the common holding of the Catholicks, he now was sorry and repented him thereof. Which being done, the Archbishop, this his submission notwithstanding, and notwithstanding that the Register maketh no mention of any Relapse, contrary to good Law, at least contrary to all Christian Charity, proceeded to the reading of his blind Sentence, and so condemned him: who neither stood stubbornly to that which he did hold, neither yet did hold any thing thing contrary to the mind of holy Scripture, to the execution of burning.

Then after him was called forth Agnes Grebil, and examined of the said twelve Articles above recited, which she in like manner denied, as the other had done before, putting her Adversaries to their proof. Then the Archbishop called for John Grebil her Husband, and Christopher and John Grebil her two Sons (who before had been abjured,) caused them upon their Oath to depose against their own natural Mother, and so they did.

First John Grebil the elder, her Husband, examined by virtue of his Oath, to say how Agnes his Wife hath adth doth believe of the Sacrament of the Altar, of going in Pilgrimage, Offerings and worshipping of Saints, Images, &c. and how long she hath holden thus, deposed; that first about the end of King Edwards days the fourth, in his house, by the teaching of John Iwe, the was brought to that belief, and so forth from thence daily, until the time of detection, she hath continued.

And besides that, said he, when my Children Christopher and John, being about seven years of age, were then taught of me in my house the said Error of the Sacrament of the Altar, and by the said Agnes my Wife divers times, she was always of one mind in the said misbelief against the Sacrament of the Altar, that it was not Christs Body, Flesh and Blood, but only Bread. Furthermore, being examined how he knew that she was steadfast in the said Error, he said that she always without contradiction affirmed this teaching, and said the said Opinion was good, and was well contented that her Children afore said were of the same Opinions against the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. Ex verbis Registri.

The Bishop, with his Catholick Doctors, not yet contented with this, to set the Husband against the Wife, proceeding further in their Catholick zeal, caused her two Children, Christopher and John to be produced, one of the age of two and twenty, the other of nineteen, against their own natural Mother. Who likewise, being pressed with their Oath, witnessed, and said, that the foresaid Agnes their Mother held, believed, taught, and defended, that the Sacrament of the Altar was but Bread, and not the very Body of Christs Flesh and Blood; That Baptism was no better in the Fount, than out of the Fount; That Confirmation was of no effect; that the solemnization of Matrimony was no Sacrament; That Confession to God alone was sufficient; Also that going in Pilgrimage and worshipping of Saints and Images was of none effect, &c. Item, That their Father and the said Agnes their Mother, held, taught, and commended of the said Errors within their house divers times, by the space of those three years past, as well on Holy-days, as Working days, affirming and teaching that the said Opinions were good and lawful, and to be holden and maintained, and agreement was made amongst them, that none of them should discover or betray either of these beliefs in any wise. Finally, that they never heard their said Father and Mother holding or teaching any other Opinions, than be the said Errors against the Sacrament of the Altar, and Pilgrimages, Offerings, worshipping of Saints and Images, as far as they could remember, &c. Ex verbis Registri.

Example of an unnatural Husband and of unnatural Children.

Great Impiety of the Husband to ward the wife Greater impiety in the Children to accuse their Mother.

Here hast thou (Christian reader) before thine eyes an horrible Spectacle of a singular, yea of a double impiety, first of an unnatural Husband, witnessing against his own Wife; and of as unnatural Children, accusing and witnessing against their own natural Mother. Which although they had so done, the cause being of it self just and true, (as it was) yet they had done more than nature would have led them to do. Now the case being such, as which by Gods Word standeth firm, found, and perfect, what Impiety were it for men to accuse a poor Innocent in case of Heresie, which is no Heresie? Now besides all this, the Husband to come in against his own Wife, and the Children to bring in the Knife whickeven to cut the Throat of their own natural Mother that bare them, that nourished them, that brought them up, what is this, but Impiety upon Impiety, prodigious and horrible for all Christian ears to hear! And yet the greatest Impiety of all! reflect in these pretended Catholicks and Clergy men, which were the authors and causers of all this mischief.

The cause why this good Woman so stood (as she did) in the denial of these foresaid Articles objected, was this, for that she never thought that her Husband and her own Children, who only were privy of her Religion, would testify against her. Whom notwithstanding after she perceived to come in, and to depose this against her, denying still (as she did, before) that she did ever hold such manner of Errors, and being now destitute of all Friends, and comfort, braut out in these words openly (as the Register reporteth) that she repented the time that ever she bare those Children of her Body.

And thus the Archbishop with his Doctors having now the thing that they fought for, albeit she was ready to deny all Errors, and to conform her self to their Religion, yet notwithstanding, they refusing her readiness and conformity proceeded to their Sentence, and so condemned her to death.

After whose Condemnation, next was brought to Execution Robert Harrison, who in like manner because he stood in his denial, contrary witnesses against him were produced, to wit, Christopher Grebil, William Rich, William Olberd, Agnes Iwe, who a little before had been abjured, and therefore were so much the more apt and applicable to serve the Bishops humor for danger of rapine. After the deposition and conviction of which witnesses, although he submitted himself to repentance and conformity, yet notwithstanding it would not be received, but Sentence was read, and he condemned with the other two afore said to the fire.

And thus these three were condemned and burned, and Certificate given up of them together to the King, from Warham the Archbishop, upon the same Anno 1511. Mart. 2. Ex Regist. Cantuariensi. Arch.

Over and besides these three godly Martyrs above recited, I find in the foresaid Registers of W. Warham two other like godly Martyrs also in the same year, and for the same twelve Articles above specified, to be condemned upon the depositions of certain witnesses brought in against them, to wit, Thomas Harwood, Phil. Harwood, John Steven Capelyn, William Baker, Robert Reynold, John Bampton, Robert Bright, William Rich, &c. Whereupon they were adjudged likewise for Heretics to be burned, the year afore said, 1511. The names of which two Martyrs were John Brown and Edward Walker. Ex Regist. W. Warh. fol. 179.

Now as you have heard the names of these blessed Martyrs, with their Articles recited, let us also hear the Tenor of the Bishops Sentence, by the which they were condemned one after another. Their Sentence containeth one uniform manner of words in form as followeth.

The Tenor of the Sentence.

Moreover, besides these five blessed Saints of God, whom they to cruelly by their Sentence did condemn to death, we find also in the same Registers of William Warham, a great number of other whom they for the same Doctrine and like Articles caused to be apprehended and put to open Recantation; the Names of which Persons in the Catalogue here following be expressed.

The Articles laid to these Abjurers appear in the Registers to be the same which before were objected to the other five Martyrs aforesaid, which was for believing and defending.

1. First, that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the True Body of Christ, but material Bread.
2. That Confession of Sins ought not to be made to a Priest.
3. That there is no more power given of God to a Priest, than to a Lay-man.
4. That the solemnization of Matrimony is not necessary for the weal of mans Soul.
5. That the Sacrament of extreame Unction, called Aneyling, is not profitable nor necessary for mans Soul.
6. That Pilgrimages to holy and devout places, be not necessary nor meritorious for mans Soul.
7. That Images of Saints, or of the Crucifix, or of our Lady, are not to be worshipped.
8. That a man should pray to no Saint, but only to God.
9. That holy Water and holy Bread is not better after the Benediction made by the Priest, Ex verbis Registr. W. Warham, fol. 176. An. 1511.

Their Articles.

Ex Registr. W. Warham.

By these Articles and Abjurations of the fore-named persons, thou shalt to understand, Christian Reader, what Doctrine of Religion was here stirring in this our Realm of England, before the time that the name of Martin Luther was ever heard of here amongst us.

Three divers sorts of Judgments amongst the Papists, against Hereticks as they call them.

As touching the penance and penalty enjoined to these aforesaid, as also to all other such like, first here is to be noted, that the Catholick Fathers, in their Processe of Heretical pravity, have three divers and distinct kinds of Judgments and proceedings.

For some they judge to be burned, to the intent that other being brought into terror by them, they might therefore more quietly hold up their Kingdom, and Reign as they list. And thus condemned they these five aforesaid, and notwithstanding they were willing to submit themselves to the bosom of the Mother Church, yet could they not be received, as by the words of the Register, and by the tenour of their Sentence above-specified, may well appear.

And this sort of Persons, thus by them condemned, consisteth either in such as have been before abjured, and fallen again into relapse; or else such as stand constantly in their Doctrine, and refuse to abjure; or else such as they intend to make a terrour and example to all other, notwithstanding that they be willing and ready to submit themselves, and yet cannot be received: and of this last sort were these five Martyrs last named. So was also John Lambert, who submitting himself to the King could not be accepted. So was likewise Richard Mekin the silly Lad; and the three Women of Gernesey, whose submission would not serve to save their lives, with many other in like case. Against this sort of Persons, the Process which the Papists use is this. First, after they began once to be suspected by some Promoter, they are denounced and cried; then by virtue of Inquisition they are taken and clapt fast in Irons in Prison; from thence they are brought forth at list to examination, if they be not before killed by Famine, cold, or straightness of the Prison, then be Articles drawn, or rather wrested out of their writings or preachings, and they put to their Oath, to answer truly to every point and circumstance articulated against them. Which Articles if they seem to deny, or false by true expounding, then are Witnesses called in and admitted, what witnesses soever they are be they never so much infamous, Usurers, Ribalds, Women, yea, and common Harlots. Or if no other Witnesses can be found, then is the Husband brought in and forced to swear against the Wife or the Wife against the Husband, or the Children against the natural Mother, as in this example of Agnes Greibell. Or if no such witness at all can be found, then are they straitened upon the Rack, or by other bitter Torments forced to confess their knowledge, and to teach others. Neither must any be suffered to come to them, what need soever they have. Neither must any publick or quiet audience be given them to speak for themselves, till at last Sentence be read against them, to give them up to the Secular Arm, or to degrade them, if they be Priests, and so to burn them. Ex biss. Coblai, contra Hussitas.

Ex biss. Coblai, contra Hussitas.

And yet the malignity of these Adversaries doth not here cease. For after that the fire hath consumed their Bodies, then they fall upon their Books, and condemn them in like manner to be burned, and no man must be so hardy as to read them, or keep them, under pain of Heresie. But before they have abolished these Books, first they gather Articles out of them, such as they list themselves, and so perversely wrest and wring them after their own purpose, falsely, and contrary to the right meaning of the Author, as may seem, after their putting down, to be most Heretical and execrable. Which being done, and the Books then abolished, that no man may confer them with their Articles, to spie their falsehood; then they divulge and set abroad those Articles, in such sort as Princes and People may see what Hereticks they were. And this is the rigor of their process and proceeding against these Persons whom thus they purpose to condemn and burn.

To the second order belongeth that sort of Hereticks whom these Papists do not condemn to death, but assign them unto Monasteries, there to continue, and to fast all their life, In pane doloris & aqua angustia, that is, with Bread of sorrow, and Water of affliction; and that they should not remove one mile out of the precinct of the said Monastery so long as they lived, without they were otherwise by the Archbishop himself or his Successors dispensed withal. Albeit many times the said persons were so dispensed withal, that their Penance of Bread and Water was turned for them to woolward Wednesdays and Fridays every week, or some other like punishment, &c.

The third kind of Hereticks were those whom these Prelates did judge not to perpetual Prison, but only enjoined them Penance, either to stand before the Preacher, or else to bear a Fagot about the Market, or in Procession; or else to wear the Picture of a Fagot bordered on their left sleeves, without any Cloak or Gown upon the same; or else to kneel at the saying of certain Masses, or to say so many Pater noster, Ave, and Creed, to such or such a Saint: or to go in Pilgrimage to such or such a place; or else to bear a Fagot to the burning of some Heretick; or else to fast certain Fridays Bread and Water; or if it were a Woman, to wear no smock on Fri days, but to go woolward, &c. As appeareth, Regist. fol. 159.

And thus much by the way out of the Register of William Warham aforesaid, like as also out of other Bishops Registers many more such like matters and examples might be collected, if either leisure would serve me to search, or if the largeness of this Volum would suffer all to be inserted that might be found. Howbeit, amongst many other things omitted, the story and Martyrdom of Launcelot and his fellows is not to be forgotten. The Story of whom with their names is this.

About the year of our Lord 1539. one John a Painter, and Giles German were accused of Heresie, and whilst they were in examination at London before the Bishop and other Judges, by chance there came in one of the Kings Servants named Launcelot, a very tall man, and of no less godly mind and disposition, than strong and tall of Body.

This man standing by, seemed by his countenance and gesture to favour both the cause and the poor men his Friends. Whereupon he being apprehended, was examined and condemned together with them. And the next day at five of the Clock in the morning was carried with them into Saint Giles in the field, and there burned, there being but a small concourse or Company of People at their death.

The Story of one Sile, Martyr.

In the Company and Fellowship of these blessed Saints and Martyrs of Christ, which innocently suffered within the time of King Henries Reign, for the Testimony of Gods Word and Truth, an other good man also cometh to my mind, not to be excluded out of this number, who was with like cruelty oppressed, and burned in Smithfield about the latter end of Cuthbert Tonstalls time, Bishop of London. Whose name was called Sile, as is credibly reported unto us by a worthy and ancient Knight, named Sir Robert Outred, who was the same time present himself at his burning and Martyrdom, and eie witness of the same. With him there was burned also a Book of the Apocalypse, which belike he was wont to read upon. This Book when he saw fastened unto the Stake, to be burned with him; lifting up his voyce, O blessed Apocalypse, said he, how happy am I, that shall be burned with thee? And so this good man and the blessed Apocalypse were both together in the fire consumed.

And thus (through the gracious supportation of Christ our Lord) we have run over these seven and thirty laborious years of King Henries Reign. Under whose time and governance, such Acts and Records, Troubles, Persecutions, Recantations, Praefates, Alterations, and Reformation as then happened in the Church, we have here discoursed, with such Statutes, Injunctions and Proclamations, as by him were set forth in causes and matters to the said Church appertaining: Albeit not comprehending all things so fully as might be, yet pretermittting few things as we could, of such matters as came to our hands; save only that certain Instruments, with a few other occurrences somewhat pertaining to the course of this Kings History, have past our hands, as the false lying Bull of Pope Leo the tenth, against M. Luther, with the form also of the said M. Luthers appeal from the Pope unto a general Council. All which, with other matters more besides omitted, we have deferred by themselves hereafter to be exhibited and declared in the sequel of this present Story, as in his due place shall appear.

In the mean season, amongst other omissions here overpast, so far as as a certain instrument of the Popes Sentence definitive against King Henries first divorce with Lady Katharine Dowager hath of late come to our hands, containing matter neither impertinent nor unmeet to be committed to History, I thought here presently to place the same, to the intent that the Reader seeing the arrogant and impudent presumption of the Pope in the said Sentence, going about by force and Authority so to constrain and compel Kings and Princes against their wills, and against right and Scripture to apply to his imperious purpose, may the better understand thereby what was the true cause and ground why the King first began to take stomach against the Pope, and to send him clean packing out of this Realm. But before I shall produce this aforesaid Sentence definitive of the Pope, to make the matter more plain to the Reader, it shall not be amiss, first to decipher and rip up the original original of such occasions, as shall induce the Reader to the better understanding of this falling out between the King and the Pope.

For so I find by the Letters of Dr. Stephen Gardiner, written to Cardinal Wolsey from Rome, (at what time he and Fox were sent Ambassadors by the King to Pope Clement the Seventh, about the expedition of the Kings Divorce, An. 1532.) that the said Pope Clement, with the counsel of the Cardinal Sanctorum quatuor and other Cardinals, at first was well willing and very inclinable to the accomplishment and satisfaction of the Kings desire in that behalf, and that for divers respects.

The Causes moving the Pope to the first to favour the cause of the Kings Divorce.

As first, for the great benefits received, and the singular devotion of the King toward the See Apostolick, in taking War for the Churches cause, in surceasing War at the Popes desire, and especially in procuring the Popes deliverance, whereby the Pope then thought himself with his whole See much obliged to the King in all respects, to pass by his Authority whatsoever reasonably might be granted in gratifying the Kings so ample merits and deserts.

* This Book, called the Kings Book, was a certain Treatise concerning the Reasons and Arguments of divers Learned men for the liberal dissolution of the Kings Marriage, with Answer also to the contrary Objections of Azei and others.

And this Book here sent to the Pope. The sixth Cause.

Secondly, for the evident Reasons and substantial Arguments in the * Kings Book contained, which seemed well to satisfy the Popes liking, and to remove away all scruples.

Thirdly, for the good opinion and confidence that the Pope had in the excellent Wisdom, profound Learning, and mature Judgment of the King, which the Pope (as he said in formal words) would sooner lean unto, than unto any other Learned mans mind or sentence, so that the Kings Reasons, he said, must needs be of great efficacy and strength of themselves to order and direct this matter.

The fourth cause moving the Pope to favour the Kings Request, was, for the quiet and tranquillity of his Conscience, which otherwise in that unlawful Marriage with his Brothers Wife could not be settled.

The fifth cause was for the consideration of the perils and dangers, which otherwise might happen to the Realm by the pretended Titles of the King of Scots, and other, without any Heir Male to establish the Kings Succession: for the avoiding of which perils, and also for the other causes above rehearsed, the Pope shewed himself at that time propense and forward to promote and set forward the Kings desired purpose in that behalf.

And thus much touching this by-matter I thought here to suggest and repeat to the Reader, albeit the same is also sufficiently expressed before: to the end that the studious Reader pondering these first proceedings of the Pope, and comparing them with this Sentence definitive which under followeth, may the better understand what inconstant levity, what false dealing, what crafty packing, and what contrariety in it self is in this holy See of Rome, as by this case of the Pope may well appear; who in short time, after all this, was so clean altered from that he was, that whereas before he pretended to esteem so gratefully the Kings Travel and Benefits exhibited to the See Apostolick, in his defence against the Emperour and the Spaniards, now he joyntly utterly with the Cesarians against the King. And where before he so greatly magnified the Kings profound Learning, and mature Judgment, esteeming his mind and sentence above all other Learned men, to be as a Judge sufficient in the direction of this case; now turning head to the tayl, he utterly refuseth to bring the matter in judicium Orbis, but will needs detain it at home.

Again, where before he pretended a tender provision for the State of this Realm, now he setteth all other Realms against it: and finally, where he before seemed to respect the quiet and tranquillity of the Kings Conscience, now he goeth about to command and compel the King, against his Will and Conscience, to do clean contrary to that which he himself before in his Judgment had allowed, thinking to have the King at his beck, and to do and undo what he listed and commanded; as by the tenour and true Copy of this his Sentence definitive ye may understand. Which as it came newly to our hands, I thought here to exhibit unto the world, that all men might see what just cause the King had, being so presumptuously provoked by the Pope, to shake of his proud Authority, and utterly to exile him out of his Realm. Mark, I pray thee, the manner of the Popes proud Sentence how presumptuously it proceedeth,

The double dealing of the Pope. The Pope false, double and contrary to himself.

The effect in English.

THe effect of this Sentence is as much to mean in English, That Pope Clement the Seventh, with the consent of his other Brethren the Cardinals assembled together in the Consistory, sitting there in the Throne of Justice, calling upon the Name of Christ, and having God only before his eyes, doth pronounce, define and declare in the cause and causes between his dear Daughter Katherine Queen of England appealing to the See Apostolick, and his beloved (d) Son Henry the Eighth King of England, concerning the validity and invalidity of the Matrimony heretofore contracted between them, and yet depending in the Consistory Court of the said Pope Clement; that the said Matrimony always hath, (e) and still doth stand firm and Canonical, and that the Issue proceeding, or which shall proceed of the same, standeth, and shall stand lawful and legitimate; and that the forsaide Henry King of England is and shall be bound and obliet to the Matrimonial society and cohabitation with the said Lady Katherine his lawful Wife and Queen, to hold and maintain her with such love and princely honour, as becometh a loving Husband, and his Kingly honour to do.

(a) The Pope saith in the Throne of Justice, with the like humility and true fashion, as Luther said in the fear of the highest, and notwithstanding saith in the Temple of God.

(b) And said never a word.

(c) I say, having no bribe of money in his hands, nor any fear of the Emperor in his heart.

(d) Not this a glorious Father that will have no beggars to his Son and Daughters, but Emperours, Kings and Queens?

(e) And why then did you send Queenes to England to dissolve the same Matrimony before as appeareth above?

(f) By his own Canon Law, he meaneth, and not by the Law of God.

(g) Here thou shalt see (good Reader) how the Pope may and doth erre like a false Prophet. For where he thought to put the King to silence, his silence was lighted upon himself, and whereby the Pope is driven himself to stand mute in England, and God grant he may so stand for ever, Amen.

Also, that the said Henry King of England, if he shall refuse so to perform and accomplish all and singular the premises, as he is effectually manner is to be condemned and compelled thereunto by all remedies of (f) the Law, and enforced, according as we do condemn, compel, and enforce him so to do, providing, that all maledictions and refusals whatsoever made by the said King Henry against the said Queen Katherine, upon the invalidity of the said Marriage, to have been and be judged unlawful and unjust; and the said King from henceforth for ever to hold his peace, and not to be heard in any Court hereafter (g) to speak touching the invalidity of the said Matrimony: like as we also do here will and charge him to hold his peace, and do put him to perpetual silence herein; willing moreover and adjudging the said Henry to be condemned, and presently here we do condemn him in the expenses on the said Queen Katherine's behalf here in our Court, expended and employed in traversing the forsaide cause, the valuation of which expenses we reserve to our selves to be limited and taxed, as we shall judge meet hereafter.

We do so pronounce. I.

At Rome in our Apostolical Palace publicly in our Consistory, 23. Mart. M.D.XXXIV.

Blosius.

Pope Leo his Bull against Luther, and the Appellation of M. Luther, from the Pope by way of Appeal.

Now as you have heard the presumptuous and arrogant Sentence of Pope Clement, wherein he taketh upon him, contrary to the Ordinance of God in his Levitical Law (as is before shewed) and contrary to the best learned Judgments of Christendom, to command and compel the King, against his Conscience, to retain in Matrimony his Brothers Wife; here followeth in like order to be inferred, according to my promise, another like wicked, blasphemous and slanderous Bull of Pope Leo against Martin Luther, with the just Appellation also of the said Martin Luther from the Pope to a general Council. Wherein may appear to all men the lying spirit of the Pope, both in teaching most Heretical Doctrine, derogating from the Blood of Christ, and also falsely depraving and perverting the sound Doctrine of Luther, falsely and untruly charging him with Heresie, when he is the greater Heretick himself. For what Heretick would ever say that the Church of Rome was consecrated and sanctified by the Blood of Peter, but only the Pope? Or who would call this Heresie, to refer all our salvation and sanctification only and totally to the Blood of the Son of God, unless he were an Heretick of all Hereticks himself?

After the like dealing we read, 2 Reg. 18. of wicked King Abab, who being only the disturber of Israel himself, crieth out upon Elias for troubling Israel. So here in semblable wise Pope Leo, with what heaps of tragical words and exclamations doth he fare and rage against the true Servant of God, poor Luther, for disturbing the Church of God, when it is the Pope only and his Fathers House that troubleth, and long hath troubled the true Church of the Lord, as by his doings all the world may see enough and too much. In the mean time read, I beseech thee, with judgment this impudent and false slanderous Bull of the Pope, with the Appeal also of Luther again from the said Pope. The Copy whereof; because it is rare to be gotten, and hath not been hitherto commonly seen, being before omitted, I thought to commit here to history, as I had it out of certain Registers; the manner and tenour whereof is this that followeth.

A Copy of the Bull of Pope Leo the Tenth, no less slanderous than barbarous, against Martin Luther and his Doctrine.

Leo Papa X.

LEO Episcopus servus servorum Dei ad perpetuam rei memoriam: Exurge Domine & judica causam tuam. Memor esto opprobriorum eorum quae ab insipientibus sunt tota die. Inclina aurem tuam ad preces nostras, quoniam surrexerunt Vulpes quarentes demoliri vineam, cuius in torcular solus calcas, & ascensus ad Patrem, ejus curam, regimen, et administrationem Petro tanquam capiti, et tuo Vicario, ejusque successoribus in Christo triumphantis Ecclesiae commissisti, &c.

The said slanderous and barbarous Bull of Pope Leo the Tenth, against Luther, in English; with the Answer of Luther joyned to the same.

LEO Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, for a perpetual memory: Rise up, O Lord, and judge thy cause; remember the rebukes wherewith we are scorned all the day long of foolish Rebukers. Incline thine ear unto our Prayers; for Foxes are risen up, seeking to destroy thy Vineyard, the Vinepress whereof thou only hast troden, and ascending up to thy Father hast committed the charge and regiment thereof unto Peter as chief Head, and to thy Vicar and his Successors. The wild Boar out of the wood seeketh to exterminate and root up the Vineyard. Rise up Peter, and for this thy Pastoral charge committed to thee from above, intend to the cause of the holy Church of Rome, the Mother of all Churches and of our Faith, which thou by the commandment of God didst consecrate with thine own Blood; against which (as thou hast foretold us) false holders by liars have risen up, bringing in Seeds of perdition; to their own speedy destruction. Whose Tongue is like fire, full of unquietness, and replenished with deadly poison; who having a wicked zeal, and nourishing contentious in their hearts, do brag and lie against the Verity.

Rise up Paul also, we pray thee, which hast illuminated the same Church with thy Doctrine and like Martyrdom. For now is sprung up a new Porphyry, who as the said Porphyry then unjustly did slander the holy Apostles, so semblably doth this man now slandered, revile, rebukes, bite, and bark against the holy Bishops our Predecessors, not in beseeching them, but in rebuking them. And where he distrusteth his cause, there he falleth to opprobrious checks and rebukes, after the wonted use of Hereticks, whose uttermost refuge is this (as Hierom saith) that when they see their cause go to wreck, then like Serpents they cast out the venom with their Tongue, and when they see themselves near to be overcome, they fall to railing. For though Heresies (as thou saist) must needs be, for the exercise of the Faithful; yet lest these Heresies should further increase, and these Foxes gather strength against us, it is needful that by thy means and help they be suppressed and extinguished at the beginning.

Finally,

The Pope playeth with Luther, as Archad played with David, saying, he was the trouble of Israel, while he was the himself and his Fathers House that do did.

The Bull of Pope Leo against Luther.

Here beginneth and mark good Reader, how the Church of Rome of St. Peter, and notably the Blood of Christ.

Finally, let all the whole universal Church of Gods Saints and Doctors rise up, whose true expounding of holy Scriptures being rejected, certain Persons (whose hearts the Father of Israhel blinded) wife in their own conceits (as the manner of Hereticks is) do expound the Scriptures otherwise than the holy Ghost doth require, following only their own sense of ambition and vain glory; yea rather do wrest and adulterate the Scriptures. So that, as Hierome saith, now they make it not the Gospel of Christ, but of man, or which is worse, of the Devil.

Let all the holy Church, I say, rise up, and with the blessed Apostles together make intercession to Almighty God, that the Errors of all Schismatics being rooted and stocked up, his holy Church may be conserved in peace and unity.

Respectively.

For of late (which for sorrow we cannot express) by credible information and also by Publick Fame it hath come to our ears, yea we have seen also and read with our eyes divers and sundry Errors, of which some have been condemned by Councils, and Constitutions of our Predecessors, containing expressly the Heresies of the Greeks and of the Bohemians; some again respectively, either Heretical, or false, or slanderous, or offensive to good ears, or such as may seduce simple minds, newly to be raised up, by certain false pretended Gospellers; who, by curious pride, seeking worldly glory against the Doctrine of the Apostles, would be more wise than becometh them, whose babbling (as Saint Hierome calleth it) without Authority of the Scripture, would find no credit, unless they should seem to confirm their false Doctrine even with Testimonies of the Scripture, but yet falsely interpreted. Which worketh us so much the more grief, for that those Heresies be sprung in the noble Nation of the Germans, unto the which Nation we with our Predecessors have always born special favour and affection. For after the Empire first translated by the Church of Rome, from the Greeks unto the Germans, the said our Predecessors and we have always had them as special patrons and defenders of this our Church, and they have always shewed themselves as most earnest suppressors of Heresies; as witnesses whereof yet remain those laudable Constitutions of German Emperours; set forth and confirmed by our Predecessors, for the liberty of the Church, and for expelling Hereticks out of all Germany, and that under grievous penalty and loss of all their Goods and Lands. Which Constitutions, if they were observed this present day, both we and they should now be free from this disturbance.

The Germans in old times most addicted to Popery above all other Nations.

Furthermore, the Heresie of the Hussites, Wicklows, and of Hierome of Prague, being condemned and punished in the Council of Constance, doth witness the same. Moreover, so much Blood of the Germans, spilt fighting against the Bohemians, doth witness the same. To conclude, the same also is confirmed and witnessed by the learned and true Confutation, Reprobation, and Condemnation set forth by the Universities of Colen and Leovine in Germany, against the foresaid Errors. Many other witnesses also we might alledge, which here (left we should seem to write a story) we premit.

Wherefore we, for the charge of our Pastoral Office committed unto us, can no longer forbear or wink at the pestiferous poison of these foresaid Errors: of the which Errors we thought here good to recite certain; the tenor of which is this as followeth.

Articles of Luther.

It is an old Heresie to say, that the Sacraments of the new Law do give grace to them, qui non ponunt obicem, (i.) which have in themselves, to the contrary, no let.

To deny that sin remaineth in a Child after his Baptism, as to tread down Paul and Christ under foot.

The origine of sin, although no actual sin do follow after, doth stay the Soul, leaving the Body, from the entrance into Heaven.

Unperfect charity of a man departing must needs bring with it great fear, which is enough to deserve the pain of Purgatory, and stoppeth the entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven.

To say that Penance standeth of three parts, to wit, Contrition, Confession, Satisfaction, is not founded in holy Scriptures, nor in ancient, holy, and Christian Doctors.

Contrition, which a man sheweth up in himself, by discussing, remembering and detesting his sins, in revelling his former years in bitterness of Soul, and in pondering the weight, number and filthiness of his sins, the losing of eternal Bliss, and getting of eternal Damnation: this Contrition maketh a man an hypocrite, and a great sinner.

It is an old Proverb, and to be preferred before the Doctrine of all that have written hundreds of Contrition: from henceforth to transgress no more. The chiefest and the best Penance is a new life.

Repentance is a new life.

Neither presume to confess thy venial sins, nor yet any thy mortal sins; for it is impossible to remember all the mortal sins that thou hast committed, and therefore in the Primitive Church they confessed the mortal sins which only were manifest.

While we seek to number up all our sins sincerely unto the Priest, we mean nothing else herein, but that we will leave nothing to the mercy of God to be forgiven.

In Confession no man hath his sins forgiven, except he believe, when the Priest forgiveth, the same to be remitted: yea, otherwise his sin remaineth unforgiven, unless he believe the same to be forgiven. For else remission of the Priest, and giving of Grace doth not suffice, except belief come on his part that is remitted.

Think not thy sin to be absolved for the worthiness of thy contrition, but for the word of Christ, Whatsoever thou dost, &c. When thou art absolved of the Priest, trust confidently upon those words, and believe firmly, thy self to be absolved, and then art thou truly remitted.

Admit the party that is confessed were not contrite, (which is impossible) or that the Priest pronounced the words of losing not in earnest, but in jest; yet if the party believe that he is absolved, he is truly absolved indeed.

Impossible, because it cannot be that the Faith of the true Confessor can be without caution.

In the Sacrament of Penance and Absolution, the Pope or Bishop do no more then any inferior Priest can do: yea, and where a Priest is not to be had, there every Christian man, yea or Christian Woman standeth in as good stead.

None ought to say to the Priest, that he is contrite; neither ought the Priest to ask any such matter.

He meaneth this, because that as no man knoweth all his sins; so no man can be contrite for them sufficiently.

It is a great Error of them which come to the holy Men, trusting upon this, that they are confessed, that their Conscience grudgeth them in no deadly sin, that they have said their Prayers, and done such other preparatives before; all those do eat and drink to their own judgment; but if they believe there to obtain Gods grace this Faith maketh them pure and worthy.

It were good that the Church should determine in a general Council, Lay-men to communicate under both kinds; and the Bohemians so doing be therein neither Hereticks nor Schismatics.

The Treasuries out of which the Pope doth grant his Indulgences, are not the merits of Christ, nor of his Saints.

Indulgences and Pardons be a deceitful seducing of the Faithful, and hindrance to good works, and are in the number of them which be things lawful, but not expedient.

This he correcteth in his assertions of these Articles, and saith, that Indulgences be neither lawful nor expedient. And likewise he correcteth and revoketh the Articles.

Pardons and Indulgences, to them which have them, avail not to remission of the punishment due before God for actual sins committed.

They which think that Indulgences are wholesome and conducive to the fruit of the Spirit, are deceived.

Indulgences are only necessary for publick Transgressions, and are only granted to them that are obstinate and impatient.

Indulgences and Pardons are unprofitable to six sorts of persons. First, To them that be dead, or lie in dying. Secondly, To them that be weak and infirm. Thirdly, To such as have lawful impediments. Fourthly, To them that have not offended. Fifthly, To such as have offended, but not publickly. Sixthly, To those that amend and do well.

Excommunications be only outward punishments, and do not deprive a man of the publick Spiritual Prayers of the Church.

Indulgences and Pardons taken clean away.

Christians are to be taught rather to love Excommunication, than to dread it.

The Bishop of Rome, Successor of Peter, is not the Vicar of Christ, ordained by Christ and St. Peter, to have Authority over all the Churches in the World.

The

The Words of Chriſt to Peter, Whatſoever thou looſeſt &c. Matth. 16. extend no further but onely to thoſe things which he bound of Peter himſelf.

It is not in the Hands either of the Church or of the Pope to make Articles of the Faith, yea, or Laws either of manners or good works.

Albeit the Pope with a greatpart of the Church teaching ſo or ſe, do not err therein; yet it is no ſin nor Hereſie for a Man to hold contrary to them, namely, in ſuch things which are not neceſſary to ſalvation, ſo long as it is not otherwiſe condemned or approved by a General Council.

We have a way made plain unto us to infringe the Authority of Councils and freely to gainſay their doings, and to judge upon their Decrees, and boldly to ſpeak our knowledge whatſoever we judge to be true, whether the ſame be approved or reproved by any General Council.

Some of the Articles of John Huſ, condemned in the Council of Conſtance, are Chriſtians, moſt true and Evangelical, whom the Univerſal Church cannot condemn. In every good work the Juſt Man ſinneth.

Every good work of ours, when it is beſt done, it is a venial ſin.

To burn Hereticks is againſt the will of the Spirit. To fight againſt the Turks is to repugn againſt God, Viſiting our Iniquities by them.

Free-will after ſin is a title, and name onely of a thing, and while man doth that which lieth in him, he ſinneth deadly.

Purgatory cannot be proved out of Holy Scripture which is Canonical.

Souls in Purgatory be not certain of their ſafety, at leaſt not all neither is it proved by Reaſons or by Scriptures, that they be utterly out of the State to deſerve or increaſe charity.

Souls in Purgatory do ſin without intermiſſion, ſo long as they ſeek reſt, and dread puniſhment.

The Souls being delivered out of Purgatory by the Prayers of the living be leſſe bleſſed, than if they had ſatisfied for themſelves.

Eccleſiaſtical Prelates and worldly Princes ſhould not do amiſſe, if they would ſcower away all the bags of begging Friars.

All which Errors there is no Man in his right wits but he knoweth the ſame, in their ſeveral reſpects, how peccant they be, how pernicious, how much they ſeducer godly and ſimple minds, and finally, how much they be againſt all charity, and againſt the Reverence of the Holy Church of Rome the Mother of all faithful, and Miſtreſs of the Faith it ſelf, and againſt the ſineſs and ſtrength of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, which is obedience, the Fountain and Welſpring of all vertues, and without the which every man is to be convinced eaſily to be an Infidel.

We therefore deſiring to proceed in the premiſſes more earnestly, as behooveth in things of moſt importance, and meaning to cut off the courſe of this peſtilentous and cankered diſeaſe, left it ſhould ſpread it ſelf further in the Lords field, like hurtful Brambles or Briars, and uſing upon the ſaid Errors, and every of them, diligent, debating, ſtreight examination, ripe deliberation: And further, weighing and thoroughly liſting all and every of the ſame together, with our reverend Brethren the Cardinals of the Church of Rome, the Priors of the Orders regular, or Miniſters General, alſo with divers other Protectors and Maſters of Divinity, and of both the Laws, and thoſe the beſt learned; do find the foreſaid Errors or Articles, reſpectively, as is aforeſaid, not to be Catholick, nor to be taught as Catholick, but to be againſt the Doctrin or Tradition of the Catholick Church, and againſt the true interpretation of Holy Scripture, received by the ſame; to whoſe Authority Auguſtine thought he ought ſo much to lean, that he would not (as he ſaid) have believed the Goſpel, if the Authority of the Church had not thereunto moved him.

For by theſe Errors, or at leaſt be ſome of them, it followeth conſequently, that the ſame Church, which is guided by the Holy Ghoſt, now doth, and ever hath erred: which is utterly againſt that which Chriſt at the time of his aſcenſion (as we read in the Holy Goſpel of Matthew) promiſed to his Diſciples, ſaying, I am with you until the end of the world, &c. And alſo againſt the Determination of the Holy Fathers, againſt the expreſs Ordinances or Canons of Councils and head Biſhops, whom not to obey hath always been the cauſe and nurſe of all Hereſies and Schiſms, as Cyprian doth witneſs.

Wherefore by the Council and Aſſent of the ſaid our Reverend Brethren, upon due conſideration of all and ſingular the Premiſſes, by the Authority of Almighty God, and of the Bleſſed Apoſtles, of Peter and Paul, and our own, we do condemn, reprove, and utterly reject all and ſingular the Articles or Errors aforeſaid reſpectively, as ſome to be Heretick, ſome to be ſlanderous, ſome to be offenſive to godly ears, or elſe ſeducing ſimple minds, and regugnant to the Catholick truth, and by the tenour hereof we here decree, and declare that they ought of all Chriſtian People, both Men and Women, to be taken as damned, reprov'd and rejected. And therefore forbidding here under pain of the Greater Curſe and Excommunication, loſing of their Dignities, whether they be Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal, and to be deprived and made uncapable of all Regular Orders and Priviledges, given and granted by the See Apoſtolick, of what condition ſoever they be; alſo of loſing of their liberties to hold General Schools, to read and profeſs any Science and Faculty; of loſing alſo their Tenures and Poſſeſſions, and of inhability for ever to recover the ſame again, or any other; moreover, under pain of ſecluding from Chriſtian Burial, yea and of Treafon alſo, and incurring ſuch pains and puniſhments expreſſed in the Law, as are due for all Hereticks and Fautors of the ſame ſame; we charge and command all and ſingular Chriſtian People, both Men and Women, as well of the Laity, as of the Clergy, both Secular and alſo Regular, of what Order ſoever they be, and briefly all other Perſons, of what degree or condition ſoever they be, or in what Dignity ſoever they are placed, either Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal; as firſt the Cardinals of the Holy Church of Rome, Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, which the Prelates and Heads of the Churches Patriarchical, Metropolitan, or other Cathedral, Collegiate, and other ſmall and inferior Churches; alſo all Clerks and other Perſons Eccleſiaſtical, as Abbots, Priors, or Miniſters, general or particular, Brethren, or Religious Men, exempt and not exempt; Alſo Univerſities of Schools, and all other, as well Secular Priests, as Regular and Religious Perſons of all Orders, yea of the begging Friars alſo. Item, Kings, Electors of the Imperial Crown, Princes, Dukes, Marqueſſes, Barons, Captains, Conductors and Servitors, and all Officers, Judges, Notaries, whether they be Eccleſiaſtical, or Secular; Communalities, Univerſities, Dominions, Cities, Caſtles, Lordſhips, and places, with the Inhabiters of the ſame; and finally all other Perſons whatſoever, Eccleſiaſtical or Regular, diſperſed in whatſoever places through the whole "Univerſal World, or which ſhall be hereafter diſperſed, but eſpecially in high Germany, that they ſhall not preſume publicly or privately under any manner of pretence or colour, colourably or expreſſly, or how elſe ſoever, to hold, maintain, defend, preach, or favour the foreſaid Errors or any of them, or any ſuch perverſe Doctrin.

Over and beſides, ſoſomuch as the foreſaid Errors, and many other are contained in the Books or Writings of the foreſaid Martin Luther, therefore we condemn, reprove, and utterly reject, the foreſaid Books, and all the Writings of the ſaid Martin, with his Preachings, in what tongue ſoever they are contained, willing and commanding under the vertue of Holy Obedience, and incurring the Penalties aforeſaid, to all and ſingular Chriſtian People, both Men and Women above rehearſed, that they preſume not by any manner of ways, directly, colourably or expreſſly, privily or openly, either in their Houſes, in other publique or private places, to read, hold, preach, print, publiſh, or defend, either by themſelves or by others, but ſtraightways after the publishing hereof, they do burn or cause to be burned the said errors, by their Ordinaries diligently being searched out, and solemnly presented in the sight of the whole Clergy and the People, under all and singular the penalties aforesaid.

"This Article is true if the work should be brought to be tried by Gods judgment. And here also he correcteth himself in this word verbal, because all sins are damnable. Concilium malignatum.

Let us see here what ye have not done. first Luther generally libelled himself; but you rejected him: he then referred him to the judgement of 4 Universities in Germany; it would not be taken he the Pope to the Pope rejected him: then he appealed from the Pope to the Council, neither did the Pope admit that: he required, to be convinced by the Scriptures, the Pope neither would nor could so do And yet the Pope faith he left nothing undone Item. 8. Here note, good reader, that Luther appealed from the Pope to the Council two years before this Bull which was Anno. 1518.

The Popes exhortation to Luther.

Now as touching the said Martin, O good Lord, what have we left undone? what have we left unattempted? what fatherly charity have we not shewed, whereby to have reduced him from these errors? For after that we did cite him, thinking to proceed with him more favourably, we invited and exhorted him as well by divers Tractations had with our Legate, as by our own Letters, that he would relinquish the forefaid Errors, or else having safe Conduct offered to him, with Money necessary for his journey, to come to us without any fear or dread, which perfect charity ought to cast out, but openly to our Face. Which if he had done, of truth we think no less, but that reforming himself, he would have Recognized his Errors, neither should have found so many faults in the Court of Rome, which he being seduced with the Rumors of Malicious people, more than he ought, doth so much reprehend. Where we would have taught him to see more clearly than the light day, that the Holy Fathers of Rome our Predecessors, (whom he without all modesty most injuriously doth rail upon) did never erre in their Canons and Constitutions (which he so much depraveth.) For as faith the Prophet, Neither is there Rofin or Phylitian lacking in Galaad. But he hath always shewed himself disobedient, and refused at our citation to appear, and yet to this present day, continuing still in his stubborn Mind and Heart indurate, hath remained now more than a year under our Curse; yea and moreover, adding mischief to mischief, (which is worst of all) he hearing of this our Citation, burst out into a presumptuous Appellation from us, unto the next General Council, against the Constitution both of Pope Pius the second, and Pope Julius the second, our Predecessors, which so decreed, that all they which so did appeal should be punished as Hereticks.

In vain also he seeketh Refuge to the General Council, which professeth himself not greatly to regard such Councils. So that now we might lawfully proceed against him, as against one Notoriously suspected of his Faith, yea a very Heretick indeed, without any further Citation or delay, to the Condemnation of him, as of an Heretick, and to the severity of all and singular pains and censures afore written. Yet we notwithstanding by the Council of our Brethren aforesaid, following the Clemency of Almighty God, which will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should convert and live, and forgetting all injuries heretofore done unto us and to the See Apostolique, have thought good to use all favourable means towards him that we might, and so to work, (as much as in us lieth) that he, by this way of mansuetude, might be brought to reformation, so that he forsaking his former Errors might be received as the lost Child, and return again into the lap of his Mother the Church.

Wherefore in most hearty wise we exhort and beseech the said Martin and all his Adherents, Receivers and Fautors, by the Bowels of the Mercy of our God, and by the sprinkling of the Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom, and by whom, is made the Redemption of Mankind, and the edification of his Holy Mother Church, that they will cease to disturb the Peace, Unity and Verity of the said Church; for the which our Saviour so instantly prayed to his Father, and that they will abstain from such Pernicious Errors aforesaid. Who in so doing shall find with us (if they shall obey, or shall certify us by lawful witnesses to have obeyed) effectually herein the affection of fatherly charity, and a full fountain opened of all mercy and clemency; willing and charging the said Martin notwithstanding from henceforth, that he utterly desist in the mean time from all preaching and office of preaching, Or else if the love of Justice and Verue shall not restrain the said Martin from Sin, neither the hope of our Pardon shall reduce and bring him to Repentance; to the intent that the terror of punishment and of discipline may bridle him, we require and admonish the said Martin and his Adherents, Abettors, Fautors, and Receivers, by the tenor hereof, in the Veity of Holy Obedience, and under incurring all the penalties aforesaid, districly charging and commanding that within forty days (whereof twenty we assign for the first; ten for the second, and the other ten for the third and peremptory term) immediately following after the setting up of these present Letters, the said Martin, his Abettors, Fautors, Adherents, and Receivers aforesaid, do surcease from the forefaid Errors, and from the preaching, publishing, maintaining, and defending of the same also from setting out of Book or Scriptures upon the said Errors, or any of them; and furthermore, that they burn or cause to be burned all and singular such Books and Scriptures as contain the forefaid Errors, or any of them, by any manner of way.

Also that the said Martin do utterly revoke those Errors and Assertions, and so certify us of the revoking thereof by publick Testimony, in due form of Law, signed by the Hands of two Prelates, to be sent unto us within the term of other like forty days or else to be brought by him unto us, if he himself will come (which would please us much rather) with a full safe conduct above mentioned, which from henceforth we are content to offer unto him, to the intent that no scruple of doubt, touching his true Obedience should hereafter remain.

Contrariwise, if the said Martin (which God defend) his Abettors, Fautors, Adherents, and Maintainers aforesaid, shall otherwise do, or shall not fulfil, to every effect and purpose, all and singular the premises within the term aforesaid, we then following the Doctrine of the Apostles, which teacheth us to void an Heretical person after the first and second correction, as well now as before, and as well before as now, declaring by our Authority the said Martin, his Abettors, Fautors Adherents, Maintainers, and Receivers, as withered Branches not remaining in Christ, but teaching and preaching contrary Doctrine, repugnant to the Catholick Faith, slanderous and damnable, to the great offence of Gods Majesty, to the detriment and slander of the Universal Church and Catholick Faith, and despising the Keys of the Church, to be, and to have been notorious and obdinate Hereticks, do condemn the same for such by the tenor hereof, willing and commanding them to be holden and taken for such of all Christian people aforesaid.

Over and besides, we forbid, under the incurring of all the all and singular the penalties afore expressed in so doing, that any man presume by any manner of way, directly or indirectly, secretly or expressly, privily or openly, to read, hold, preach, praise, print, publish or defend, either by themselves or by any other, the said Books and Writings, not only those wherein the Errors aforesaid are contained, but also all others whatsoever have been or shall be set forth, written or made by the said Martin, vehemently suspected as a pernicious enemy of the Catholick Faith, to the intent that his memory may utterly be rooted out from the fellowship of all Christian people or rather with fire to consume them, as is before declared.

We admonish moreover all and singular Christs faithful people, under the said pain of the Great Curse, to avoid or cause to be avoided, so much as in them doth lie, the forefaid Hereticks not obedient to our commandment, and to have no Fellowship nor any Conversation or Communion with them, or with any of them, neither to Minister to them things Necessary.

And moreover, to the more confusion of the said Martin, with his Abettors, Adherents, and Retainers aforesaid, thus being declared and condemned as Hereticks, after the expiring of the term aforesaid, we command all and singular Christs faithful people both Men and Women, as Patriarchs, Archbishops, Prelates of Churches, either Patriarchal, Metropolitan, and other Cathedral, Collegiate, and other inferior Churches; to Deans and Chapters, and other Ecclesiastical Persons Secular, and of all other Orders, even of the begging Friars also, namely of that Congregation; where the said Martin is professed, or hath his abode; also to Regular, exempt, and not exempt; Item, to all and singular Princes what Dignity or Calling soever, either Ecclesiastical or Temporal, they be of; to Kings, Princes Electors, Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Barons, Captains, Conductors, Servitors, Communalities, Universities, Dominions, Cities, Lands, Castles, and Places, or the Citizens and Inhabitants thereof; and briefly, to all and singular other aforesaid, through the Universal World dispersed, specially in Almany, that they, and every of them, under all and singular Penalties aforesaid, do personally apprehend the said Martin, his Abettors, Adherents, Receivers, and Fautors, and retain them being apprehended, at our instance, and send them unto us (who in so doing, for their good work, shall receive of us and the See Apostolick condign reward and recompence) or at least, that they utterly drive them, and every one of them, out of their Metropolitan, Cathedral, Collegiate, and other Churches, Houses, Monasteries, Convents, Cities, Dominions, Universities, Communalities, Castles, Lands, and places respectively, as well the Clergy-men, as the Regular and Lay-men, all and singular aforesaid.

These Cities, Dominions, Lands, Castles, Villages, Communalities, Holds, Towns and Places, wheresoever they be situate respectively, Metropolitan, Cathedral, Collegiate, and other Churches, Monasteries also, Priories, Convents, and religious and devout places, or what Order soever (as is aforesaid) unto the which it shall chance the said Martin to come, so long as he or they shall these remain, and three days after their departing from thence, we here give over to the Ecclesiastical Interdiction.

And that the Premises may be known to all men, we command moreover all Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Prelates of the Patriarchal, Metropolitan, and other Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, to Deans and Chapters, and other persons Ecclesiastical, and of what Order else soever aforesaid, to Regular Brethren, Religious Monks, exempt and not exempt aforesaid, wheresoever they dwell, and especially within Almany, that they and every of them, under like Censures and Pains, do publicly denounce, and cause and command to be denounced of others, the said Martin, with all and singular his aforesaid Adherents, which shall not obey our Commandments and Monitions, within the term aforesaid, upon every Sunday, and other Festival days, within their Churches, when as the greatest concourse of people shall resort to Divine Service, to be declared and condemned for Hereticks, and that all Christs faithful People shall avoid them under the said Censures and Penalties as be afore expressed, and that they do set up these Presents, or cause to be set up, or the Transcript of them made under the form hereafter ensuing, in their Churches, Monasteries, Houses, Convents, and other places there openly to be seen and read.

Item, We do Excommunicate and Cuse all and singular persons, of whatsoever state, degree, condition, prebeminence, dignity, or excellency they be, which shall procure, or cause to be procured, by themselves or other, privily or apertly, directly or indirectly, secretly, or expressly, whereby these Presents, or the Copies transcript, or the examples of them cannot be read, set up, and published in their Lands and Dominions, &c.

Let no man therefore be so bold to dare to infringe, or with rash presumption to contrary this Writing of our Damnation, Reprobation, Rejection, Decree, Declaration, Inhibition, Will, Commandment, Exhortation, Befeeching, Request, Admonition, Affignation, Grant, Condemnation, Subjection, Excommunication and Curse. And if any person and persons dare presume to attempt the same, let him know and be sure that he shall incur the indignation of Almighty God, and his blessed Apostles Peter and Paul.

Given at Rome at S. Peters, Anno 1520. 17 Calend. Julii. And of our Popedom the eighth year.

Although it was somewhat long before this Bull aforesaid of Pope Leo, being sent and dispersed through all other places abroad, could come to the hands of Luther, yet so soon as he by means of his Friends might get a sight thereof, he shaped again an Answer to the same;

in such sort, as I am sure the Pope himself will say that this Bull was never so baited, and so well-favourably shaken in all his days; as by the handling of the matter, and reading of his Answer, may evidently appear. The Contents and Copy of the which Answer I thought here, next after the said Bull, immediately to exhibit to the Christian Reader, that who is disposed to confer the one with the other, having them both at hand, may judge the better of the whole matter and cause, and also may see the true image of the Pope, out of his painted vizor, appear in his own perfect colours. The Answer now to the Bull here followeth.

J E S U S.

Martinus Lutherus Christiano Lectori, gratiam Christi in salutem eternam.

Adma pervenit ad me, Christiane Lector, existis Bullam quandam adversum me, pene in omnem terram, proutquam ad me, in quem unice fueris, & cui maxime erat inferenda, venerit. The answer of M. Luther to the Popes Bull in Lat.

Quam sequentem vide in posterore editione, p. 1465.

Here followeth the same Answer of Martin Luther against the execrable Bull of Pope Leo in English.

Martin Luther to the Christian Reader, witheth the Grace of Christ to eternal Salvation. I heard a fame afar off (Christian Reader) that a certain Bull to the World before it came to me, against whom it was specially directed, and to whom it most chiefly appertained. For what cause I cannot tell, except peradventure it was for that the said Bull, like unto a night Crow, and as a Bird of darkness hatched in the night, durst not flee in the day, nor abide to come in my sight. Notwithstanding the said night Fowl after long time, by help of Friends, was caught at length, and brought unto me in his own likeness to behold. Which causeth me yet to be uncertain what to think, whether my Papists do dally and jest with me, in setting out such famous Libels without any name, against me; or whether in truth and earnest they play the mad men so against me at Rome, or no. For first, neither do I see here the Title (as it is called) nor the Process of the Court of Rome observed. And again (which maketh me more to doubt) herein be brought and condemned such Articles, which it is plain and manifest to be most Christian: whereby it seemeth to me most like, the said Monster to be hatched by John Eckius, a man wholly compact and franted altogether of lies, dissimulations, errors, and heresies.

The said suspicion this also partly confirmeth, for that I hear it so bruted abroad, that the said Eckius is thought and said to be the Apostle of such a goodly Bull. And not unlike, when none could be more meet Apostle for such an Apostleship than he. And indeed I heard no less long since, that a Bull was in working against me at Rome, partly by the workmanship of Eckius; which because (as the stile and composition thereof declarerh) it displeaseth the good and learned men there) was therefore deferred) and should have been suppressed.

But whatsoever the matter be, it seemeth to me not unlike, wheresoever this Apostle Eckius beareth rule, there to be the Kingdom of Antichrist, and all kind of madness there to reign. In the-mean time I will so deal, that I will not seem to believe Pope Leo the Tenth, with his learned Cardinals, to be the Authors of this furious madness: Which I do not so much for the honour of the See of Rome, as because I will not be put up too much with pride, and seem to my self as one worthy to suffer such, so great, and so glorious things for the Verity of God. For if it were so indeed, that the Bishop of Rome did so furiously rage against me, who were then so happy before God as Luther, to be condemned for so manifest a Truth of such a proud Prelat? Wherein what were more to be wished for of me, than that I should never be absolved, reconciled, nor have any part with that so doltish and unlearned, wicked and furious Antichrist?

christ? Happy were that day, happy were that death, and to be received with all joy and thankfulness to God, if it might be my hap at any time, in such a cause as this is, to be apprehended and to suffer death. But give the honour of this cause unto others, and let this matter find his Martyr worthy for the fame; I for my Sins am not worthy to come to that honour.

M. Luther
protestation.

Let other men therefore think of these Romanists what they list; thus I think, that whosoever was the Author of this Bull he is a very Antichrist; and against Antichrist these things I write, to redeem the verity of Christ, so much as in me lieth, which he labourerth to extinguish. And first, that he shall obtain no part of his Will in any thing against me, here I protest before God and our Lord Jesus Christ, and his holy Angels, and all the World, that I dissent with all my heart from the condemnation of this Bull, which Bull I also do curse and execrate, as an Enemy, a Church-Robber, and Blasphemy against Christ the Son of God, our Lord, Amen.

Furthermore, I hold, defend, and embrace with the full trust of my Spirit, those Articles in the said Bull condemned and excommunicate, and affirm that the same ought to be holden of all Faithful Christians, under pain of eternal malediction, and that they are to be counted for Antichrists, whosoever have consented to the said Bull, whom I also, together with the Spirit of all them which know the truth, do utterly detest, and shun them, according to the Precept of our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen: And let this stand for thy revocation, O Bull, verè Bullarum filia: (i) O thou Bull, which art the very Daughter of all vain * bubbles.

This my Confession and Protestation made (for witness whereof I take them all that shall read these presents) before I proceed to defend and declare these foresaid Articles, I will first begin with certain Arguments for the confusion of the said Bull; whereof the first I will take of the blind ignorance of this blockish Antichrist. For the Apostle Peter so commandeth, that we should be ready to render a Reason of that Faith and Hope which is in us. And the Apostle Paul willetth a Bishop to be mighty to exhort in found Doctrine, and to refute the gain-sayers. And these things be they which now three years ago I have desired and looked for out of Rome, or from them which take part with Rome. Which things also we do read to be observed most diligently amongst the ancient Fathers, whosoever they condemned Heresie. Neither do we read that the Apostles did ever decree any thing in their Councils, but they first alleged the holy Scripture. So I also when I waited that they would answer me with Grapes, and enform me with true Testimonies of the Scripture, behold they bring to me fowre and wild Grapes, condemning me with nothing else but bare words, whereas I have fortified my matter with plain Scriptures.

Tit. 1.

The Papist will not budge the trial of
Scripture.

I say unto thee, O thou most unlearned Antichrist, hast thou joynd such brain-sick rashness together with such barbarous ignorance, that thou wilt presume to think all men to be turned into Stocks and blocks, and to think that thou with thy bare and naked words only canst triumph against the invincible force and power of Gods holy Word? Hast thou learned this manner of condemning the Magistralities of Colen and of Lo-vaine?

If this be the manner of the Church to damn Errors, only to say, I like it not, I deny it, I will not; what Fool, what Patch, what Ass, what Block cannot condemn after this manner? Is not thy whorish face alumed, in the publick sight of the Church to dare once to set the trifling vanities only of thy naked and bare words against the Thunderbolts of Gods eternal Word? O impudent condemnation and right seemly for Antichrist! which hath not one jot or tittle to bring against such evident Scriptures inferred against him, but only with one word cometh and saith, I condemn thee. And why then do we not believe the Turk? Why do we not admit the Jew? Why do we not honour the Hereticks which also condemn our writings as well as he, if it be enough only to condemn? unless we do not therefore peradventure give place unto them, because they condemn us not utterly without some Scriptures and Reasons: but these men after a new found fashion, utterly without all Scriptures or Reason, do condemn us. What then shall I think to be the cause why they proceeded against me with their Bull condemnatory, so vain, so ridiculous, so trifling, but only their meer blockishness, whereby they seeing my allegations to be true, and not able to abide, nor yet to confute the same, thought to terrifie me with their vain railing of their rotten parchment. But I tell thee Antichrist, that Luther, being accustomed to War, will not be terrified with these vain Bulls; and hath learned to put a difference between a piece of Paper and the omnipotent Word of God.

Of the like ignorance proceedeth this also, that they, against their own Conscience, durst not particularly digest all and singular the Articles in their Orders; for they feared lest they should note him for an Heretic, whom they were not able perhaps to convince either to be erroneous or offensive; and therefore they have found out this Adverb respective: and after the numbering of the Articles, then come they and say that some be respectively ly. Heretical, some erroneous, and some offensive, which is as much to say, as we suppose them to be Heretical, some erroneous, and some slanderous, but we cannot tell qui, qualis, quanti, i. which, what manner, and how great they are. O dastardly ignorance, how slippery and cowardly art thou! how art thou afraid of the light? how dost thou turn and return all things, lest thou shouldst be taken like a Protesus? and yet for all that thou shalt not so escape, yea in thy wiliness thou shalt the rather be overtaken and subverted.

Respective.

Protesus is a certain Adverb among the Poets, which turn-eth himself into all colours.

Come out therefore, O thou Ass-headed Antichrist, shew forth thy wisdom, and dispose thy matters in order. Tell us if thou canst, what sayest thou or meanest thou, when thou sayest this Article is Heretical, this is erroneous, this is offensive. For it becometh such a worshipful condemner to know what he condemneth. And too shameful it is to condemn an Article for Heretical, and yet cannot name the same. Neither will I be answered here with respectively, but I look to be taught simply and plainly, for I am one of Occams faction which condemneth these respectives, and love to have all things simple and absolute.

Thou seest therefore (good Reader) the ignorant dotage of this Antichrist, how craftily, and yet grossly he thinketh to walk in a net under his adverb, respectively, who not only doth not teach the truth, and cause of his condemn-ment, but neither also dare prove any error, nor shew forth what it is that he condemneth, and yet must he needs condemn. Is not this trow you a proper kind of damning, to damn and cannot tell what he dam-neth? Is not this a fine manner of loquution, passing all Rhetorick, to speak, and yet not to know what he speaketh? what Purgatories might we with sufficient to purge the dolts brains of these Bull bragging Bedlems? with such blindness and doltsiness are all these Adversaries of Gods truth worthy to be plagued.

The dotage of Anti-
christ.

But I know whereupon all this grief riseth. The origine whereof is this; Eckius mine old Adversary remembering how he was put to shame enough at Lypsia, when he routing himself upon his stage, and frothing at the mouth like a Bore, with a furious mouth called me three hundred times Heretic, for the Article of Hals, and yet afterward was was not able to prove the same, whereas the Sentence Condemnatory of the Council of Constance, alleged by me otherwise than Eckius looked for, noted there no certain note for Heretical; and also the same condemnation, much like to this of ours, with the like foolishness called some of his Articles Heretical, some erroneous, and some offensive; and Eckius hearing this, being confounded in himself for his impudent rashness, perceiving that he had called me Heretic falsely and untruly: he thought then to heal this wound again at Rome, and there to stablith his false and impudent lying. But the lying Sophister shall not prevail by the help, I trust, of Christ: for I ask and require you still, that they absolutely and not respectively, distinctly and not confusedly, simply and not dissemblingly, plainly and not obscurely, particularly and not in general, do shew what is, and what is not Heretical. But when will they so do? when Christ and Behshah, or when Light and darkness shall agree together.

Eckius.

Eckius taken with a lye.

And

And what shall I do then in the mean time? first I will condemn these dastardly Dotipoles and unlearned Papists and Apostles of Antichrist. And I will scorn them as Helias did, and say, If Baal be God, let him answer: peradventure he is drunk, or husie in his journey, cry out higher, for he is a God and peradventure sleepest. For what other thing do these Bull-bragging Asses deserve else, which condemn that they know not, and confesse all their own ignorance?

Secondly, I will not be troubled nor disquieted for the matter, neither am I to be counted heretick, erroneous, or offensive, so long as I shall not be proved and plainly convicted with simple and manifest words in what Article I am so judged. Neither do I here charge my Papists, these Blockheads, that I will put them to their proofs, but only that they will shew me at least my errors, that is, that they will shew me, if they know what it is that they themselves do prattle of, or have any feeling of their own doings. For so long as they assign me no Heretical Article, I am at free liberty to deny what Article soever they lay unto me to be heretical, and say it is Catholic.

Again, what a rudeness it is in this wicked and dolish Antichrist, worthy to be laughed at, whereas these Dromedaries do distinguish heretical Articles from those that be erroneous, and the erroneous from offensive, and those again from slanderous? By the which subtle distinction of those gross headed Dols this we do gather, That that Article which is erroneous is not heretical, and if it be not heretical, what doth it then appertain to these Ecclesiastical Condemners, which ought to condemn those things only which be heretical? For that which is not heretical is Catholic, as Christ himself saith, He that is not against us is with us. Yea, I would wish that these jolly Sophisters would shew me in all the Church an Article that is erroneous and not heretical: for if it be erroneous, it differeth nothing from heretical, but only in stiffness of defending. For all things be equally either true or false, although affection, in some one thing which is true or false; may be greater or lesser. Ye see therefore again, how these men for all their bragging Bulls are not able to produce me one Article which is erroneous and not heretical, and yet like wise brain-fick men, they will needs babble they know not themselves what, condemning that which they find erroneous and not heretical, which cannot stand either in matter or in words, so that such are the Articles, such is the Condemnation.

The like wisdom also they shew in affirming that to be scandalous, which is neither heretical nor erroneous. That Article I would fain see either in my Books, or in the words and works of any Writer else from the beginning of the World to the latter end. What made my Papists then to excogitate these so prodigious Monsters, but only their monstrous fury and madness? Unless peradventure they mean those Articles to be scandalous, as commonly all true and Catholic Articles are wont to be. For what is more scandalous than Verity? Yea, only Truth and Verity is scandalous to all proud and senseless persons, as it is said of Christ, 1 Cor. 1. We preach, saith S. Paul, Christ crucified, a stumbling stone to the Jews, and to the Gentiles foolishness. And in Luke 2. He is set to be the fall and rising up of many in Israel. wherefore, whereas my Papists do distinguish scandalous Articles from heretical and erroneous, and so much as that which is not heretical or erroneous must needs be Catholic and true; it followeth thereof, that these scandalous Articles be underfoot and condemned of them for such as be very Catholic and sound. O worthy commendations and meet for the Papists!

Mark here, good Reader, the impiety of these blind Buzzards, whether they roll themselves, how they deride and mock themselves, how easily they are taken in their own words, how fond and foolish they are in their studies, not only in not proving any error or slander in these Articles, but also in going about only to express them, how they cast out things impossible and most foolishly repugnant to themselves. Where is then, thou most presumptuous and shameless Bull, thy dolish respect now become? whether respectedst thou? Verily into the bottomless pit of impiety, and thine own brutish stupidity.

The like also is to be said touching the Articles offensive, which must be neither slanderous, neither erroneous, nor heretical, seeing they are made distinct by such great Rabbles. Who will not now marvel at the deep and profound wisdom of these Papists, which could find out that to be offensive in the Church, which is neither false, neither heretical, nor slanderous, but true, sound, Catholic and edifying, and yet must that also be condemned. And who would not now desire and covet to be condemned also of such hair-brained Idots, who by their own condemning, do utter themselves to approve things damnable, and to condemn things justifiable, that is, which openly shew themselves, to their own great ignominy and shame, to be more senseless than stocks, rocks, or blocks. Go ye now therefore, O ye impious and brainless Papists, and if ye will needs write, shew your selves more sober: for this Bull, it appeared, was either spued out in your night Feasts, among Drabs and Harlots, or else huddled up in the Canicular days, or mad Midsummer Moon: for never were there any Dizards that would shew themselves so mad.

Let us now return this durt of Antichrist, and cast it in his own teeth, and of his own words let us judge him and condemn him, that hereafter he may learn to take better heed, and to be better advised in his lying. For as the Proverb saith, A liar had need to have a good memory. If some Articles be offensive, and other heretical, and thou condemnest him which is no Heretic, and consequently a true Catholic, although he be six hundred times offensive; Doth not thy shameless mouth then condemn thy self, not only of Heresie, but of extreme Impiety, Blasphemy and Treason against Gods holy Truth, shewing thy self to be the Man in deed which is the Adversary, and is extolled above all which is called God, or worshipped? Art not thou then the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, which denieth God his Redeemer, and taketh away the love of Truth, to establish the setting forth of his Error, for men to believe iniquity, as Paul foretold? for if the Article be not heretical, it cannot be offensive or slanderous, but only to such Heretics as Antichrist is, and Satanists of all Piety. See therefore how his shameless and most foolish Bull, whilst it condemneth in me one thing to be heretical, and another offensive, doth manifestly declare the Authors thereof to be true Heretics, and the Enemies of God indeed. So that now it may appear that there is no knowledge nor counsel against the Lord, seeing blind Impiety is thus caught in the words of his own mouth; so truly it is said, That Prov. 12. he which calleth up a stone on high, it falleth down again upon his own pate.

And (which is chiefeft of all) by this their wicked contradiction it cometh to pass, that the cogitations of their own hearts be revealed, and that they themselves chiefly do utter and disclose their own wickedness which they covet most to conceal, that all men may see how ready they are to condemn all Verity even at once. For when they affirm such Articles to be heretical which neither they can, nor know, nor yet dare shew or name to be heretical, what have we thereby to understand, but that they are Adversaries of Christ from the bottom of their hearts, and ready to impugn all Truth, and yet notwithstanding with their damnable hypocrisy, they pretend themselves to be Condemners of Heresies? Learn, learn, ye beetle-headed Asses with your blustering Bulls, learn, I say, what it is, Christ to be a sign of contradiction, and a stone of offence. How soon and easily is all your inward impiety and your ignominy disclosed with the same covert of words, wherewith in vain you went about to cloak the same? Thus then have we here proved by this first and manifest Argument, that the foresaid Bull proceedeth from none other, than very Antichrist himself, the chiefeft Adversary of God and of all Godliness. And now let either Eckius, or the Pope, acknowledge if he dare, and then consider what Opinion we ought to have of him, or what Name to give him; in whom all cursed names, as in one heap, do concur together and agree, as impiety, blasphemy, ignorance, foolishness, hypocrisy, lying, yea briefly Satan himself with his Antichrist.

Neither doth this impiety any thing less appear in that also which I will now say. For this worshipful Bull decreeth in plain and most impudent words, that those Books also of mine ought to be burned, in the which are no Errors contained, to the end that the memory of me may be utterly rooted out.

Canst thou, O Christian Reader, now doubt that the great Dragon of Hell himself speaketh in this Bull? It is an old Proverb, That the Ass singeth therefore evil favouredly, because he taketh his nose too high. So this Bull in like manner should have piped more tuneable, if he had not set out his blasphemous throat so open against Heaven, so impudently and devilishly condemning also the manifest and evident truth. For hitherto Satan, whosoever he oppressed the truth, did it under the colour of truth; but this Man of Sin, the Adversary which is extolled above God, without all colour, not privily but apertly, and that in the open Church of God, without all shame taketh upon him to condemn, and commandeth to be burned the sincere verity of Christ, known and allowed both of him and of all others. What could be more done amongst the Turks? what place is this worthy of, I pray thee, but the deep dungeon of Hell? And are ye not afraid, ye Antichrists, with your brutish Bulls, least Stones and Trees should sweat with blood, at the most horrible fight of this your execrable impiety and blasphemy?

Where are thou now, good Emperour Charles? Where are ye Christian Kings and Princes? Ye have given your names to Christ in Baptism, and can ye now abide these Infernal Voices of such an Antichrist? Where be ye Bishops, Where be ye Doctors, Where be all ye that confess Christ? Can ye hold your peace at these horrible and prodigious Monstrosities of the Papiſts? O miserable Church of God, which art made now so great a scorn, and a very mocking stock of Satan! O miserable are all they which live in these times! The wrath of God is finally come upon the Papiſts, Enemies to the Cross of Christ and Verity of God, resisting all men, and forbidding the truth of Christ to be taught and preached, as S. Paul said of the Jews. Admit, I pray you, that I were such a one indeed, as that cursed and malicious Bull doth make me to be, an Heretic, erroneous, schismatical, offensive, scandalous, in certain of my Books; yet why should the other Books of mine be condemned which are Catholic, Christian, true, edifying and peaceable. Where have these wretched Papiſts learned this Religion, that, for the persons cause being evil, they should damn and burn the holy and sound Verity of God? Can ye not destroy men, but you must also destroy the truth? Will ye pluck up the good Wheat also with the Cockle? Will ye also scatter the Corn away together with the Chaff? And why then receive ye Origen in his Catholic Books, and do not utterly reject him altogether? Yea, why suffer ye wicked Ariſtotele (in whom is nothing taught but Errors) and do not at least in some part condemn him? Why burn ye not and set on fire the wicked, barbarous, unlearned, and heretical Decretals of the Pope? Why do ye not all this I say? but only for that ye are set in this holy place for none other cause, but only to be the abomination spoken of in Daniel, which should put down truth, and set up lies, and the operation of error. For this thing, and none other, becometh the Seat of Antichrist.

Wherefore this I say to thee (Pope Leo the Tenth, and to you Lord Cardinals, and all other whosoever is in any part or doing in that Court of Rome) and this I speak boldly unto your faces, if this Bull hath come out in your name, and by your knowledge, and if you will so acknowledge it for your own, then will I likewise use my power, by the which I am made in my baptism the Son of God, and Coheir with Christ, being founded upon a sure Rock, which neither feareth the gates of Hell, nor Heaven, nor Earth, and say, monish, and exhort you in the Lord, that you will reform your selves, and take a better way, and refrain hereafter from those Diabolical Blasphemies, and too much exceeding presumptuous impieties; and this I alledge, That unless ye so do, know it for certain, that I, with all them that worship Christ, do recount your Seat, possessed and oppressed of Satan himself, to be the damned Seat of Antichrist, which we not only do not obey, and will not be subject, nor congregate unto, but also do detest and abhor the same, as the principal and chiefest

Enemy of Christ, being ready in this our Sentence and Profession, not only to suffer gladly your fond foolish Censures, but also do pray you heartily that you will never assail us again, nor ever number us in your Fellowship; and moreover, to fulfil your bloody tyranny, we do willingly offer our selves to dye for the same. And according to the power and might; that the Spirit of Christ and efficacy of our Faith can do in these our Writings, if ye shall persist so fill in your fury, we condemn you, and together with this Bull, and all the Decretals, we give you to Satan, to the destruction of the Flesh, that your Spirit in the day of our Lord may be delivered, in the Name which you persecute, of Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

For our Lord Jesus Christ yet liveth and reigneth (in whom I do nothing doubt) who I firmly trust will shortly come and slay with the Spirit of his Mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming, this Man of Sin, and Son of Perdition; forasmuch as I cannot decide, if the Pope be the Author and Doer of these misshapen and monstrous doings, but he is the true, final, most wicked, and that famous Antichrist, that subverteth the whole World by the operation of his delusions, as we see it in all places fulfilled and accomplished.

But whither doth the burning zeal of Charity carry me? neither am I as yet fully persuaded this to be the Popes Bull, but to proceed from his wicked Apostle Ezechiel, who with his Fautors, furiously gaping at me like a Wolf, would swallow me clean up, linging with the wicked thus, Let us swallow him up quick and whole like Peew. Hell, and like one descending down into the Pit. For little careth this furious Madbrain how the verity of God be extinguished, (yes, he would count that for a lucre,) so he might fill his malicious desire with the blood of his Brother. O miserable state of the Church at this time, worthy to be bewailed with tears of blood! But who heareth our groanings? or who comforteth our weepings? The fury of the Lord seemeth to be inexorable against us.

Over and besides, what a ridiculous toy or pretty figment have they invented, whereby belike to sport themselves with some merry matter amongst their earnest business, writing, That besides other great friendship which they have shewed unto me, they have also offered to support me with money, and to bear my charges with their liberality, in my journey to Rome. Will ye see what a charity is newly come upon the City of Rome, which after it hath pillled and polled the whole World of their money, and hath consumed and waited the fame by the intolerable tyranny, now cometh, and to me only offered money. But this impudent I know with whose hammer it was coined: Cajetanus the Cardinal, a man born and formed to lye for the Whetstone, after his worshipful Legacy depeached in Germany, coming home to Rome, there forged and signed that he promised me money, whereas he being at Ausperge, was there in such miserable penury, and so pinching in his house, that it was thought he would have famished his Family. But thus it becometh the Bull to be verè Bulla, that is, a thing of nought, void of all truth and wit.

And so these great Judges and Condemners, after all this, yet have Authority to command us to believe them to say truth, when they do nothing but lye, and that they are good Catholics, when they be stark Heretics; and that they are true Christians, when they play the very Antichrist; and all by the virtue of this Universal, Quodcumque ligaveris, &c. Whatsoever thing thou bindest, &c. So that where nothing is excepted, they think they may do all things. Who not only do lye most loudly and manifestly, but also (which passeth all impudency) do vaunt and commend their liberality before the people, to bring me more in hatred, making men falsely to believe that they offered friendship and money unto me: Whereas these Tyrants of Rome, if they had had any truth, goodness, or godliness in them, should have taken some better heed in their doing and speaking, so that no Adversary might conceive any suspicion of evil against them. But now if there were no other matter else to bring this Bull out of credit, only this gross and foolish lie were sufficient to declare, how light, vain, and false this Bull is? What? Would Rome

The Papiſts purposed to know and maintain the verity of Christ, and ye cannot abide it.

The Pope condemneth as well the good Books of M. Luther as the other without all respect of truth, or of the cause.

Dan 9.

M. Luther warning to the Pope.

M. Luther exhorting the Pope.

The Pope threateneth Antichrist.

The Pope lieth in his Bull, where he saith that he offered money to Luther to come to Rome.

The Pope by the virtue of this Universal binds all things, even those which he himself doth not think.

(think ye) offer money to me? And how then cometh this (which I know to be most certain) that out of the Bank (as they call it) two or three hundred Crowns were assigned in Germany to be disposed and given to Ruffians and Catchpoles, to murder Luther? For these be the Reasons and Arguments whereby now fighteth, reigneth, and triumpheth the holy Apostolick See, the Mistress of Faith, and Mother of all Churches, which long since should have been proved to be the very seat of Antichrist, and manifold ways Heretical, if she had fought with the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God; whereof she herself is nothing ignorant, and therefore because she would not be brought to that issue, thus she fareth and taketh on like as she were mad in the Church of Christ, confounding and confuming all things, with wars, murders, bloodshed, death, and destruction, and yet for all this they must needs be counted most holy Fathers in God, Vicars of Christ, and Pastors of his Flock.

But go to (that I may also dally with them a while) let them yet send me the money they speak of; for as touching their promise and false conduct (because I will not overcharge them) that I gladly resign to them again, seeing I have no great need thereof, so that the money may come to my hands. But here I must require so much as may suffice me, to wit, that I may be furnished with fifty thousand Footmen, and ten thousand Horsemen to conduct me safe to Rome, and so, for any other promise of false conduct I will not trouble them. And this I require because of the danger that is in Rome, which devourereth up her Inhabitants, neither keepeth, nor ever did keep promise with any; where these most holy Fathers do flay their beloved Children in the Charity of God, and Brethren destroy their Brethren, to do service to Christ, as their manner is, and stile of Rome. In the mean time I will keep my self free and safe from the citation of this most reverend Bull. O ye miserable Varlets, which are so confounded with the truth, and with your own Conscience, that neither ye can lye handsomely, neither dare ye speak the truth, and yet neither can ye keep your selves quiet, to your perpetual ignominy and confusion.

Furthermore, here in this Bull is brought in a strange fashion of stile not heard of before. For where Augustine would have said, that he would not believe the Gospel, except he had been moved by the Authority of the Church, now cometh in this goodly Bull, and maketh this Catholick Church to be a few reverend Cardinals, his Brethren, and Priors of Regular Orders, Masters of Divinity, and Doctors of the Law, out of whose counsel the said Bull boasteth her self to be born and brought forth; blessed Babe, forsooth, of such an Universal Church. O happy travel (no doubt) of this Catholick Church, never seen nor heard of before, and such as Augustine the valiant impugner of Sects, if he did see it, would not doubt to call it the Synagogue of the Devil. See therefore the madness of these Papists: the Universal Church is a few Cardinals, Priors, and Doctors, scarcely perhaps twenty persons in all, when also it is possible enough, that never a one of them all is the Member of one Chappel or Altar. And whereas the Church is the Communion of Saints, as we say in the Creed; out of this Communion of Saints, that is, out of this Universal Church, all they then must needs be excluded, whosoever be not in the number of these twenty persons; and so whatsoever these holy men do think or judge, by and by the Universal Church must needs hold and believe the same, albeit they be Liars, Heretics, and Antichrists, thinking and judging nothing but that which is abominable.

Would there ever any man think such foolishness and madness to be in Rome? Is there any brains in these men's heads, think ye, or hearts in their bodies? Austin speaketh of the Church dispersed thorow the whole World, confessing the Gospel with one consent. Neither would God that any Book else should be received with such consent of the whole World as the holy Scripture, (as the said Augustine in his Confessions affirmeth) left by the receiving of other Books, Schisms may take occasion to rise, according as the wicked See of Rome hath long sought by her Decrees, and hath for a great part brought the same to pass already. But yet the Universal Church did never agree thereto. For in the East, West, and South there have been Christians; which being content only with the Gospel, have not regarded how Rome hath gone about of a particular Church to make her self an Universal Church, and accuseth other Churches as Schismatical, when as she hath cut off her self from the Universal Church; and striveth in vain to draw the whole Universal Church to her, being the Mother and Fountain of all Schisms, and all by the means of this tyranny.

Let no man therefore ever think, that this true Catholick Church aforesaid will believe or maintain those things which this detestable Bull here prateleth, when as neither that which is the very true Church of Rome indeed doth her self so think, neither taketh that by and by to be Catholick, whatsoever is known to proceed from the Church of Rome. For as I said, there is no Book which shall be called Catholick hereafter, as neither it hath been heretofore, besides only the holy Scripture. For the Church of Rome, it may suffice to glory her self to be a little parcel or piece of the Universal Church; and so let her vex her self only with her own Decrees.

Neither let any man think this to be the Bull of the Catholick Church, but rather to proceed out of the Court of Rome. For such wisdom and Religion may well be seem that Seat of Satan, which seeketh to be counted for the whole Universal Church, and obtrudeth her foolish and wicked Bulls most arrogantly and vainly to the whole World, in the stead of sincere Catholick Doctrine. Whose pride and presumption hath grown so far, that the trusting upon her own power, without all learning and holiness of life, proudly taketh upon her to prescribe Laws to all men, of all their doings and sayings, as though for dominion only and lustiness of spirit she were to be counted the House and Church of Christ; whereas by this means Satan also, the Prince of the World, or the Turk, might be counted the Church of Christ. Again, neither can the Monarchies of the Gentiles abide mighty Princes to reign over them without wisdom and goodness. Furthermore, in the Church the Spiritual man only judgeth all things, and is judged of no man, and not the Pope alone, or the Court of Rome, unless they be Spiritual.

But against all this their rash presumption I boldly set the invincible Champion of the Church, S. Paul, who, 1 Cor. 14. faith; If any thing be revealed to another, let that first man hold his peace. Here have ye plainly, that the Pope, or any other Elder whatsoever he be, ought to keep silence, if any thing be revealed to other in the Church that is inferior. I therefore upon his Authority, condemning the presumptuous proceeding of this swelling Bull, do confidently take upon me to defend the Articles, caring nothing for the bare condemnation of any person, yea of the Pope himself, with his whole Church, unless he shall inform me by the Scriptures. Whereof the first Article is this.

The first Article.

It is an heretical Sentence, and also common, to say, That Sacraments of the new Law do give grace to them which have no offence in themselves to the contrary.

The Answer.

I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and I ask of you, good Masters Respectively, which make these Articles respectively, some to be Heretical, some erroneous, some slanderous, &c. whither respected this Article I pray you? To heretic, to error, to slander and offence? Or else whither respected you in condemning the same? To the holy Scripture? To the holy Fathers? To Faith? To the Church? To which of these I beseech you tell me? Neither do I here put you to the labor of proving, but only require you to shew your judgment what you think, that I may know wherein I lay amiss. Will you that I should tell you (you babish Infants and Noddies) whether this Article respected? I will. This Article hath two respects. Whereof the one respecteth the Papists, the condemnors hereof, amongst whom it respecteth some to be Mules, some to be Horses, which have no understanding, and to be void of all sense, and yet notwithstanding,

The Catholick Church, and the Church of Rome, are two things.

Answer of M. Luther to the first Sentence.

Two respects in this Article.

The sixth Article.

Contrition which is gotten by examining, remembering and detesting our Sins, whereby a man calleth to mind his years past in the bitterness of his Soul, in pondering the greatness, the multitude and filthiness of his Sins, the losing of eternal bliss, and purchasing of eternal Damnation; this contrition maketh an Hypocrite, yea rather a man to be more a Sinner.

The Answer.

O the incredible blindness and brutishness of these Romish Bulls. This Article is truly mine, and very Christian, which I will not suffer to be wrested from me, for all the Popes and Papists in the World. For this I meant by that Doctrine, that repentance is of no force, unless it be done in Faith and Charity, which thing they also teach themselves, but that they do neither know nor teach, neither what Faith nor Charity is. And therefore in condemning my Doctrine, they condemn also their own, foolishly repugning against themselves in their own contradiction. I say therefore that he which teacheth repentance in such wise and manner, that he hath not a greater regard to the promised mercy of God and Faith in the same, than to this afflicting and vexing of the mind, he teacheth the repentance of Judas Iscariot, he is pestilent, a Devil to mens Souls, and Tormentor of Consciences. Read the Books of these Sophisters, where they write of Repentance, and thou shalt see there no mention made either of promise or Faith. For these lively parts of repentance they clean omit, and only do vex men with these dead contritions. But heretofore we have, and will hereafter increase more at large.

But what should I here stand upon every Article, seeing my Books be abroad, wherein I have given a reason of all sufficiently, and more would have done, if mine Adversaries also had brought to light theirs? For what foolishness is this, that they think to answer me with this one saying, that they count all my sayings as damned, whereas I did write to this end only, that they should acknowledge their errors, wherewith they have so long bewitched the people of God. Neither did I look that I should be condemned, which understanding and knowing the same right well, have justified those things, which they have condemned, before with sufficient Authority both of Scripture, and Reason. Neither looked I that they should tell me what they thought (for I knew all that well enough) but that which I sought of them, was, to know whether they thought right thereto, or not. Here looked I to be taught, and behold, none of them all durst once put forth his head. Wherefore I see these Atlas nothing to understand either in things that I say, or yet themselves. But they be such blind Buzzards, that they perceive not what it is that I seek in my Books: for they count that I have such an opinion of them, as though they had the truth of their side, when there is nothing at all I less think to be true. For I, foreseeing that they had condemned all these things before, came forth and freely myself as one not to be condemned, but as already condemned of them, to accuse their condemnation to be wicked, heretical, and blasphemous, and so openly to denounce them as Heretics and Erroneous, unless they showed some better reason and ground of their doings and Doctrine; whereas they on the other side, like foolish Minstrels harping all on one string, have nothing else in their mouths, but we condemn that we have condemned, proving, after a new kind of Logicks, the same thing by it self. O most idiot huddibooks, and blockish condemnors, where is the saying of Peter? Be always ready to render an account of that Faith and hope which is in you.

Wherefore seeing these ignorant Papists, being thus confounded, do so flee away from the face of the manifest verity, that they dare not once open their mouths in defence of themselves, or of their cause, and have belied out with much ado this timorous Bull of theirs, I being comforted with the flight of these nine adversaries, do account this their dastardly damnation instead of bull allowing and justifying of my cause, and I rebuke again their own damnation upon their own heads:

How could they more condemn themselves, if I wish they (fearing to be found in evil) culpable of Heresy, they should be doted on to give account of this Doctrine) do flee to this miserable and desperate refuge, willingly to shut their eyes, and stop their ears, and to say I will not, I damn thee, I hear thee not, I allow thee not? If I should have played any such mad-part, how would they (I pray you) have triumphed against me? This dastardly fear declareth what cowards they are.

Wherefore not to burthen the Reader with any tedious prolixity of matter in prosecuting every Article, I here protest by these presents, that I *confess all these things here condemned by this miserable Bull, for pure, clear, and Catholick Doctrine; whereof I have sufficiently given account in my Books which be extant abroad.

Furthermore, I will also that the said my Books being extant abroad shall be taken as a publick accusation against these wicked Sophisters and seducers of the people of God; so that unless they shall give an account of their Doctrine, and shall convict me with good ground of Scripture, I do here, as much as in me lieth denounce them as guilty of Errors, Heresies, and Sacrilege, admonishing, desiring, and in the Lord exhorting all them which truly confess Christ, that they will beware and take heed of their pestiferous Doctrine, and not to doubt, but that the true Antichrist reigneth by them in the World amongst us.

And if any shall condemn this my brotherly admonition, let him know that I am pure and clean from his Blood, and excused from the last judgment of Christ. For I have left nothing undone, which Christian Charity can bind me to do.

Finally, if there be no other way whereby I may resist these babbling and trifling condemnors, the utmost and last which I have I will give and bestow in the quarrel, that is; this Life and Blood of mine. For better it were for me a thousand times to be slain, than to revoke one syllable of these Articles, which they have condemned. And now as they do curse and excommunicate me for their damnable Heresies, so I again likewise do curse and excommunicate them for the holy verity of God Christ, which is only the judge of all, judge and determine this matter between us, whether of these two excommunications, his or mine, shall stand and prevail before him. Amen.

In storying the life of Luther, before, it was declared how the said Luther in the beginning, first being rejected of the Cardinal Cajetan, appealed from the Cardinal unto the Pope. When that would not serve, neither could any tolerable submission of Luther to the Pope be received, but that the Pope with his Cardinals, contrary to all Equity and Conscience, would needs proceed against him, and against the express trusts of Gods Word, taking by meer Authority to bear down the verity as he had used before to do; Luther, following the justice of his cause was then compelled to appeal from the Pope to the next general Council, and so did, as before you may read? Which was two years before the Popes Bull against Luther came out. The tenour of which appellation, before omitted. I thought here to exhibit; whereby the Reader, considering the great change of Religion and State of the Church which since hath ensued, may also perceive the true original cause and occasion how it first began, by what order and degrees it after increased, what humility and submission first on Luthers part was shewed, and again, what insolency, wrong and violence of the Popes part was declared. And further where Pope Leo, in his Bull above prefixed, seemeth to pretend certain conditions of favour, charity, and money offered to Luther in the beginning, how false and vain that is, by this present appeal may appear. The copy whereof, as it was drawn by the publick notary, and exhibited, is this as in form here followeth.

The tenour and form of the Appeal of Martin Luther, from Pope Leo to the next General Council.

The appeal of M. Luther from the next General Council.

nina providentia Papæ, decimi, anno sexto in mea Norarii publicæ testimoniaque infra scriptorum ad hoc spe-cialiter vocatorum & rogatorum præsentia constituta, &c.

The effect of the said Appeal of Luther, in English.

Luther Appeal from the Pope in English.

The effect of the Appeal aforesaid is this, That for-asmuch as the liberty of appealing is provided for a remedy to relieve the oppressed from injury and violence of the Superiour, it was therefore lawful for Martin Luther so to do, especially being manifold ways injured and molested by the See of Rome, and other the Popes Confederates, as he in the said Appeal declareth. For at first whereas he modestly disputing of the errors and abuses of the Popes Pardons, did somewhat withstand the impudent ravine and blasphemies of them that came about with the Popes Pardons to poll and rob the people, he was therefore openly railed upon and defamed by them in their publick Sermons to be an Heretick, and consequently upon the same accused to Pope Leo for an Heret-ick, by Marius the Popes Proctor and others.

Then was obtained of the Pope a Commission to cite up the said Luther to appear at Rome before the Cardinals, by Hieronymus, and Sylvester Trieras, his mortal enemies, whereas he could by no way appear without manifest danger of his life, both by the way, and also in the City of Rome.

For the consideration whereof, Duke John Fredrick, Prince Elector, and the Landgrave intreated for him to have his cause indifferently to be heard, and to be committed to two parties that were equal, and not partial:
yet notwithstanding the earnest sute of these Princes, the contrary labours of the Cardinals, which were his capital Adversaries, so prevailed at Rome, that the cause of Luther was still detained in their own hands, and contrary to all indifferency, was committed to the hearing of the Popes Legate then in Germany, called Cardinalis Sancti Sixti. Who being no less Enemy against Luther than the other, and notwithstanding that Luther obediently appeared at his call, and with humble protestation submitted himself to be answered by the Scriptures, and referred himself to the judgment of the See of Rome, and of our Universities, to wit, Basil, Friburge, Loovaine, and Paris, yet contrary to all equity, throwing forth no Scripture nor Reason, rejecting his gentle protestation, submission, and honest offer, with all other his Requestes and Suits, he would needs forthwith have him to revoke his errors, threatening and menacing him most cruelly, and commanded him no more to come in his sight.

Whereupon Luther, being thus proudly rejected of the Cardinal, made his Appeal from the said Cardinal to Pope
Leo, being better informed.

This Appellation also being contemned of the Pope, who would neither come to any agreement, nor take any reasonable condition, nor then Luther his Errors by the Scripture, nor yet refer the matter by learning to be decided, but would needs perforce proceed against him by meer Authority and Oppression at Rome; Luther then seeing there was no other refuge or remedy for his own defence, and seeing moreover the truth of Gods Word to ly under foot, by Might and Authority oppressed, so that none durst almost confesse the same, and that the poor flock was so roused in errors and vain opinions, to the seduction of their Souls; for these and other such causes, he being necessarily thereunto compelled, commenced this Appeal from the Pope misinformed, to the next General Council that should be, calling for the help of the publick Notary, and testimony also of sufficient witnesses, requisite in that behalf accordingly.

The death of King Henry the eighth, with the manner thereof.

And thus closing up this eighth Book with the death of King Henry the eighth, I will now (the Lord Christ assisting me with his Grace) proceed next to the time and Reign of King Edward his Son, after that first I shall interpose a few words touching the death of the said King Henry his Father, and the manner of the same; and more upon him, lay from S. Stevens day (as is above mentioned, to the latter end of January. His Physician at length perceiving that he would away, and yet not daring to discourage him with death, for fear of the Act past before in Parliament, that none should speak any thing of the Kings death (the Act being made only for soothsayers, and talkers of Prophecies) moved them that were about the King to put him in remembrance of his mortal state and fatal infirmity. Which when the King rest were in dread to do, M. Denny, who was specially attendant upon him, boldly coming to the King, told him what case he was in, to mans judgment not like to live, and therefore exhorted him to prepare himself to death, calling himself to remembrance of his former life, and to call upon God in Christ betime for Grace and Mercy, as becometh every good Christian man to do.

Although the King was loth to hear any mention of death, yet perceiving the fame to rise upon the judgment of his Physicians, and feeling his own weakness, he disposed himself more quietly to hearken to the words of his exhortation, and to consider his life past. Which although he much accused, yet (said he) is the mercy of Christ able to pardon me all my Sins, though they were greater than they be. Master Denny being glad to hear him thus to speak, required to know his pleasure, whether he would have any learned man sent for to confer withal, and to open his mind unto. To whom the King answered again, that if he had any, he would have Doctor Cranmer, who was then lying at Croydon.
And therefore Master Denny asking the King whether he would have him sent for, I will first, said the King, take a little sleep, and then as I feel my self I will advise upon the matter.

After an hour or two, the King awaking, and feeling feebleness to increase upon him, commanded Doctor Cranmer to be sent for; but before he could come, the King was speechless, and almost senseless. Notwithstanding, perceiving Doctor Cranmer to be come, he reaching his hand to Doctor Cranmer, did hold him fast, but could utter no words unto him, and scarce was able to make any sign. Then the Archbishop exhorted him to put his trust in Christ, and to call upon his mercy, desired him, though he could not speak, yet to give some token with his eyes or with his hand, as he trusted in the Lord.
Then the King, holding him with his hand, did wring his hand in his as hard as he could, and so shortly after departed, after he had reigned in this land the term of thirty seven years and nine months, leaving behind him three Children, Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth.

Moreover, forasmuch as mention is inserted in this place of the good inclination of King Henry in his latter days to the reformation of Religion, by the occasion hereof it cometh also to mind, somewhat likewise to add by way of appendix touching the talk between the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, and the Duke of Suffolk Charles Brandon, as concerning the Kings purpose and intent conceived against the Bishop of Winchester Steven Gardiner, in that he could never allow any reformation in Religion in this Realm, and namely, being offended with this, that men should use in their talk, The Lord, as well as our Lord; the said Duke said unto the said Archb. We of the Council had him once at a good list, and should well have dispatched him from his Authority, if the Kings Majesty our Master had stay'd himself from admitting him to his presence, is then his Highness was content that we should thowly have sifted and tryed him. It was, my Lord (quoth the Duke to the Archbishop) at that time when Gardiner his Secretary was attached, and suffered for defending the Popes Authority. For then I and certain of the Counsell having conference with the Kings Majesty for that matter, his Highness was fully perswaded, that the Bishops Secretary, being in such special favour with his Master, would never stand to stiff in defence of the Bishop of Rome usurped Power and Authority, without his said Masters both advice, knowledge, and perswasion. For already (quoth the King) he played but in homely part with me, when he was Embassador to the Pope concerning my cause of divorce. And therefore quoth the King to me, I will first, my Lord, incontinently, and by assistance of two or three more of the Council, whom you think good, let him be committed to the Tower, to answer to such things as may be objected against him. This communication was in the evening, so that we purposed to have executed the Kings pleasure and commandment the next morning. Howbeit our talk was not so secret, but that some of his friends of the Privy Chamber (where he had many friends then) suspecting the matter, sent him word thereof. Who incontinently repaired to the Kings Presence, and finding some matter to minister unto the King, his Highness said to the Bishop, We do marvel that your Secretary hath thus notoriously offended against us and our Laws.

Sir Anthony Denny a great friend
to Winch.

It is surely thought that you are not all clear in this offence, but that you are of the same opinion with him, and therefore my Lord be plain with me, and let me know if you be that way infected or no. If you will tell me the truth, I will rather pardon the fault; but if you halt or dillymally with me for no favour at my hand.

With this monition Winchester fell down upon his knees, and besought his Majesty of Mercy and Pardon, manifestly confessing that he had long time been of that opinion with his said Secretary; and there bewailing himself promised from that day forward to reform his opinion and become a new man. Well, quoth the King, this way you have of me that which otherwise you should never have obtained. I am content to remit all things past, and pardon you upon your amendment.

The next morning I had word how the matter was handled, whereupon I came to his Highness and said; your Majesty hath prevented our Commission, which I and other had from your Grace concerning my Lord of Winchester committing to the Tower. Wot you what, quoth the King? He hath confessed himself as guilty in this matter as his man, and hath with much sorrow and penitence sued for my Pardon; and you know what my nature and custom hath been in such matters, ever more to pardon them that will not dillymally but confess their fault.

Thus wilily and politicly he got himself out of our hands. But if I had suspected this, I would have had him in the Tower over night, and stopped his journey to the Court. Well, said my Lord of Canterbury, he was evermore too good for you all.

Moreover as touching this foresaid Bishop of Winchester, forasmuch as he in King Edwards time bragged so much of his old Master of famous memory King Henry the eighth, to the intent that the glorious vanity of this Bishop, and of all other like unto him, may appear more notoriously to all men, here is to be noted by the testification as well of Master Denny as also of Sir Henry Nevil, who were there present witnesses of the matter, whose record was this, that King Henry before the time of his sickness, taking his Horse upon the Tarras at Windfor to ride out on hawking, fain standing before him the Lord Wriothley Lord Chancellor, with divers other Counsellors, and amongst them the Bishop of Winchester. Whereupon he called the Lord Chancellor, and said, Did not I command you he should come no more amongst you (meaning the Bishop)? Whereupon the Lord Chancellor answered, That his coming was to bring his Majesty word of a benevolence given unto him by the Clergy. Whereat the King said, Ah, let him come hither, and so he did his message, and the King went straight away.

Item, another time the King immediately after his repair to London fell sick, and caused divers times his whole Council to come unto him about his Will, and other his grave affairs. At what time the Bishop also would come up with them into the utter Privy Chamber, and there remain until the Council came from the King, and then go down with them again, to the end (as then was thought) to blind the Will withal.

Furthermore, as the King grew more in sickness, he considering upon his Will and Testament made before, at his going over to Bullain, willed the same to be drawn out again, with leaving out and excluding the Bishop of Winchester by Name from amongst his Executors. Which being to him no small cossey, and a cutting off of all their purposes; a way was found, that Sir Anthony Brown a principal Pillar of Winchesters side, pretending unto the King, as though by the negligence of the writer the Bishops Name had been left out of the Kings Will, kneeled down to the Kings Majesty lying in his Bed, and said; My Lord of Winchester I think by negligence is left out of your Majesties Will, who had done your Highness painful, long and notable service, and one without whom the rest shall not be able to overcome your great and weighty affairs committed unto them.

Hold your peace, quoth the King, I remembered him well enough, and of good purpose have left him out. For surely if he were in my Testament, and one of you, he would cumber you all, and you should never rule him, he is of so troublesome a nature. Mary, quoth the King, I myself could use him, and rule him to all manner of purposes, as seemed good unto me, but so shall you never do, and therefore talk no more of him to me in this behalf. Sir Anthony Brown, perceiving the King somewhat stiff herein, gave place to the Kings words at that time. Howbeit, seeking further occasion upon more persuasions put into his head, he took in hand once again to move the King to have the Bishop one of his Executors. When the King perceived that this instant sute would not cease, have you not yet done, quoth the King, to molest me in this matter? If you will not yet cease to trouble me, by the Faith I owe unto God, I will surely dispatch thee out of my Will also, and therefore let us hear no more of this matter. All this Sir Anthony Denny was heard to report to the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, of the said Archbishops Secretary who is yet alive, and witness unto the same.

And thus much touching the end of King Henry, who if he had continued a few months longer (all those obites and Masses, which appear in his Will made before he went to Bullain notwithstanding) most certain it is, and to be signified to all posterity, that his full purpose was to have repurged the estate of the Church, and to have gone through with the same, so that he would not have left one Mass in all England. For the more certain intelligence whereof, two things I have to lead me. The one is, the assured Report and Testimony of Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, hearing the King declare the same out of his own mouth, both to himself, and to Monsieur de Annebault Lord Admiral of the French Embassadour, in the Month of August a little before his death, as above may appear more at large. The other cause which leadeth me thereunto is also of equal credit, grounded upon the Declaration of the Kings own Mouth after that time, more near unto his death unto Bruno Embassadour of John Frederick, Duke of Saxony: Unto the which Embassadour of Saxony the King gave this answer openly, that if the quarrel of the Duke of Saxony were nothing else against the Emperour, but for Religion, he should stand to it strongly, and he would take his part, willing him not to doubt nor fear; and so with this answer he dismissed the Embassadour unto the Duke, openly in the hearing of these four sufficient witnesses, as the Lord Seymer Earl of Harford, Lord Lesley then Admiral, the Earl of Bedford Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Paget. But the secret working of Gods holy providence, which disposeth all things after his own wisdom and purpose, thought it good rather by taking the King away to reserve the accomplishment of this reformation of his Church to the peaceable time of his Son Edward and Elizabeth his Daughter, whose hands were yet undefiled with any Blood, and life unsupported with any violence or cruelty.

And thus to finish this Book, I thought here to close up King Henries Reign. But because a little vacant space of empty Paper remaineth behind needful to be filled up, to imploy therefore and to replenish the same with some matter or other, I thought to annex hereunto one story which happened in this King Henries Reign. Which albeit it serveth not to the purpose of this our matter now in hand, yet nevertheless to supply the room it may stand in some place, easier to refresh the travelled mind of the Reader wearied with other Stories or else to disclose the detestable impiety of these Counterfeit Sects of Monks and Friars, who, under the Hypocritical visour of pretended Religion, have so long seduced and deceived the World. Although the deceitful parts and practices of these fantastical Orders be so many and in all places so notorious; that they are not able to be expressed; yet the purpose of the King is he had lived, was to make a perfect reformation of Religion,

The Kings Answer to the Duke of Saxony, a little before his death,

amongst many, one you shall hear that chanced in this Kings days in the City of Orleance in France, by the Gray Friars, about the year of our Lord, 1534. The Story is this.

A Tragical History of certain Friers in France, in the City of Orleance, Anno 1534.

Ex Comment Jact.
Said
A Story of certain Friers in Orleance.

THe Majors Wife of the City of Orleance provided in her Will, to be buried without any pomp or solemnity. For when any departeth there, in some places the Belmen are hired to go about the City, and in places most frequented to assemble the people with the found of the Bell, and there to declare the Names and the Titles of those parties deceased, also where and when they shall be buried, exhorting the people to pray for them. And when the Coarse is carried forth, the most part of the begging Friers go withal to the Church, with many Torches and Tapers carried before them, and the more pomp and solemnity is used, the more is the concourse of people. But this Woman (as I said) would have none of all this gear done for her. Wherefore her Husband, which loved her well, followed her mind herein, and gave unto these greedy Cormorants the Friers which waited for their prey (in whose Church she was buried besides her Father and her Grandfather) six Crowns for a reward; whereas they gaped for a great deal more. And afterward when he cut down a Wood and sold it, the Friers craving to have part thereof freely and without money, he denied them: this took they wonderful grievously, and whereas they loved him not before, they devised now a way to be revenged, saying, that his Wife was damned everlastingly.

The workers of this Tragedy were Colyman and Steven of Arras, both Doctors of Divinity; and the first indeed was a Conjuror, and had all his Triquets and his Furniture concerning such matters in readiness, and they used the matter thus.

They set a young man which was a novice, above over the Vault of the Church, and when they came to mumble up their Mattins at Midnight, after their accustomed manner, he made a wonderful noise and shrieking aloft. Then went this Colyman to crossing and conjuring, but the other above would not speak. Being charged to make a sign to declare if he were a dumb Spirit, he ruffled and made a noise again, and that was the sign and token.

When they had laid this foundation, they went to certain of the chieftest in all the City, and such as favoured them most, and told them what an heavy case was chanced, yet did they not utter what it was, but intreated them to take the pains to come to their Service at night. When they were come, and the Service was begun, he that was aloft made a great noise. Being demanded what he would, and what he was, he signified that he might not speak, then was he commanded to answer to their Interrogatories by Signs and Tokens. Now, there was a hole made for the purpose, whereby, laying to his ear, he might hear and understand what the Conjuror said unto them. There was also a Table at hand, and when any question was asked, he strook and beat upon the Table, so that he might be heard beneath. Then first the Conjuror demanded whether he were any of them that had been buried there. After that, reckoning up many of their Names in order, whose bodies had been buried there, at the last he named the Majors Wife. Here he made a sign that he was the Spirit of that Woman. Then he asked whether she were damned, and for what desert or offence? Whether it were for covetousness, pride, or lechery, or not doing the works of charity, or else for this new sprung up Heresie and Lutheranism? Moreover, what was the cause that he made such a noise, and was so unquiet? Whether it were that the Body being buried within holy ground should be digged up again, and carried to some other place? To all these things he answered by signs in like case as he was commanded; whereby he affirmed, or denied every thing, striking twice or thrice upon the Table.

the Friers.

When he had thus signified that Luthers Heresie was the cause of her damnation, and that her Body must be taken up, the Friers desired the Citizens that were there present, to bear witness of such things as they had seen and heard, and set their hands to it in writing. But they taking advicement left they should both offend the Mayor, and bring themselves in trouble, refused to subscribe. Notwithstanding, the Friers took the Pixe with the Host and the Lords Body (as they call it) and all their Saints Reliques, and carried them to another place, and there they laid their Mals; which they are wont to do by the Popes Law, when a Church is suspended and must be hallowed again: and when the Bishops Official heard of this, he came thither to understand the matter better, and associating to him certain honest men, he commanded the Friar to conjure in his presence, and would have appointed certain to go up to the Vault, to see if any Spirit did there appear. But Steven of Arras was fore against it, and exhorted them earnestly that they should not so do, saying, that the Spirit ought not to be molested. And albeit the Official did earnestly urge them to conjure before him, yet could he not bring them to it. In the mean time the Mayor, making his friends privy what he would do, went to the King, and informed him of the whole matter. And because the Friers, trusting to their immunities and privileges, refused to come in judgment, the King chose certain out of the Court of Parliament at Paris, to examine the matter, and gave them full Authority so to do. Whereupon they were carried to Paris, and constrained to make answer, but they would confess nothing.

Then they were sent again to Prison, and kept apart, one from another; and the Novice was kept in Famous House a Senator, and being oftentimes examined, he would confess nothing, fearing lest he should after be murdered of them for slandering their Order. But when the Judges promised him that he should have no harm, and should come no more in the Friers hands, he declared to them the whole matter in order, and being brought before the others, he avouched the same. But they, albeit they were convicted, and in manner taken with the deed, yet refused they their Judges, and bragged of their privileges: but it was altogether in vain, for they were condemned in open judgment, that they should be carried again to Orleance, and committed to Prison, and afterwards brought openly to the Cathedral Church, and so to the place of punishment where malefactors are executed, and there should make open confession of their wickedness.

But even at the same time chanced a persecution against the Lutherans, which was the cause that this Sentence, albeit it was too gentle for so great offence, was not put in execution. For because the Name of the Lutherans was most odious, they feared lest the punishment of these men should not have been so much thought to be due for their offence, as done in reproach of the Order; and many thought that whatsoever should be done to them, it would be to the Lutherans a pleasant spectacle, and cause them much to rejoice.

This Order of the Franciscans were esteemed of the common people very holy; so that what time they were carried out of Paris, certain Women moved with pity followed them unto the Gate of the University, with many tears and sighs.

After they came to Orleance, and were bestowed in several Prisons, they began to boast again of their liberties and privileges: and at length, after long Imprisonment, they were discharged and set at liberty without any further punishment. Had not these persecutions before mentioned letted the matter, the King had determined, as it was certainly reported, to pluck down their House, and make it even with the ground. Ex Jean. Sleid. lib. 9.

But to leave the memory of this Idolatrous Generation, persecution not worthy any further to be named, let us occupy the God-time with some better matter, in remembering the Story of a good and constant Martyr, of the Lord before overpast, time, which suffered in Kent for the Word of God before Luthers time, as here in Story followeth.

John Brown a Blessed Martyr of Christ Jesus burned at Ashford by Archbishop Warham, and Doctor Fisher Bishop of Rochelster, about the second year of King Henry the eighth. Anno 1511.

* The Story of St. Brown

Fisher Bishop of Rochester.
A Chauntry Priest.
Walter More Gentleman.
Wil. More his Brother.
Children of Wye.
Baily errant.
Beare of Wilsborough.
Two Servants of W. Warham.

do you leave it, Sir, when the Mass is done? I cannot tell thee, said the Priest. Neither can you tell where to find the Mass is done, nor where you leave it when the Mass is done, how can you then save the Soul, said he? Go thy ways, said the Priest, I perceive thou art an Heretic, and I will be even with thee.

So at the landing, the Priest taking with him Walter More and William More two Gentlemen and Brethren, rode straightways to the Archbishop, who at that time was William Warham. Whereupon the said John Brown, within three days after, was sent for by the Archbishop. His bringers up were Children of Wye Baily Errant, and one Beare of Wilsborough, with two of the Bishops Servants. Who, with certain other being appointed for the same, came suddenly into his House upon him, the same day when his Wife was Church'd, as he was bringing in a Mef of Pottage to the board serving his guest: and so laying hands upon him, they let him upon his own Horse, and binding his feet under the Horses Belly, carried him away to Canterbury, neither he nor his Wife nor any of his friends knowing whether he went, nor whither he should: and there continuing the space of forty days, from Low Sunday till the Friday before Whit Sunday, through the cruel handling of the said Archbishop and the Bishop of Rochester Doctor Fisher, he was so pitiously treated, that his bare feet were set upon the hot burning Coals, to make him deny his Faith; which notwithstanding he would not do, but patiently abiding the pain, continued in the Lords quarrel unremovable. At length after all this cruelty sustained, his Wife yet not knowing where he was become, on Friday before Whit Sunday he was sent to Alford where he dwelt, the next day there to be burned.

In the mean time, as he was brought to the Town over night, there to be set in the Stocks, it happened as God would, that a young Maid of his House coming by, and seeing her Master, ran home and told her Mistress.

Then the coming to him, and finding him in the Stocks appointed to be burned the next morning, sat by him all the night long. To whom he then declared the whole Story or rather Tragedy how he was handled, and how his feet were burned to the Bones, by the two Bishops afore said, that he could not set them upon the ground, (he thanked God therefore) and all to make me, said he, to deny my Lord, which I will never do, for if I should deny him, said he in this World, he would deny me hereafter. And therefore I pray thee, said he, good Elizabeth, continue as thou hast begun, and bring up thy Children veritously in the fear of God.

And so the next day, which was on Whitsun-Even, this Godly Martyr was burned, where he standing at the Stake said this Prayer which followeth, holding up his hands.

The Prayer of John Brown at his death.

O Lord I yield me to thy Grace.
Grant me mercy for my trespasses.
Let never the Fiend my Soul chase.
Lord I will bow and thou shalt beat:
Let never my Soul come in Hell beat.

Into thy hand I commend my spirit, to whom it belongeth.
And so this blessed Martyr ended his life in peace, Ann. 1511.

This Story the said Elizabeth Brown his Wife did oft times relate to Alice her Daughter, who dwelt yet in the Parish of S. Laurence, testified the narration hereof unto me and certain others upon whose credible information I have recorded the time.

Furthermore, it is to be noted, that the said John Brown bare a fagot seven years before this, in the days of King Henry the seventh. Whose Son also Named Richard Brown, for the like cause of Religion, was imprisoned at Canterbury likewise, in the latter time of Queen Mary, and should have been burned with two more besides himself the next day after the death of Queen Mary, but that by the proclaiming of Queen Elizabeth they escaped.

Amongst other Injunctions and Letters of King Henry the eighth, written and set forth for reformation of Religion, he wrote one Letter to Edmund Boner, for abolishing of Images, Pilgrimages, Shrines, and other Monuments of Idolatry. Which letter being before expressed, we should also have annexed to the same the Letter or Mandate of Boner, directed in Latin to Richard Cloney his Sumner, appertaining to the due execution thereof. Which Letter because we have omitted before, the defect thereof I thought here in this vacant space to supply. The Letter written to Cloney in Latin thus beginneth.

NExt after the death of King Henry ſucceed-ed King Edward his Son, being of the age of nine years. He began his reign the eight and twentieth day of January, and reigned ſix years and eight months, and eight days, and deceased, Anno 1553, the ſixth day of July.

Of whoſe excellent vertues and ſingular graces wrought in him by the gift of God, although nothing can be ſaid enough to his commendation, yet becauſe the renowned fame of ſuch a worthy Prince, ſhall not utterly paſs our Story without ſome grateful remembrance, I thought in few words to touch ſome little portion of his praiſe taken out of the great heaps of matter, which might be inferred. For to ſtand upon all that might be ſaid of him, it would be too long : and yet to ſay nothing, it were too much unkind. If Kings and Princes, which have wiſely and vertuouſly governed, have found in all ages Writers to ſolemnize and celebrate their Acts and memory, ſuch as never knew them, nor were ſubject unto them, how much then are we Engliſh men bound not to forget our duty to King Edward ? a Prince although but tender in years, yet for his ſage and mature ripeneſs in wit and all prinly Ornaments, as I ſee but few to whom he may not be equal, ſo again I ſee not many to whom he may not juſtly be preferred.

ANNO 1547.
Comparison between King Josias and King
Edward.

King Edward, I find not with whom to make my match more aptly, than with good Josias. For as the one began his Reign at eight years of his age, so the other began at nine. Neither were their acts and zealous proceedings in Gods cause much discrepant. For as mild Josias plucked down the high Altars, cut down the Groves, and destroyed all Monuments of Idolatry in the Temple; the like corruptions, dross and deformities of Popish Idolatry, crept into the Church of Christ of long time, this Evangelical Josias King Edward removed, and purged the true Temple of the Lord: Josias restored the true worship and service of God in Jerusalem, and destroyed the Idolatrous Priests; King Edward in England, likewise abolishing Idolatrous Masses and false invocation, reduced again Religion to a right sincerity, and more would have brought to perfection if life and time had answered to his godly purpose. And though he killed not, as Josias did, the Idolatrous Sacrificers, yet he put them to silence, and removed them out of their places.

K. Josias and K. Edward
only differ in continuance of reign.

Moreover, in King Josias days the holy Scripture and Book of Gods Word was utterly neglected and cast aside, which he most graciously repaired and restored again. And did not King Edward the like with the self same Book of Gods blessed Word, and with other wholesome Books of Christian Doctrine, which before were decayed and extinguished in his Fathers days by sharp Laws and severe Punishments here in England? Briefly in all points and respects, between him and this our godly King no odds is to be found, but only in length of time and reign. Who if he might have reached (by the sufferance of God) to the continuance of Josias Reign; proceeding in those beginnings which in his youth appeared, no doubt but of his acts and doings some great perfection would have infused to this Church and Realm. But the manifold iniquities of English-men deserved another Plague as after fell amongst us; as in sequel of the Story hereafter (God willing) shall be declared.

In the mean time, to proceed in the excellent virtues of this Christian young Josias (as we have begun) although neither do we know, nor will leisure serve us to stand upon a full description of all his acts; yet will we (God willing) give a little taste of the Noble nature and Princely qualities of this King, whereby the Reader may esteem with himself what is to be thought of the rest of his doings, though they be not here all expressed.

K. Edward beloved of his Subjects.

And first to begin with that which is the chiefest property of all other exten things in a Prince to be considered, that is, to be loved of his Subjects; such were the hearts of all English people toward this King inclined, and so toward him still continued, as never came Prince in this Realm more highly esteemed, more amply magnified, or more dearly and tenderly beloved of all his Subjects; but especially of the good and learned sort, and yet not so much beloved, as also admirable by reason of his rare towardness and hope both of virtue and learning, which in him appeared above the capacity of his years. And as he was intirely of his Subjects beloved, so with no less good will he loved them again; of nature and disposition meek, and much inclined to clemency. He always spared and favoured the life of Man; as once appeared in a certain differtation of his had with Master Cheek in favouring the life of Hereticks; in so much that when Joan Butcher should be burned, all the Council could not move him to put to his hand, but were fain to get Doctor Crammer to perswade with him, and yet neither could he with much labour induce the King so to do, saying; What my Lord? Will ye have me to send her quick to the Divil in her error? So that Doctor Crammer himself confessed, that he had never so much to do in all his life, as to cause the King to put to his hand, saying, that he would lay all the charge thereof upon Crammer before God. There wanted in him no promptness of wit, gravity of sentence, ripeness of judgment. Favour and love of Religion was in him from his Childhood; Such an Organ given of God to the Church of England he was, as England had never better. Over and besides these notable excellencies, and other great virtues in him, add moreover skill and knowledge of tongues and other Sciences, whereunto he seemed rather born than brought up.

K. Edward
well skilled in the Tongues.

Moreover, there wanted not in him to this felicity of wit and dexterity of nature, like happiness of institution of good Instructors. Neither did there lack again in him any diligence to receive that which they would teach him: inasmuch that in the midst of all his play and recreation he would always observe and keep his hour appointed to his study; using the same with much intention, till time called him again from his Book to pastime. In this his study and keeping of his hours he did so profit, that Doctor Crammer, the Archbishop then of Canterbury, beholding his towardness, his readiness in both Tongues in translating from Greek to Latin, form Latin to Greek again, in declaiming with his School-fellows without help of his Teachers, and that ex tempore, would weep for joy, declaring to Doctor Cox his School master, that he would never have thought that to have been in him, except he had seen it himself.

The readiness of King Edward to his Book.

Doctor Cox
K. Edwards
master.

To recite here his witty sentences, his grave reasons, which many times did proceed from him, and how he would sometimes, in a matter discoursed by his Council, add therunto of his own moe reasons and causes touching the said matter, than they themselves had or could devise, it was almost incredible in that age to see, and tedious here to prosecute.

This in him may seem notorious and admirable, that he in these immature years could tell and recite all the Ports, Havens, and Creeks, not within his own Realm only, but also in Scotland, and likewise in France, what coming in there was, how the Tide served in every Haven or Creek; moreover, what burthen and what wind served the coming into the Haven.

Also of all his Justices, Magistrates, Gentlemen that bare any authority within his Realm, he knew their names, their housekeeping, their religion, and conversation what it was. Few Sermons or none in his Court, especially in the Lord Protectors time, but he would be at them. Again, never was he present at any commonly, but he would except them, or note them with his own hand.

K. Edward
knew the names and religion of all his Magistrates.

Besides and above all other notes and examples of his commendation, as touching the chiefest point which ought most to touch all Men, for the maintaining, promoting, preferring, embracing, zealous, and defending the true cause and quarrel of Christs holy Gospel, what was his study, his zealous fervency, his admirable constancy therein, by this one example following, amongst many other, may notably appear.

In the days of this King Edward the Sixth, Caroles the Emperor made request to the said King and his Council, to permit Lady Mary (who after succeeded in the Crown) to have Mass in her House without prejudice of the Law. And the Council on a time, sitting upon matters of policy, having that in question, sent Crammer then Archbishop of Canterbury, and Ridley then Bishop of London, to entreat the King for the same. Who coming to his Grace, alledged their reasons and perswasions for the accomplishing thereof. So the King hearing what they could say, replied his answer again out of the Scriptures, so groundedly, gravely, and full, that they were enforced to give place to his replication, and grant the same to be true. Then they, after long debating in this manner with his Majesty, laboured politicly in another sort, and alledged what dangers the denying thereof might bring to his Grace, what breach of amity of the Emperors part, what troubles, what unkindness, and what occasions sundry ways it would enforce, &c. Unto whom the King answered, willing them to content themselves, for he would (he said) spend his life and all he had, rather than to agree and grant to that he knew certainly to be against the Truth. The which when the Bishops heard, notwithstanding they urged him still to grant, and would by no means have his Nay: Then the good King seeing their importunate suits that needs they would have his Majesty to consent thereto, in the end his tender heart bursting out into bitter weeping, and sobbing, he desired them to be content. Whereat the Bishops themselves, seeing the Kings zeal and constancy, wept as fast as he, and took their leave of his Grace; and coming from him, the Archbishop took Master Cheek his Schoolmaster by the hand, and said, Ah, Master Cheek, you may be glad glad all the days of our life that you have such a Scholar, for he hath more Divinity in his little Finger, than all we have in all our Bodies. Thus the Lady Marie Maie for that time was flayed.

Over and besides these Heavenly graces and virtues, most chiefly to be required in all faithful and Christian Magistrates which have governance of Christs Flock, neither was he also unprovided of such outward gifts and knowledge as appertain to the governance of his Realm politick. Inasmuch that neither he was unexpert or ignorant of the Exchange, and all the circumstances of the same touching doings beyond the Sea, but was as skilful in the practices thereof, and could say as much therein, as chiefest Doers in his affairs. Likewise in the entertaining of Embassadors, to whom he would give answer, and that to every part of their Oration, to the great wonder of them that heard him, doing that in his tender years by himself, which many Princes at their mature age seldom are wont to do but by other. And as he was a great noter of things that pertained to Princely affairs, so had he a Chelt severally to himself for every year, for the keeping of such records and matters as pait and were concluded by the Council. Of whom also he would require a reason and cause of every thing that should pass their judgments. And of this Chelt he would evermore keep the Key about him. His notes also he cyphered in Greek Letters, to the end that those that waited upon him should not read nor know what he had written.

He had moreover great respect to Justice, and to the dispatch of poor mens Sutes, and would appoint hours and times with Master Cox, then Master of his Requests, how and by what order they might be sped in their causes without long delay and attendance, and so also debate with him, that their matters might be heard and judged with equity accordingly.

What Hieronymus Cardanus saith of him, concerning his knowledge in liberal Sciences, I thought here to express in his own words, both in Latin and English, so much the rather, because he speaketh of his own experiment, and upon the present talk which he had with the King himself. The words of Cardanus first in Latin be these.

Hier. Card. de Genituris.

Aderant enim illi gratie. Linguas enim multas ad-huc puer callebat. Anglicam natalem, Latinam, Gallicam, non expers (ut audio) Græcæ, Italianæ, & Hi-spanicæ, & forsitan aliarum. Propriam, Gallicam & La-tinam exacte tenebat, & ad omnia docilis erat. Non illi dialectica deerat, non naturalis Philosophiæ principia, non musica. Humanitas mortalitatis nostræ imodo, gravitas Regiæ majestatis, in dolo tanto principe dig-na. In universum magno miraculo humanarum rerum, tanti ingenii, & tantæ expectatiōis puer educabatur.
Non hæc Rhetoricæ exornata veritatem excedunt, sed sunt minoræ.

Decimum quintum adhuc agebat annum. Interrogabat (Latine non minus quam ego polite & prompte loquebatur) quid continerent libri tui de rerum veritate? hos enim no-minis Majestatis sue dedicaveram. Tum ego Cometarum primum causam diu frustra quesitam in primo capite offen-do. Quenam, inquis ille? Concursum, ego aio, luminis erraticorum siderum. At Rex, Quomodo, cum diversis moribus astra moveantur, non statim dissipantur aut move-antur eorum motu. At ego, moventur equidem, sed longe celerius illis ob diversitatem aspectus, velut in Chrysallo & Sole cum iris in pariete relucet. At Rex, & quam patet magnam facit loci differentiationem. At Rex, & quam patet absque subiecto illud fieri potest, iridi enim paries subiectum est? Tum ego, velut in lactea via, & luminum re-flectione, cum plures candelæ prope accessæ medium quoddam lucidum & candidum efficiunt. Itaque ex ungue Leonem, ut dici solet. Fuit hic in maxima omnium aut bonorum aut eruditorum expectatiōe ob ingeniositatem atque suavitatem morum. Prius cæperat favere artibus quam virescere, & noscere antequam uti posset. Conatus qui-dam humane conditionis, quem non solum Angliæ, sed orbis crepimur immature desistere debet. O quam bene dixit ille,

Immodicus brevis est ætas & rara senectus.

Specimen virtutis exhibere potuit, non exemplum. Ubi gravitas Regia requirebatur, senem videres, ut blandus erat, & comis, ætatem referebat. Chelt pulsat, publicis negotiis admovebatur, liberalis animo, atque in his patrem amulabatur, &c.

Hæc Cardanus.

The same in English.

There was in him a towardly disposition and pregnancy apt to all human literature; as who being yet a Child, had the knowledge of divers Tongues, first of the English his own natural Tongue, of the Latin also and of the French; neither was he ignorant (as I hear) of the Greek, Italian, and Spanish Tongues, and of other Languages peradventure more. In his own, in the French, and in the Latin Tongue singularly perfect, and with the like facility apt to receive all other. Neither was he ignorant in Logick, in the principles of natural Philosophy, or in Mute. There was in him lacking neither humanity, the Image of our mortality, a Princely gravity and majesty, nor any kind of towardness becoming a noble King. Briefly, it may seem a miracle of nature, to behold the excellent wit and forwardness that appeared in him being yet but a Child. This I speak not rhetorically, to amplify things, or to make them more than truth is, yea the truth is more than I do utter.

Being yet but fifteen year of age, he asked of me in Latin (in which Tongue he uttered his mind no less readily and eloquently than I could do myself) what my Books which I had dedicated unto him, De varietate rerum, do contain; I said that in the first Chapter was shewed the cause of Comets, or blazing Stars, which hath been long sought for, and yet hitherto source fully found. What cause, said he, is that? The concourse or meeting, said I, of the Light and wandering Planets and Stars.
To this the King thus replied again: Forasmuch, said he,
as the motion of the Stars keepeth not one course, but is divers and variable by continual alteration, how is it then that the cause of these Comets either doth not quickly vade and vanish, or that the Comet doth not keep one certain and uniform course and motion with the said Stars and Planets? Whereunto I answered, that the Comet hath his course and moving, but much more swifter than they, because of the diversity of aspect, as we see in Chrysal, and in the Sup when the form of the Rainbow reboundeth on the Wall. For a little mutation maketh a great difference of place. Then said the King, and how can that be, having no subject: for of the Rainbow the Wall is the subject? Like, said I, as in Lactea via, or in reflection of lights, as where many Candles be lighted and set near together, in the middle they cause a certain bright and white light to appear, &c.

And so by this little trial a great guess may be given what was in this King. In whom no doubt was a great hope and expectation amongst all good and Learned Men, both for the ingenious forwardness and amiable sweetness which in his conditions appeared. First he began to love and favour liberal Arts and Sciences, before he knew them, and to know them before he could use them, whose mortal condition and sudden decay and decay in those tender and unripe years, not only England, but all the world hath cause to lament. O how truly is it said of the Poet,

Things that be exceeding excellent,
Be not commonly long permanent.

A few or light only of excellency he could give us; example he could not give. Where a Kingly Majesty required gravity, there you should have seen him a sage and an old man, and yet gentle and pleasant also, according as the condition of his age then required. He played well upon the Lute, he had also to do in handling of weighty affairs of the Realm. He was liberal and bountiful in heart, and therein he imitated his Father, &c.

Ex Hier. Cardano.

Thus after the godly disposition and properties of this King briefly in this wife declared, now, God willing, we will intermeddle something to describe the order and proceedings which he followed in his administration and government of both the States, as well Politick as especially Ecclesiastick. Who after the decease of his Father coming into the Crown, because he was of young and tender age, he was committed to sixteen Governours. Amongst whom, especially the Lord Edward Semer Duke of Somerset his Uncle was assigned and joyned to him as Protector and Overseer of him and of the Commonwealth. A Man not so highly advanced for his consanguinity, as also for his noble virtues, and especially for his favour to Gods Word, worthy of his vocation and calling. Through the indeavour and industry of which Man, first that monstrous Hydra with six Heads, the six Articles I mean (which devoured up so many Men before) was abolished and taken away: By reason whereof the Councils and proceedings of Winchester began to decay, who, storming at the same matter, wrote to the Lord Protector in the cause thereof, as by the Letters is to be seen.

Reformation by King Edward.

The holy Scriptures he restored to the mother Tongue, Masses he extinguished and abolished. Furthermore, after softer beginnings, by little and little, greater things followed in the reformation of the Churches. Then such, as before were in banishment for the danger of the truth, were again received to their Country. To be short, a new face of things began now to appear, as it were in a Stage new players coming in, the old being thrust out. For the most part the Bishops of Churches and Diocesses were changed. Such as had been dumb Prelates before, were compelled to give place to other then, that would preach and take pains.

Annos 1547. Petrus Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Pagninus.

Besides other also, out of foreign Countries men of learning and notable knowledge were sent for and received, among whom was Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, and Paulus Pagninus. Of whom the first taught at Oxford; the other two professed at Cambridge, and that with no small commendation of the whole University. Of the old Bishops some were committed to one ward, some to another. Bonner Bishop of London was committed to the Marthaleys, and estoons for his contempt and misdemeanour depoled from his Bishoprick, as in further process followeth to be seen. Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, with Tonitall Bishop of Durham, was cast into the Tower for his disobedience, where he kept his Christmas three years together, more worthy of some other place without the Tower, if it had pleased God otherwise not to have meant a further Plague to this Realm by that man.

Edm. Bonner Bishop of London committed to the Marthaleys.

Gardiner and Tonitall committed to the Tower.

But these meek and gentle times of King Edward, under the government of this Noble Protector, have this one commendation proper unto them, that amongst the whole number of the Popish sort, of whom some privily did steal out of the Realm, many were crafty dissemblers, some were open and manifest adversaries, yet of all that multitude there was not one man that lost his life. In sum, during the whole time of the six years of this King, much tranquillity, and as it were a breathing time was granted to the whole Church of England: so that the rage of persecution ceasing, and the sword taken out of the adversaries hand, there was now no danger to the godly, unless it were only by wealth and prosperity, which many times bringeth more damage in corrupting mens minds, than any time of persecuting or affliction.

Briefly, during all this time, neither in Smithfield nor any other quarter of this Realm, any was heard to suffer for any matter of Religion, either Papist or Protellant, either for one opinion or other, except only two, one an Englishwoman, called Joan of Kent, and the other a Dutchman, named George, who died for certain Articles not much necessary here to be rehearsed.

Besides these two, there was none else in all King Edwards Reign, that died in any cause of Religion, but one Thomas Dobbe, who in the beginning of this Kings Reign was apprehended and imprisoned for speaking against the Idolatry of the Mass, and in the same prison died; as in the Story here insueth to be seen.

The Dobbe imprisoned, and in prison died.

This Thomas Dobbe, being a Student and a Master of Art in Cambridge, was brought up in the College called Saint Johns College, and Fellow of the same, where he increased in the study of good Letters, among his equals very forward, of nature and disposition simple and modest, of zeal toward God fervent, patient in injuries, injurious to no man, of much like fort and condition as in Doves, which without all bitterness of Gall are more apt to receive injury than to work wrong at any.

Doves as Philosophers do write, naturally have no Gall.

At length this godly Man, intending with himself and adding his mind to the Christian state of Matrimony, resorted to a certain Maiden not far off where he dwelt. For the which cause he was greatly molested, and wickedly abused by three of that College, whose names were Hutchinson, Pindare, and Taylor, who with their malicious handling, scornful dealing, opprobries, rebukes, and contumelies, so much vexed the virtuous simplicity of the man, that they never left him, till at length they wearied him out of the College. Who there having no rest nor quietness, by reason of the unreasonable and virulent handling of his adversaries, was compelled to seek some other place wherein to settle himself. Upon the occasion whereof coming up unto London, it chanced him to pass through Pauls Church, where it happened that at the South side of the Church at the same time there was a Priest at Mass, more buffy than well occupied, being at the elevation as he passed by. The young Man replete with godly zeal, pitying the ignorance and idolatry of the people, in honouring that so devoutly which the Priest lifted up, was not able to forbear, but opening his mouth and turning to the people, he exhorted them not to honour the visible Bread as God, which neither was God, nor yet ordained of God to be honoured, &c. with such other words moe of Christian information. For which cause straightway he was apprehended by the Maior, and afterward accused to the Bishop of Canterbury, and committed to the Counter then in Breadstreet, where he not long continued, but falling into a sickness, how or whereupon I cannot tell, shortly upon the same changed this mortal life. Whose Pardon notwithstanding was obtained of the Lord Protector, and should have been brought him, if he had continued. And thus much concerning Thomas Dobbe and other.

Over and besides, I find, that in the first year of the Reign of King Edward, which was Anno 1547, there was one John Hume, Servant to Master Lewman of Wresel apprehended, accused, and sent up to the Archbishop of Canterbury, by the said Master Lewman his Master and Margaret Lewman his Mistress, for these Articles.

1. First, for denying the Sacrament (as it was then called of the Altar) to be the real flesh and blood of Christ.
2. For saying that he would never rail his Bonet unto it, to be burned therefore.
3. For saying that if he should hear Mass, he should be burned.

For this was he sent up by his Master and Mistress aforesaid, with special Letters unto the Archbishop, requiring him severely to be punished by the Law for the same. But because I find no execution following thereupon, I therefore pass over this story of him.

These things premised, when this virtuous and godly young Prince (induced as you have heard with special graces from God) was now peaceably stablished in his Kingdom, and had a Council about him, grave, wise, and zealous in Gods cause, especially his Uncle the Duke of Somerset, he then most earnestly likewise desired, as well the advancement of the true honour of Almighty God, and the planting of his sincere Religion, as also the utter sup-

{ KING suppression and extirpation of all Idolatry, superstition, hypocrisy, and other enormities and abuses, throughout his Realms and Dominions : and therefore following, as is before expressed, the good example of King Josias, he determined forthwith to enter into some reformation of Religion in the Church of England.

And forasmuch as at his first entry (notwithstanding his Fathers good beginning in abolishing the usurped power of Antichrist) he yet found most of his Laws greatly repugning against this his zealous enterprise, he therefore purposed by the advice of his said wife and honourable Council, and of his own regal power and authority, somewhat to prosecute his godly purpose, until such time as by the consent of the whole estate of Parliament he might establish a more free, perfect, and uniform order therein.

Whereupon intending first a general Visitation over all the Bishopricks within his Realm, (thereby as well to understand, as also to address the abuses in the same) he chose out certain wise, learned, discreet and worshipful Personages to be his Commissioners in that behalf, and to dividing them into several Companies, assigned unto them several Diocesses to be visited; appointing likewise unto every Company one or two godly learned Preachers, which at every Session should in their preaching both instruct the people in the true Doctrine of the Gospel of Christ, and in all love and obedience to the same, and also earnestly dehort them from their old superstition and wonted Idolatry. And that they might be more orderly directed in this their Commission, there were delivered unto them certain Injunctions and Ecclesiastical Orders drawn out by the Kings learned Council, the which they should both inquire of, and also command in his Majesties behalf to be thenceforth observed of every person, to whom they did severally appertain within their sundry Circuits.

In the which amongst other things, it was first enjoyned, that all Ecclesiastical persons should themselves observe, and cause to be observed of other, all such Statutes as were made for the abolishing of the Bishop of Romes usurped power, and establishing of the Kings supreme Authority, and that they should every one, four times in the year at the least, in their publick Sermons declare unto the people, that the one, being most arrogantly usurped against the Word of God, was now justly taken away, and the other (according to the very true meaning of the same word) was of most loyal duty only to be obeyed of all his Graces subjects.

And again, that every the foresaid Ecclesiastical person, having Cure, should preach, or cause to be preached within their several Cures, one Sermon every quarter of the year. In the which they should sincerely set forth the Word of God, and exhort the people unto the works of Faith and mercy prescribed in the same word, and not unto works devised by mans fantasies, as going on Pilgrimages and otherlike Idolatrous Superstitions; the which they should also to the uttermost of their powers reprove and speak against, declaring that all grace and goodness ought only to be sought for at Gods hand as the alone giver thereof, and not at any other creature: And that they should not only forthwith take down and destroy all such Images as had been heretofore abused by Pilgrimage or offerings, within their said Cures; but also should not thenceforth suffer any Lights or other Idolatrous oblation to be made or set up before any other Image than was yet suffered in the Church.

Also that every Holy-day (having no Sermon in their Church) they should immediately after the Gospel distinctly read in the Pulpit the Lords Prayer, the Belief and the Ten Commandments of Almighty God in the English Tongue; exhorting the people not only to learn them their selves, but also to teach them to their Children and Families, and also should charge all Parents and Governors of Households, to bring up their youth in some good exercise or occupation, whereby they might afterwards serve the Commonwealth, and not run about like Vagabonds and idle Loyerers, and thereby incur the danger of the Laws.

And furthermore, that the said persons, having Cure, should see the holy Sacraments of Christ reverently ministered within their Cures, and that if any of them (by special licence or other causes expressed in the Statutes of this Realm) should be at any time absent from their Benefices, that then they should leave in their rooms some godly, learned, and discreet Curate, that were able to instruct the people in all truth and godliness, not seeking themselves, but rather the profit of their Flock.

And likewise, that they should see provided and set up in some most convenient and open place of every their several Churches, one great Bible in English, and one Book of the Paraphrases of Erasmus upon the Gospels, both in English, that the people might reverently, without any argument or contention, read and hear the same at such times as they listed, and not to be inhibited therefrom by the Parson and Curate, but rather to be the more encouraged and provoked thereto.

And that the said Parsons and Curates should not at any time (but for necessary causes) haunt any Tavern or Alehouse, neither should spend their time idly in unlawful Games, but at all their convenient leisures should give themselves to the reading or hearing of the holy Scriptures.

Moreover, that in the time of Confession every Lent they should examine their Parishioners, whether they could say the Lords Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Articles of the Christian Faith: and that if they could not, they should then reprove them, declaring further unto them, that they ought not to presume to come unto the Lords Table, without the true knowledge thereof, and earnest desire to fulfil the same.

Also that they should not admit any Man to preach within their Cures, but such as were lawfully licensed thereunto; and that they having at any time before extolled and praised any Idolatrous Pilgrimage, or other superstition, should now openly recant the same before the people.

And if there were any open hinderer or disturber of the reading or preaching of the Word of God within their Parishes, that then they should forthwith detect the same unto the Kings Council, or unto some Justice of Peace to them next inhabiting.

And further, that learning and knowledge might be the better maintained, it was also ordained herein, that every Beneficed person that might yearly dispend twenty pounds or upward, and not resident upon their Cures, should pay, towards the relief of the Poor within their Parish every year, the fortieth part of their Fruits and profits: and likewise that every such as might dispend one hundred pounds yearly, or more, should for every hundred pound give a competent exhibition to some poor Scholar within one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, or else in some other Grammar school of the Realm.

And also that every Priest, being under the degree of a Bachelor of Divinity, should have of his own one New Testament in English and Latin, with the Paraphrases of Erasmus upon the same, and should diligently read and study thereupon, and should collect and keep in memory all such comfortable places of the Scripture, as do set forth the mercy, benefits, and goodness of Almighty God towards all penitent and believing persons, that they might thereby comfort their Flock in all danger of death, despair, or trouble of conscience: and that therefore every Bishop in their Visitations should from time to time try and examine them how they had profited in these their Studies.

And although the Mass was then still by the Law retained, yet was it enjoined, that at every high Mass the laye or finger thereof should openly and distinctly read the Gospel and the Epistle in English, in the Pulpit, or in some other convenient place that the people might hear the same. And in like place and manner should read every Holyday and Sunday at Mattins one Chapter of the New Testament in English, omitting therefore three of their nine Latin Lessons, with there Responds; and at Evening likewise, immediately after Magnificat, one Chapter of the Old Testament instead of their wonted Responds and memories.

Furthermore, because of the vain contentions that often fall among the people for going on Procession, it was ordained, that thenceforth the Priests and Clerks should kneel in the middit of the Church, and there distinctly Ecclesiastical persons not to haunt Taverns or play at unlawful game.

None to preach but lawfully licensed.

That all hinderers of Gods word, and favourers of the contrary proceedings should be detected. Ecclesiastical and beneficed persons, what they must give to the poor. Every Benefice of 100 pounds, to find a scholar at the University.

of the Realm, there were also certain others particularly appointed for the Bishops only, which being delivered unto the Commissioners were likewise at their Visitations committed: unto the said Bishops with charge to be inviolably observed and kept upon pain of the Kings Majesties displeasure; the effect whereof is as in manner followeth.

First that they should, to the uttermost of their wit and understanding, see and cause all and every singular the Kings Injunctions theretofore given, or after to be given from time to time, in and through their Diocets, duly, faithfully, and truly to be kept, observed, and accomplished, and that they should personally Preach within their Diocets, every quarter of a year once at the least, that is to say, once in their Cathedral Churches, and thrice in other several places of their Dioceses, whereas they should fee it most convenient and necessary, except they had a reasonable excuse to the contrary. Likewise, that they should not retain in their service or household any Chaplain, but such as were Learned, or able to Preach the Word of God, and those they should also cause to exercise the same.

Moreover it was ordained that every Dean, Archdeacon,

Moreover it is ordained that every Dean, Archdeacon, Master of Collegiate Churches or Hospitals, and Prebendaries (being Priests) should himself personally preach twice every year at least, in some place place where he had jurisdiction and living; and that they and all other Curates should teach the people, that no rian of any private affection ought maliciously to violate any Ceremony in the Church, then not abrogated by the Kings authority; so likewise they ought not on the other side to use them superstitiously or idolatrously, in attributing to them remission of sins, driving away of evil Spirits, and other such like dreams and fantasies of Men, or, in setting an confidence of obtaining grace by any them. And further that they should utterly take away and destroy all Shrines and Monuments of fained Miracles, Pilgrimages, and other Idolatrous superstition, as well in their Churches, as within their private Houses.

Also that the should fee provided within their Churches a Froing and chit Cheft for the fafe keeping of the peoples benevolence given towards the relief of the poor, and that the faid Curates fhould earnestly exhort and move their Parishioners (efpecially at the making of their Testaments) that as they had been theretofore willing to be-flow much of their fubftance upon vain, fuperftitious and blind devotions contrary to Gods Word, fo now they would be much more ready to give fome Portion thereof unto their poor and needy Brethren, knowing the fame to be not only commanded in the Word of God, but alfo promifed to be rewarded. And for the better relief of the Poor, it was alfo appointed that all money and profits rifing upon Fraternities, Guilds, Stocks, & Churches, or given to the hindring of Idolatrous Lights, fhould be converted for that prelent unto the fame use.
 Laft of all, for the want of Learned Curates and other good Teachers, it was enjoyed that the Curates (having no Preacher) fhould every Sunday read unto the people in their Churches one of the Homilies which fhould be fhortly fet forth for the fame purpofe by the Kings authority; and that when any Homily or Sermon fhould be preached or read, then the Prime and Hours fhould be omitted.

There were to be divers other Articles in the same Injunctions appointed for Commines and due order in the Churches; as for repairing of Chancels, and Priests Houses; for keeping of a Register Book of Weddings, Christnings and Burials, for reading of these Injunctions every quarter, for due paying of Tithes, for forbidding of any other Interuption of Service in the Church, or Fasting days, for making of comely Pulpits for the Preachers, for avoiding of Idleness in buying and selling of Benefices, for the charitable using of Priests, for praying only upon the English and Latin Primers set forth by King Henry the Eighth, for the teaching of his Grammar in the common Schools, and lastly, that the Chantry Priests should teach young Children either to Write and Read, or else some other good and profitable exercises; as it doth more fully and amply appear in the same Injunctions at large set forth in the 684th Page of the first Book of the Acts and Monuments of the Church heretofore Imprinted.

Besides these general Injunctions for the whole Estate

Moreover, that they should not give Orders to any person, but such as were learned in holy Scripture: neither should deny them that were learned in the same, being of honest conversation and living. And lastly, that they should not at any time or place Preach or set forth unto the people any Doctrine contrary or repugnant to the effect and intent contained and set forth in the Kings Highness Homilies, neither yet should admit or give licence to any to Preach within their Dioceses, but to such as they should know (or at least assuredly trust) would do the same. And if at any time by hearing, or by report proved, they should perceive the contrary, they should then incontinent not only inhibit that person so offending, but also punish him and revoke their licence.

Now during the time that the Commissioners were occupied abroad in their Circuits about the speedy and diligent execution of these godly and zealous Orders and Decrees of the King and his Council, his Majesty (with the advice of the same) yett fill desiring a further reformation as well in this case of Religion, as also in some others of his civil Government, appointed a Parliament of the three Estates of his Realm to be summoned against the fourth day of November, in the first year of his Reign, and the year of our Lord one thousand five hundred forty and seven, which continued unto the twenty fourth day of December then next following. In the which Session, inasmuch as his Highness minded the governance and order of his people to be in perfect unity and concord in all things, and especially in the true Faith and Religion of God, and therewithal also duly weighed the great dan-repealed.

KING the Scriptures, or in any wife touching, mentioning or concerning any of the said matters; and also one other Statute made in the five and thirtieth year of the Reign of the said King Henry the Eighth, concerning the qualification of the Statute of the six Articles, and all and every other Act or Acts of Parliament, concerning Doctrine or matters of Religion, and all and every Branch, Article, Sentence, Matter, Pains, or Forfeitures contained, mentioned, or in any wife declared in any of the same Acts and Statutes, should from thenceforth be utterly repealed, made void, and of none effect.

By occasion whereof, as well all such his godly Subjects, as were then still abiding within the Realm, had free liberty publicly to profess the Gospel; as also many learned and zealous Preachers, before banished, were now both licensed freely to return home again, and also encouraged boldly and faithfully to travel in their Function and Calling, so that God was much glorified, and the people in many places greatly edified.

Moreover, in the same Session his Majesty with the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in the same Parliament assembled, thoroughly understanding by the judgment of the best Learned, that it was more agreeable unto the first Institution of the Sacrament of the most precious Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, and also more conformable to the common use and practise both of the Apostles, and of the Primitive Church, by the space of five hundred years and more after Christs Ascension, that the said holy Sacrament should be ministered unto all Christian people under both the kinds of Bread and Wine, than under the form of Bread only; and also that it was more agreeable unto the said first Institution of Christ, and the usage of the Apostles and Primitive Church, that the people being present should receive the same with the Priest, than that the Priest should receive it alone; did by their Authority moreover enact, that the said holy Sacrament should be from thenceforth commonly delivered and ministered unto the people, throughout the Churches of England and Ireland, and other the Kings Dominions, under both the kinds of Bread and of Wine, except necessity otherwise required: and also that the Priest, that should minister the same, should at the least one before exhort all persons which should be present, likewise to reform and prepare themselves to receive the same. And at the day prefixed, after some godly Exhortation made by the Minister, wherein should be further expressed the benefit and comfort promised to them which worthily receive this holy Sacrament, and the danger and indignation of God threatened to them which presume to receive the same unworthily, to the end that every man might try and examine his own conscience before he should come thereunto; the said Minister should not without a lawful cause deny the same to any person that would devoutly and humbly desire it; any Law, Statute, Ordinance, or Custom contrary thereunto in any wife notwithstanding.

After which most godly consent of the Parliament, the King being no less desirous to have the form of Administration of the Sacrament truly reduced to the right Rule of the Scriptures and first use of the Primitive Church, than he was to establish the same by the Authority of his own Regal Laws, appointed certain of the most grave and best learned Bishops, and other of his Realm, to assemble together at his Castle of Windsor, there to argue and intreat upon this matter, and conclude upon and set forth one perfect and uniform Order according to the rule and use aforesaid.

Candles not to be born on Candlemas-day. Alms forbidden on Ash-Wednesday.

And in the mean time while that the Learned were thus occupied about their Conferences, the Lord Protector and the rest of the Kings Council, further remembering that that time of the year did then approach, wherein were practised many superstitious Abuses and blasphemous Ceremonies against the Glory of God, and truth of his Word (determining the utter abolishing thereof) directed their Letters unto the godly and reverend Father Thomas Crammer, then Archbishop of Canterbury, and Metropolitan of England, requiring him that upon the receipt thereof he should will every Bishop within his Province, forthwith to give in charge unto all the Curates of their Dioceffes, That neither Candles should be any more born upon Candlemas-day, neither yet Alms used in Lent, nor Palms upon Palm-Sunday.

Whereupon the Archbishop, zealously favouring the good and Christian-like purpose of the King and his Council, did immediately in that behalf write unto all the rest of the Bishops of that Province, and amongst them unto Edmund Bonner then Bishop of London. Of whose rebellious and obdurate contumacy for that we have hereafter more to say, I thought not to stand now long thereupon, but only by the way somewhat to note his former dissimulation and cloaked hypocritie, in that he outwardly at the first consented as well unto this, as also unto all other the Kings proceedings, but whether for fear or for any other subtil fetch I know not, howbeit most like it is, rather for one of them or both, than for any true love. And therefore receiving the Archbishops Letters, as one of them seeming to allow the contents thereof, he did presently write unto the Bishop of Westminster, and to others to whom he was appointed, requiring them to give such knowledge thereof in their Dioceffes, as thereunto appertained; as more plainly appeareth by these his own Letters here inserted, which here do follow:

Ed. Bonner.

A Letter missive of Edmund Bonner, sent to the Bishop of Westminster, with the tenor of the Archbishops Letter for abolishing of Candles, Alms, Palms, and other Ceremonies.

My very good Lord, after most hearty Commendations, these be to advertise your good Lordship, That my Lord of Canterburys Grace this present 28th day of January sent unto me his Letters missive, containing this in effect, That my Lord Protector's Grace, with the advice of other the Kings Majesties most honourable Council, for certain Considerations them moving, are fully resolved that no Candles shall be born upon Candlemas-day, nor also from henceforth Alms or Palms used any longer: requiring me thereupon by his said Letters, to cause admonition and knowledge thereof to be given unto your Lordship and other Bishops with celerity accordingly. In consideration whereof I do send at this present these Letters unto your said Lordship, that you thereupon may give knowledge and advertisement thereof within your Dioceffes as appertaineth. Thus I commit your good Lordship to Almighty God, as well to fare as your good heart can best desire.

Bonners Letter for the abolishing of alms, palms, &c. Anno 1548.

Written in haste at my house in London, the said twenty eighth day of January, 1548.

Your good Lordships to command, Edmund Bonner.

Now about that present time credible and certain Report was made unto the Lords of the Council, that great contention and strife did daily arise among the common people in divers parts of this Realm, for the pulling down and taking away of such Images out of the Churches, as had been idolatrously abused by Pilgrimages, Offerings, or otherwise (according to the tenor of one of the Injunctions given by the King in his late Visitation) some affirming that that Image was abused, others that this, and most that neither of them both; so that if speedily remedy were not had therein, it might turn to further inconvenience. Wherefore they, by one advice thinking it best (of good experience) for avoiding of all discord and tumult, that all manner of Images should be clean taken out of all Churches, and none suffered to remain, did thereupon again write their Letters unto the Archbishop of Canterbury, requiring his ready Aid therein, in manner following.

Contention amongst the people for Images.

Another Letter of the Council sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the abolishing of Images.

After our right hearty Commendations to your good Lordship: Where now of late in the Kings Majesties Visitations, among other godly Injunctions commanded to be generally observed through all parts of this his Highnesses Realm, Letters from the Council to the Archbishop of Canterbury, for abolishing of Images.

Realm, one was set forth for the taking down of all such Images as had at any time been abused with Pilgrimages, Offerings, or Censings, albeit that this said Injunction hath in many parts of this Realm been quietly obeyed and executed, yet in many other places much strife and contention hath risen and daily riseth, and more and more encreaseth about the execution of the same; some men being so superstitious, or rather wilful, as they would by their good will retain all such Images still, although they have been most manifestly abused. And in some places also the Images, which by the said Injunctions were taken down, be now restored and set up again. And almost in every place is contention for Images, whether they have been abused or not. And while these men go on both sides contentiously to obtain their minds, contending whether this or that Image hath been offered unto, kissed, censed, or otherwise abused, parts have in some places been taken in such sort, as further inconveniences be like to ensue, if remedy be not found in time. Considering therefore, that almost in no place of this Realm is any sure quietness, but where all Images be clean taken away and pulled down already, to the intent that all contention in every part of the Realm for this matter, may be clearly taken, and that the lively Image of Christ should not contend for the dead Images, which be things not necessary, and without the which the Churches of Christ continued most godly many years; we have thought good to signify unto you, that his Highness's pleasure, with the advice and consent of us the Lord Protector and the rest of the Council, that immediately upon the sight hereof, with as convenient diligence as you may, you shall not only give order that all the Images remaining in any Church or Chappel within your Diocess, be removed and taken away, but also by your Letters signify unto the rest of the Bishops within your Province, that his Highness's pleasure, for the like Order to be given by them and every of them within their several Diocesses. And in the execution hereof, we require both you and the rest of the said Bishops to use such foresight as the same may be quietly done, with as good satisfaction of the people as may be. Thus fare your good Lordship heartily well.

From Somerset place the eleventh of February, 1541.

Your Lordships assured loving friends,

Edward Somerset,
Henry Arundel,
Amb. Wingfield,
John Russell,
Thomas Smer,
William Paget.

The Archbishop writeth to Bonner.

When the Archbishop had received these Letters, he forthwith directed his Precept unto Bonner Bishop of London, requiring, and in the Kings Majesties Name commanding him, That with all speed he should as well give in charge unto the rest of the Bishops within the Province of Canterbury, to look immediately without delay unto the diligent and careful execution of the contents of the said Letter through all places of their Diocess; as also that he himself should do the like within his own City and Diocess of London. Whereupon he feeling then, with like outward consent as before, to allow these doings, presently (by virtue of the said Precept) did fend out his Mandatum as well unto the rest of the Bishops, as also again unto the Bishop of Westminster, in form following.

The Letter of Edmund Bonner sent with the Archbishops Mandate, to the Bishop of Westminster, for abolishing of Images.

Datum in aedibus nostris London. vicesimo die Febr. Anno Dom. 1548. Et Regni dicti illustrissimi Domini nostri Regis, Anno secundo.

Now by the time that these things were thus determined, the learned men which the King had appointed (as ye have heard before) to assemble together for the true and right manner of administering the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ according to the rule of the Scriptures of God, and first usage of the Primitive Church, after their long, learned, wise, and deliberate advices, did finally conclude and agree upon one godly and uniform Order of receiving the same, not much differing from the manner at this present used and authorized within this Realm and Church of England, commonly called The Communion. Which agreement being by them exhibited unto the King, and of him most gladly accepted, was thereupon publicly imprinted, and by his Majesties Council particularly divided and sent unto every Bishop of the Realm, requiring and commanding them by their Letters on the Kings Majesties behalf, that both they in their own persons should forthwith have diligent and careful respect to the due execution thereof, and also should with all diligence cause the Books which they then sent them, to be delivered unto every Parson, Vicar, and Curate within their Diocess, that they likewise might well and sufficiently advise themselves for the better distribution of the same Communion (according to the tenor of the said Book) against the Feast of Easter then next ensuing, as more fully appeareth by these their Letters here following.

An unprinted Order of the Communion.

Letters missive from the Council, to the Bishops of the Realm, concerning the Communion to be ministered in both kinds.

After our most hearty Commendations unto your Lordship, where in the Parliament late holden at Westminster, it was amongst other things most godly established, that according to the first institution and use of the Primitive Church, the most holy Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ should be distributed to the people under the kinds of Bread and Wine, according to the effect whereof the Kings Majesties minding, with the advice and consent of the Lord Protectors Grace, and the rest of the Council, to have the said Statute well executed in such sort, or like as is agreeable with the Word of God (so the same may be also faithfully and reverently received of his most loving Subjects, to their comforts and weal) hath caused sundry of his Majesties most grave and well-learned Prelates, and other learned men in the Scriptures, to assemble themselves for this matter: who, after long conference together, have with deliberate advice finally agreed upon such an Order to be used in all places of the Kings Majesties Dominions in the distribution of the said most holy Sacrament, as may appear to you by the Book thereof, which we send herewith unto you. Albeit knowing your Lordships knowledge in the Scriptures, and earnestness.

The Communion in both kinds to be ministered.

KING earnest good will and zeal to the setting forth of all things, according to the truth thereof, we be well assured, you will of your own good will, and upon respect to your duty, diligently set forth this most godly Order here agreed upon, and commanded to be used by the Authority of the Kings Majesty: yet remembering the crafty practice of the Devil, who ceases not by his Members, to work by all ways and means, the hinderance of all godliness; and considering furthermore, that a great number of the Curates of the Realm, either for lack of knowledge cannot, or for want of good mind will not be so ready to set forth the same, as we would wish, and as the importance of the matter and their own bounden duties requires, we have thought good to pray and require your Lordship, and nevertheless, in the Kings Majesty our most dread Lord's Name, to command you to have an earnest diligence and careful respect both in your own Person, and by all your Officers and Ministers also, to cause these Books to be delivered to every Parson, Vicar, and Curate within your Diocese, with such diligence as they may have sufficient time well to instruct and advise themselves, for the distribution of the most holy Communion, according to the Order of this Book, before this latter time, and that they may by your good means, be well directed to use such good, gentle and charitable instruction of their simple and unlearned Parishioners, as may be to all their good satisfactions as much as may be, praying you to consider, that this Order is set forth, to the intent there should be in all parts of the Realm, and among all men one uniform manner quietly used. The execution whereof, like as it shall stand very much in the diligence of you and others of your Vocation; so do we exhort you to have a diligent respect thereunto, as ye tender the Kings Majesties pleasure, and will answer for the contrary. And thus we bid your Lordship right heartily farewell. From Westminster the thirteenth of March, 1548.

By means as well of this Letter, and the godly Order of the Learned, as also of the Statute and Act of Parliament before mentioned, made for the establishing thereof, all private blasphemous Masses were now by just Authority fully abolished throughout this Realm of England, and the right use of the Sacrament of the most precious Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ truly restored in stead of the same. But nevertheless, as at no time any thing can be so well done of the godly, but that the wicked will find some means subtilly to deface the same: so likewise at this present, through the perverse obstinacy and dissembling forwardness of many the inferior Priests and Ministers of the Cathedral, and other Churches of this Realm, there did arise a marvelous Schism and variety of fashions in celebrating the Common Service and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church. For some, zealously allowing the Kings proceedings, did gladly follow the Order thereof, and others, though not so willingly admitting them, did yet dissemblingly and patchingly use some part of them; but many, carefully containing all, would still exercise their old wonted Popery.

Whereof the King and his Council having good Intelligence, and fearing the great inconveniences and dangers that might happen through this division, and being therewithall loth at the first to use any great severity towards his Subjects, but rather desirous by some quiet and godly Order to bring them to some Conformity, did by their prudent advices again appoint the Archbishop of Canterbury, with certain of the best learned and discreet Bishops and other learned men, diligently to consider and ponder the premises: and thereupon, having as well an eye and respect unto the most sincere and pure Christian Religion taught by the holy Scriptures, as also to the Usages of the Primitive Church, to draw and make one convenient and meet Order, Rite, and fashion of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, to be had and used within this his Realm of England, and the Dominions of the same. Who after most godly and learned Conferences, through the aid of the Holy Ghost, with one uniform agreement did conclude, set forth, and deliver unto the Kings Highness, a Book in English, intituled, A Book of the Common-Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, after the use of the Church of England. The which his Highness receiving, with great comfort and quietness of mind, did forthwith exhibit unto the Lords and Commons of the Parliament then assembled at Westminster, about the fourth of November, in the second year of his Reign, and in the year of our Lord, 1548, and continuing unto the fourteenth day of March, then next ensuing.

Whereupon the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of the said Parliament assembled, and thoroughly considering, as well the most godly travel of the Kings Highness, of the Lord Protector, and other of his Majesties Council, in gathering together the said Archbishop, Bishops, and other learned men, as the godly Prayers, Orders, Rites, and Ceremonies in the said Book mentioned, with the consideration of altering those things which were altered, and retaining those things which were retained in the same Book; as also the Honour of God, and great quietness, which by the Grace of God should ensue upon that one and uniform Rite and Order in such Common Prayer, Rites, and exten Ceremonies to be used throughout England, Wales, Calice, and the Marches of the same, did first give unto his Highness most lowly and hearty thanks for the same, and then most humbly prayed him that it might be ordained and enacted by his Majesty with the assent of the Lords and Commons in that Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That not only all and singular person and persons that had hitherto offended concerning the premises others than such as were then remaining in Ward in the Tower of London, or in the Fleet might be pardoned thereof, but also that all and singular Ministers in any Cathedral or Parish-Churches or other places within the Realm of England, Wales, Calice, and the Marches of the same, or other the Kings Dominions, should from and after the Feast of Pentecost next coming, be bound to say and use the Mattins, Evenfong, Celebration of the Lords Supper, and Administration of each of the Sacraments, and all other common and open Prayer, in such order and form as was mentioned in the said Book, and none other or otherwise. And albeit that they were so godly and good, that they gave occasion unto every honest and conformable man most willingly to embrace them; yet lest any obstinate persons, who willingly would disturb so godly an order and quiet in this Realm, should go unpunished; they further requested, That it might be ordained and enacted by the Authority aforesaid, that if any manner of Parson, Vicar, or whatsoever other Minister that ought or should say or sing Common-Prayer, mentioned in the said Book, or minister the Sacraments, should after the said Feast of Pentecost, then next coming, refuse to use the said Common-Prayer, or to minister the Sacraments in such Cathedral or Parish-Churches, or other places, as he should use or minister the same, in such order and form as they were mentioned, and set forth in the said Book; or should use wilfully, and obstinately standing in the same, any other Rite, Ceremony, Order, form or manner of Mass, openly or privily, or Mattins, Evenfong, Administration of the Sacraments, or other open Prayer than was mentioned, and set forth in the said Book; or should preach, declare, or speak any thing in the derogation or depraving of the said Book, or any thing therein contained, or of any part thereof, and should be thereof lawfully convicted according to the Laws of this Realm by Verdict of twelve men, or by his own confession, or by the notorious evidence of the fact, should lose and forfeit, unto the Kings Highness his Heirs and Successors, for his first offence one whole years profit of such one of his Benefices or Spiritual Promotions, as it should please the Kings Highness to assign and appoint; appoint; and also for the same offence should suffer imprisonment by the space of six months without Bail or Mainprize. But if any such person, after his first conviction, should afterwards offend again, and be thereof in form aforesaid lawfully convicted, then he should for his second offence suffer imprisonment by the space of one whole year, and should also be deprived, ipso facto, of all his Spiritual Promotions for ever, so that it should be lawful for the Patrons and Donors thereof to give the same again unto any other learned man, in like manner as if the said party so offending were dead. And if any the said person or persons should again the third time offend, and be thereof in form aforesaid lawfully convicted, then he should for the same third offence suffer imprisonment during his life. If any such person or persons aforesaid, so offending, had not any Benefice or Spiritual Promotion, that then he should for his first offence suffer imprisonment by the space of six months without Bail or Mainprize, and for his second offence, imprisonment during his life. Which request, or rather actual agreement of the Lords and Commons of the Parliament, being once understood of the King, was also soon ratified and confirmed by his royal consent and Authority, and thereupon the said Book of Common-Prayer was presently imprinted, and commanded to be exercised throughout the whole Realm and Dominions thereof, according to the tenor and effect of the said Statute.

Moreover in the same Session of the said Parliament it was enacted and established by the Authority thereof, That for as much as great, horrible, and not to be rehearsed inconveniences had from time to time risen amongst the Priests, Ministers, and other Officers of the Clergy, through their compelled Chastity, and by such Laws as prohibited them the godly and lawful use of Marriage, that therefore all and every Law and Laws positive, Canons, Constitutions, and Ordinances theretofore made by the Authority of Man only, which did prohibit or forbid Marriage to any Ecclesiastical or Spiritual Person or Persons, of what estate, condition or degree soever they were, or by what name or names they were called, which by Gods Law may lawfully marry, in all and every Article, Branch and Sentence concerning only the prohibition of the marriage of the Persons aforesaid, should be utterly void and of none effect. And that all manner of Forfeitures, Pains, Penalties, Crimes or Actions which were in the said Laws contained, and of the same did follow, concerning the prohibition of the Marriage of the said Ecclesiastical Persons, should be thenceforth also clearly and utterly void, frustrate and of none effect. By occasion whereof, it was thence after right lawful for any Ecclesiastical Person, not having the gift of Chastity, most godly to live in the pure and holy estate of Matrimony according to the Laws and Word of God.

But if the first Injunctions, Statutes, and Decrees of the Prince were of many but feebly regarded, with much less good affection were these (especially the Book of Common-Prayer) of divers now received; yea, and that of some of them, which had always before in outward shew willingly allowed the former doings, as appeareth most plainly (amongst others) by Bonner the Bishop of London. Who although, by his former Letters, and other Mandates, he seemed hitherto to favour all the Kings proceedings; yet did he at that present notwithstanding both the first Statute for the stablishing of the Communion, and the abolishing of all private Masses, and also this Statute of the ratifying and confirming of the Book of Common-Prayer) still suffer sundry Idolatrous private Masses of peculiar names (as the Apostles Mass, the Lady Mass, and such like) to be daily solemnly sung within certain peculiar Chappels of the Cathedral Church of Pauls, cloaking them with the names of the Apostles Communion, and our Ladies Communion, not once finding any fault therewith, until such time as the Lords of the Council, having intelligence thereof, were fain by their Letters to command and charge him to look better thereunto. And then being therewith somewhat pricked forwards (perhaps by fear) he was content to direct his Letters unto the Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral Church of Pauls, thereby requesting them forthwith to take such order therein, as in the tenor of the Councils said Letters, therewithall sent unto them, did import. Both which Letters I have, for the more credit, { KING } here following inserted. { Edw. 6 }

A Letter directed from the Kings Council to Edmund Bonner Bishop of London, for abrogating of private Masses; namely, the Apostles Mass, within the Church of Saint Paul, used under the Name of the Apostles Communion.

After hearty Commendations: having very credible notice that within that your Cathedral Church there be as yet the Apostles Mass, and our Ladies Mass, and other Masses of such peculiar Names, under the defence and commendation of our Ladies Communion, and the Apostles Communion, used in private Chappels and other remote places of the same, and not in the Chancel, contrary unto the Kings Majesties proceedings, the same being for the misuse displeasing to God; for the place Pauls, in example not tolerable; for the fundenes of the name, a scorn to the reverence of the Communion of the Lords Body and Blood: we for the augmentation of Gods Honour and Glory, and the Consonance of his Majesties Laws, and the avoiding of murmur, have thought good to will and command you, that from henceforth no such Masses in this manner be in your Church any longer used, but that the holy blessed Communion, according to the Act of Parliament, be ministered at the high Altar of the Church, and in no other places of the same, and only at such time as your high Masses were wont to be used, except some number of people desire for their necessary business: to have a Communion in the morning, and yet the same to be executed in the Chancel at the high Altar, as is appointed in the Book of the publick Service, without censure or digression from the common Order. And herein you shall not only satisfy our expectation of your Conformity in all lawful things, but also avoid the murmur of sundry that be therewith justly offended. And so we bid your Lordship heartily farewell. From Richmond the 24th of June, Anno 1549.

To my right Worshipful Friends, and most loving good Brethren, Master Dean of Pauls, with all the Canons, Rectifiers, Prebendaries, Subdeans, and Ministers of the same, and every of them with speed.

Right Worshipful, with most hearty Commendations. So it is, this Wednesday the 26th of June, going to dinner, I received Letters from the Kings Council by a Purveyor, and the same I do send now herewith unto you, to the intent you may peruse them well and proceed accordingly; praying you in case all be not present, yet those that be now resident: and supplying the places, may in their absence call the Company together of the Church, and make declaration hereof unto them: Thus committing you to God, right well to fare. Written with speed this six and twentieth of June, at one of the Clock.

Bonner's Letter to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls.

Your loving Brother, Ed. London.

Over and besides all this, the Lord Protector, with the residue of the Kings Privy and Learned Council assembling together in the Star-Chamber about the same matter; that is, for the advancement and setting forward of the Kings so godly proceedings, called before them all the Justices of Peace, where was uttered unto them by the Lord Rich, then Lord Chancellour, an eloquent and learned Admonition, the tenour whereof ensueth.

An Exhortation or Admonition unto the Justices of Peace.

{KING}
Edw. 5

IT hath been used and accustomed before this time, to call at certain times the Justices of Peace before the Kings Majesties Council, to give unto them admonition or warning, diligently (as is their duty) to look to the observing of such things as be committed to their charges, according to the trust which the Kings Majesty hath in them. Howbeit, now at this time we call you before us, not only of custom, but rather of necessity. For hearing daily, and perceiving of necessity, as we do, the great negligence, and the little heed which is taken and given to the observing of the good and wholesome Laws and Orders in this Realm, whereupon much disorder doth daily ensue, and the Kings Majesties Proclamations and Orders taken by the Council (as we are advertised) not executed, the people are brought to Disobedience, and in a manner all his Majesties study and ours, in setting, a good and most godly way, to the honour of God and the quiet of the Realm, is spent in vain, and come to nothing: The which as we have great hope and trust not to be altogether so, yet so much as it is, and so much as it lacketh of the keeping of the Realm in a most godly order and way, we must needs impute and lay the fault thereof in you which are the Justices of Peace in every Shire, to whom we are wont to direct our Writings, and to whose trust and charge the Kings Majesty hath committed the execution of all his Proclamations, of his Acts of Parliament, and of his Laws.

Justices
{lack in firming of Religion.

We are informed that many of you are so negligent and so slack herein, that it doth appear you do look rather, as it were, through your Fingers, than diligently see to the execution of the said Laws and Proclamations. For if you would, according to your duties, to your Oath, to the trust which the Kings Majesty hath in you, give your diligence and care toward the execution of the same most godly Statutes and injunctions, there should no disobedience, nor disorder, nor evil rule be begun or rise in any part of the Realm, but it should by and by be repressed, kept down and reformed. But it is feared, and the thing it self giveth occasion thereto, that divers of you do not only not see forth, but rather hinder, so much as lieth in you, the Kings Majesties proceedings, and are content that there should arise some disobedience, and that men should repine against godly Orders set forth by his Majesty, you do so slackly look to the execution of the same, so that in some Shires, which be further off, it may appear that the people have never heard of divers of his Majesties Proclamations, or if they have heard, you are content to wink at it, and to neglect it, so that it is all one as though it were never commanded. But if you do consider and remember your duties first to Almighty God, and then to the Kings Majesty, the wealth of the whole Realm, and the safeguard of your own selves, you must needs see, that except such Orders as the Kings Majesty hath set, and hereafter shall appoint, be kept, neither can the Realm be defended, if the Enemy should invade, nor can it in peace stand, but upon the contempt of good and wholesome Laws all disorder and inconveniences will come, the people will be wild and savage, and no man sure of his own.

The fault of Obedience
in a Realm.

If at any time there was occasion and cause to be circumpect and diligent about the same, there was never more time than now. How we stand in Scotland you know, and that there foreign Power maketh great preparation to aid them, and indeed doth come to their Aid; whereof we are surely informed and certified. Wherefore if there should not be good Order and Obedience kept in the Realm, the Realm were like utterly to be destroyed. Never foreign Power could yet hurt, or in any part prevail in this Realm, but by disobedience and mischief within our selves. That is the way wherewith God will plague us, if he mind to punish us. And so long as we do agree among our selves, and be obedient to our Prince, and to his godly Orders and Laws, we may be sure that God is with us, and that foreign Powers shall not prevail against us, nor hurt us.

Wherefore once again, and still we must and do lay this Charge upon you that are the better of the Shire, and Justices of Peace, that with so convenient speed as you can, you do repair down into your Countries, and you shall give warning to the Gentlemen of the Shire, which have not necessary business here, that they repair down each man to his Country, and there both you and they, who be reckoned the stay of every Shire, to see good Order and Rule kept: You, that your Sessions of Goal-delivery and Quarter-Sessions be well kept, and therein your meetings be such, that Justice may be well and truly ministered, the Offenders and Malefactors punished according to the Laws of this Realm without any fear of any man, or that for favour you should suffer those to escape, which with their evil example might bring other to the like mishap, and that all Vagabonds and lewd and light Tale-tellers, and seditious Hearers of false News of the Kings Majesty, or of his Council, or such as will Preach without Licence, be immediately by you repressed and punished.

Orders taken for Justice

And if there should chance any lewd or light Fellows to make any Routs or Riots, or unlawful Assemblies, any Seditious Meetings, Uproars, or Uprisings in any place by the seditious and devilish motion of some private Traytors, that you and they appeale them at the first, and apprehend the first Author and Cause thereof, and ceruse us with speed. The lightness of the rude and ignorant people must be suppressed and ordered by your gravity and wisdom. And here you may not (if any such thing chance) dissemble with those such lewd men, and hide you selves, for it shall be required of you if such mischief be; and surely without your aid and help, or your dissembling, such mischief cannot be. Nor do we say that we fear any such thing, or that there is any such thing likely to chance; but we give you warning before, lest it should chance.

Provision against privy conspiracy and Rebellion.

We have too much experience in this Realm, what inconvenience cometh of such matters. And though some light persons in their rage do not consider, yet we do not doubt but you weigh it and know it well enough. And if it should chance our Enemies (who are maintained by other foreign Power, and the Bishop of Rome) should suddenly arrive in some place in England, either driven by tempest, or of purpose to do hurt, ye should see such Order kept by firing of the Beacons, as hath already been written unto you by our Letters, to repulse the same in so good Array as you can, as we do not doubt but you will for the safeguard of your Country, so that the Enemy shall have little joy of his coming; and for that purpose you shall see diligently that men have Horse, Harneis, and other furniture of Weapon ready, according to the Statutes and good Orders of the Realm, and the Kings Majesties Commandments. And so for this time ye may depart.

Provision
against foreign Power

What zealous care was in this young King, and in the Lord Protector his Uncle, concerning Reformation of the Church, and sincere Religion, by these Injunctions, Letters, Precepts, and Exhortations, as well to the Bishops, as to the Justices of the Realm above premised, it may right well appear. Whereby we have to note, not so much the careful diligence of the King and his learned Council; as the lingering slackness and drawing back, on the other side, of divers the said Justices and Lawyers, but especially of Bishops, and old Popish Curates, by whose cloaked contempt, wilful winking, and stubborn disobedience, the Book of the Common-Prayer, was long after the publishing thereof, either not known at all, or else very reverently used through many places of the Realm. Which when the King by complaint of divers perfectly understood, being not a little aggrieved to see the godly agreement of the Learned, the willing consent of the Parliament, and his Graces own zealous desire to take so small effect among his Subjects; he decreed presently, with the advice of his whole Council, again to write unto all the Bishops of his Realm, for speedy and diligent redress therein; willing and commanding them thereby, that as well they themselves should thenceforth have a more special regard to the due execution of the premises, as also that all others, within their several Precincts and Jurisdictions, should by their good Instructions and willing Example be the more often, and with better devotion, moved to use and frequent the same. Another Letter directed by the King, and his Council, to Bonner Bishop of London, partly rebuking him of negligence, partly charging him to see to the better setting out of the Service-Book within his Diocess.

Another Letter to Bonner Bishop of London.

Right Reverend Father in God, Right trusty and well-beloved, We greet you well: and whereas after great and serious debating and long Conference of the Bishops and other grave and well learned men in the holy Scriptures, one uniform order for Common-Prayers and Administration of the Sacraments hath been, and is most godly set forth, not only by the common agreement and full assent of the Nobility and Commons of the late Session of our late Parliament, but also by the like assent of the Bishops in the same Parliament, and of all other the learned men of this our Realm in their Synods and Convocations Provincial: like as it was much to our comfort, to understand the godly travel then diligently and willingly taken for the true opening of things mentioned in the said Book, whereby the true Service and Honour of Almighty God, and the right ministration of the Sacraments being well and sincerely set forth, according to the Scriptures and use of the Primitive Church, much Idolatry, vain Superstition, and great and slanderous Abuses be taken away: so it is no small occasion of sorrow unto us, to understand by the complaints of many, that our said Book so much travelled for, and also sincerely set forth (as is aforesaid) remaineth in many places of this our Realm, either not known at all, or not used, or at the least if it be used, very seldom, and that in such light and irreverent sort, as the people in many places either have heard nothing, or if they hear, they neither understand, nor have that spiritual delectation in the same, that to good Christians appertaineth. The fault whereof, like as we must of reason impute to you and other of your Vocation, called by God, through our appointment, to due respect to this and such like matters: so considering that, by these and such like occasions, our loving Subjects remain yet still in their blindness, and superstitious Errors, and in some places in as irreligious forgetfulness of God, whereby his wrath may be provoked upon us and them; and remembering withal, what amongst other Cures committed to our Princely Charge, we think this the greatest, to see the Glory and true Service of Him maintained and extolled, by whose Clemency we acknowledge our selves to have all that we have, we could not but by advice and consent of our dearest Uncle, Edward Duke of Somerset, Governour of our Person, and Protector of our Realm, Dominions and Subjects, and the rest of our Privy-Council, admonish you of the premises. Wherein, as it had been your Office to have used an earnest diligence, and to have preferred the same in all places within your Diocess, as the case required: so have we thought good to pray and require you, and nevertheless straightly to charge and command you, that from henceforth ye have an earnest and special regard to the reduce of these things, so as the Curates may do their duties more often and in more reverent sort, and the people be occasioned by the good advices and examples of your self, your Chancellor, Archdeacons, and other inferior Ministers, to come with oftner and more devotion to their said Common Prayers, to give thanks to God, and to be Partakers of the most holy Communion. Wherein shewing your self diligent, and giving good example in your own Person, you shall both discharge your duty to the great Pastor, to whom we all have to account, and also do us good Service: and on the other side, if we shall hereafter (these our Letters and Commandment notwithstanding) hear of such complaint, and find the like fault in your Diocess, we shall have just cause to impute the fault thereof, and of all that misbeth thereof, unto you, and consequently be occasioned thereby to see otherwise to the redress of these things: whereof we would be sorry. And therefore we do of some charge and command you, upon your Allegiance, to look well upon your duty herein, as ye tender our Pleasure.

Given under our Signet at our Manor of Richmond, the three and twentieth day of July, the third year of our Reign, 1549.

The Bishop of London, amongst the rest of the Bishops, receiving these Letters, did (as always before) in outward shew willingly accept the same; and therefore immediately with the said Letters directed this his Precept unto the Dean and Chapter of his Cathedral-Church of Pauls, commanding them to look to the due accomplishing thereof accordingly.

A Letter of Bonner, to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls.

Edmond by the Grace of God, &c. To my well-beloved Brethren the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral-Church of St. Paul in London, and to the other Ministers there and every of them do send greeting. And where it is so, that of late I have received the said Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesties Letters, of such tenor as is hereunto annexed, and according to my most bounden duty and right well willing, and desiring that the said Letters should be in all Points duly executed and observed according to the tenor and purport of the same, as appertaineth: These therefore are to require, and also straightly to charge you and every of you on his Majesties behalf, &c. that you do admonish and command, or cause to be admonished or commanded, all and singular Parsons, Vicars, and Curates of your Jurisdiction, to observe and accomplish the same from time to time accordingly: furthermore requiring and likewise charging you, and every of you to make Certificate herein to me, my Chancellor or other my Officers in this behalf, with such convenient Celerity as appertaineth, both of your proceedings in the execution hereof, and also the Persons and Names of all such, as from henceforth shall be found negligent in doing their duties in the premises, or any of them.

Given at my House at Fulham, the 26th of July, in the year of our Lord, 1549. and in the third year of our said Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesties Reign.

Moreover, so far as the King at that instant hearing the muttering of certain Rebellion then stirring, (whereof more shall be said the Lord willing hereafter) and also being credibly informed by divers, that through the evil example, slackness of preaching and administering the Sacraments, and careless contempt of Bonner Bishop of London, not only many of the people within the City of London, and other places of his Diocess, were very negligent and forgetful of their duties to God, in frequenting the Divine-Service then established and set forth by the Authority of Parliament, but also that divers other, utterly despising the same, did in secret places of his Diocess often frequent the Popish Mass, and other foreign Rites not allowed by the Laws of this Realm, he thought it therefore good (having thereby just cause to suspect his former dissembling doublet) to appoint the Lord Protector and the rest of his Privy-Council to call the said Bishop before them, and according to their wife and discreet judgments to deal with him for the same.

Whereupon the eleventh day of August, Anno 1549, they sent a Messenger for him, and upon his appearance made first Declaration of such Informations and Complaints as had been heretofore made against him. And then, after sharp Admonitions and Reproofs for his evil Demeanors in the premises, they delivered unto him from the King (for his better Reformation and Amendment) certain private Injunctions to be necessarily followed and observed of himself. And whereas, in the first branch of the said Injunctions, he was perfonally assigned to preach at Pauls Cross the Sunday three weeks then next ensuing (because both the dangerous and fickle estate of the time, and also partly his own suspicious behaviour so required) they further delivered unto him in writing such Articles to intreat upon in his Sermon, as they thought then most meet and necessary for the time and causes aforesaid. All which Injunctions and Articles, for the further manifestation thereof, I have here inserted as followeth.

[KING] Edw. 6

A Letter of Bonner to the Dean of Pauls.

Slackness of preaching good proceedings.

Popish Mass privately frequented in places against the Law.

Anno 1549. Bonner called before the Council.

Certain private Injunctions given to Bonner by the Council: Bonner assigned by the Council to preach at Pauls Cross.

Forasmuch as we are advertised, that amongst other disorders of our Subjects at this present, there be divers of our City of London, and other places within your Diocess, which being very negligent and forgetful of their duty to Almighty God, of whom all good things are to be looked for, do assemble themselves very seldom, and fewer times than they were heretofore accustomed, unto common Prayer, and to the holy Communion, being now a time when it were more needful with heart and mind to pray to our heavenly Father for his aid and succour; whereof as we be right sorry, so we do understand that through your evil example, and the slackness of your preaching and instructing of our said people to do their duties, this offence to God is most generally committed. For where heretofore upon all principal Feasts, and such as were called Majus duplex, your self were wont to execute in person, now since the time that we by the advice of our whole Parliament have set a most godly and devout order in our Church of England and Ireland, ye have very seldom or never executed upon such or other days, to the contempt of our proceedings, and evil example of others. And forasmuch as it is also brought to our knowledge, that divers as well in London, as in other places of your Diocess, do frequent and haunt foreign Rites of Masses, and such as be not allowed by the orders of our Realm, and do contemn and forbear to praise and laud God, and pray unto his Majesty after such Rites and Ceremonies, as in this Realm are approved and set out by our authority; and further, that adultery and fornication is maintained and kept openly and commonly in the said City of London and other places of your Diocess, whereby the wrath of God is provoked against our people; of the which things you being heretofore admonished, yet hitherto have made no redress, as to the pastoral office, authority and cure of a Bishop doth appertain: We therefore, to whom the supreme cure and charge of this Church doth appertain, to avoid from us the high indignation of Almighty God, by the advice of our most entirely beloved Uncle the Lord Protector, and the rest of our Privy Council, have thought it no less than our most bounden duty, now at this present, and of soon peremptorily to admonish, charge, and warn you, that you do most straightly look upon the premises, and see them so reformed that there may appear no negligence on your behalf, upon such pain as by our laws Ecclesiastical and Temporal we may inflict upon you, unto deprivation or otherwise, as shall seem to us for quality of the offence reasonable. And to the intent you should the better see to the reformation of the said abuses, we have thought good to give you these Injunctions following:

1. First ye shall preach at Pauls Croff in London, in proper person, the Sunday after the date hereof three Weeks, and in the same Sermon declare and set forth the Articles herunto annexed; and ye shall preach hereafter once every quarter of the year there, exhorting in your Sermon the people to obedience, prayer and godly living; and ye shall be present at every Sermon hereafter made at Pauls Croff, if sickness or some other reasonable cause do not let you.
2. Secondly, You your self in person shall from henceforth every day which heretofore was accounted in this Church of England a principal Feast, or Majus duplex, and at all such times as the Bishops of London your predecessors were wont to celebrate and sing high Mass, now celebrate and execute the Communion at the high Altar in Pauls, for the better example of all others, except sickness do let.
3. Thirdly, Ye shall your self, according to your duty and the office of a Bishop, call before you all such as do not come unto and frequent the Common Prayer and Service in the Church, or do not come unto Gods board, and receive the Communion at the least once a year, or whosoever do frequent or go unto any other Right or Service than is appointed by our Book, either of Mattins, Evensong, or Mass in any Church, Chappell, or other private places within your Diocess, and ye shall see all such offer-

ders converted before you and punished, according unto the Ecclesiastical laws, with severe and strict punishment therefore. Likewise ye shall see one only order used in your Diocess, according to our said Book, and none other.

4. Fourthly, Ye shall both by your self and all your Officers under you, search out and convert before you more diligently than heretofore ye have done, (as appertaineth to your office) all adulterers, and see the same punished according to the Ecclesiastical Laws, and the authority given you in that behalf.

5. We have heard also complaints, that the Church of Pauls and other Churches of London are of late more neglected, as well in reparation of the Glasse, as other build- ings and ornaments of the same, than they were heretofore wont, and that divers and many persons in the City of malice deny the payment of their due Tithes to their Curats, whereby the Curats are both injured and made not so well able, and in manner discouraged to do their duty. The which thing also our will and commandment is, ye shall diligently look unto, and see redressed as appertaineth.

6. And forasmuch as all these complaints be made, as most done and committed in London, to the intent you may look more earnestly, better, and more diligently to the reformation of them, our pleasure is that you shall abide and keep residence in your house there, as in the City, See and principal place of your Diocess, and none other where, for a certain time, until you shall be otherwise licensed by us.

And thus having brought Bishop Bonner home to his own house, there to leave him a while to take his ease in his own lodging, till we return to him again, we will in the mean time make a little intercoure into Cornwall and Devonshire, to discourage some part of the disordered and disloyal doings of those men against their so meek and excellent a Prince, having no cause ministered thereunto; yea, having cause rather to yield praise and thanks to the Lord for such a quiet and peaceable Prince in his mercy given to them. But such is the condition of unquiet natures, that they cannot skill of peace. And where due discretion lacketh, there lewd disposed persons cannot tell when they be well; again some be so crooked and so perversely given, that the more courteously they be intreated, the worse they are; and when by honest diligence they list not to get their living, by publick disturbance of Common-wealths they think to thrive. And so seemed it to fare with this seditious people of Cornwall and Devonshire, who having so good and virtuous a King, that if they should have sought him as Dioegenes, they say, did seek for a man with a Candle, a meeke and better Sovereign they could not have found, a crueller they well deserved; yet were they not with him contented, but contrary to all order, reason, nature and loyalty, advanced themselves in a rebellious Conspiracy against him, and against his proceedings through the pernicious instigation, first (as it seemeth) of certain Popish Priests, who grudging and disdain against the Injunctions and godly order of Reformation set forward by the King, and specially mourning to see their old Popish Church of Rome to decay, ceased not by all finitler and subtil means, first under Gods name and the Kings, and under colour of Religion to perwade the people, then to gather fides, and to assemble in companies, to gather Captains, and at last to burst out in rank rebellion. Neither lacked there among the lay sort some as seditiously disposed as they to mischief and madness, as well Gentlemen as other.

Of whom the chief Gentlemen Captains were, Hamfray Arundel Esquire, Governor of the Mount, James Rosogon, John Rosogon, John Pain, Thomas Underbit, John Selman, William Segar. Of Priests which were principal stirrers, and some of them Governors of the Camps, and after executed, there were to the number of eight, whose names were Robert Bochim, John Tompsin, Roger Barer, John Wolcock, William Als, James Mawton, John Barrow, Richard Benet, besides a multitude of other Popish Priests, which to the same faction was adjoynd. The number of the whole Rebellion, speaking with the least, mounted to little less than ten thousand stout Traitors.

motions in K. Edw. only time supplied.

These hearing first of the commotions which began about the same time in other parts to broil, as in Oxfordshire, Yorkshire, and especially in Northfolk and Suffolk, began to take therein some courage, hoping that they should have well fortified the same with quarrel. But afterward perceiving how the mischievous mutterings and enterprises of their conspiracy did suddenly fail, either being prevented by time, or redressed by power, or that their cause being but only about plucking down of enclosures, and enlarging of Commons divided from theirs, so that either they would not or could not join their aid together, then began they again to quail and their courage to abate. Notwithstanding, for so much as they had gone so far, that they thought there was no shinking back, they fell to new devices and inventions, for the better furtherance of their desperate purposes.

The City of Exeter invaded by the Rebels.

Their first intent was, after they had spoiled their own Country most miserably, to invade the City of Exeter, and so consequently all other parts of the Realm. But first for Exeter they gaped, the Gates whereof twice they burned, but gained nothing saving only Gunshot, whereof they lacked no plenty. Being put from Exeter, they fell on spoiling and robbing, where or whatsoever they might catch. At length laying their Traitorous heads together, they consulted upon certain Articles to be sent up. But herein such diversity of heads and wits was amongst them, that for every kind of Brain there was one manner of Article; so that there neither appeared any consent in their diversity, nor yet any consistency in their agreement. Some seemed more tolerable. Other altogether unreasonable. Some would have no justice. Some would have no state of Gentlemen. The Priests ever harped upon one string, to ring in the Bishop of Rome into England again, and to hallow home Cardinal Pool their Countryman.

Diversity of Wits amongst the Rebels.

After much ado, and little to the purpose, at last a few forty Articles were agreed upon, to be directed unto the King, with the names of certain set thereunto, the Copy whereof here insueth.

The Articles of the Commons of Devonshire and Cornwall, sent to the King; with Answer afterwards following unto the same.

The Articles
of Devonshire men, to the K. and his Council.

Sacrament
of Baptism.

Eirst, Forasmuch as man, except he be born of Water and the Holy Ghost, cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, and forasmuch as the Gates of Heaven be not opened without his blessed Sacrament of Baptism, therefore we will that our Curats shall minister this Sacrament at all times of need, as well in the Week-days, as on the Holy-days.

Confirmation.

Item, We will have our children confirmed of the Bishop, whenever we shall within the Diocesse resort unto him.

3.
Consecration of the Lords body.

Item, Forasmuch as we constantly believe, that after the Priest hath spoken the words of consecration being as Mass, there celebrating and consecrating the same, there is very really the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ God and Man, and that no substance of Bread and Wine remaineth after, but the very self same body that was born of the Virgin Mary, and was given upon the Cross for our redemption; therefore we will have Mass celebrated as it hath been in times past, without any man communicating with the Priests, forasmuch as many, rudely presuming unworthily to receive the same, put no difference between the Lords body and other kind of meat, some saying that it is bread before and after, some saying, that it is profitable to no man except he receive it, with many other abused terms.

Reservation of the Lords body consecrated.

Item, We will have in our Churches reservation. Item, We will have holy Bread and holy Water in remembrance of Christ his precious Body and Blood.

5.
Holy bread, and holy water.

Item, We will that our Priests shall sing, or say with an audible voice Gods Service in the Quire of the Parish Churches, and not Gods Service to be set forth like a Christmas play.

6.
The single life of Priests.

Item, Forasmuch as Priests be men dedicated to God, for ministering and celebrating the blessed Sacraments and preaching Gods Word, we will that they shall live chaste without Marriage, as St. Paul did, being the elect and chosen Vessel of God, saying unto all honest Priests, Be ye followers of me.

Item, We will that the six Articles which our Sovereign Lord King Henry the eighth set forth in his later days, shall be used and so taken as they were at that time.

Item, We pray God save King Edward, for we be his, both body and Goods.

cles to be

1549-50

A Message sent by the Kings Majesty, to certain of his People assembled in Devonshire.

Although knowledge hath been given to us and our dearest Uncle Edward Duke of Somerset, Governor of our Person, and Protector of all our Realms, Dominions and Subjects, and to the rest of our Privy Council, of divers assemblies made by you, which ought of duty to be our loving Subjects, against all order, law, and otherwise than ever any loving and kind Subjects have attempted against their natural and Liege Sovereign Lord; yet we have thought it meet at this very first time, not to condemn or reject you, as we might justly do, but to use you as our Subjects, thinking that the Devil hath not that power in you, to make you of natural born Englishmen, so suddenly become enemies to your own native Country; or, of our Subjects to make you Traitors; or under pretence to relieve your selves, to destroy your selves, your Wives, Children, Lands, Houses, and all other commodities of this your life. This we say, we trust that although ye be by ignorance seduced, ye will not be upon knowledge obstinate. And though some amongst you (as ever there is some Cockle amongst good Corn) forget God, neglect their Prince, esteem not the state of the Realm, but as careless, desperate men delight in Sedition, Tumult and Wars; yet nevertheless the greater part of you will hear the voice of us your natural Prince, and will by wisdom and counsel be warned, and cease your evils in the beginning, whose ends will be, even by Almighty Gods order, your own destruction. Wherefore, as to you our Subjects by ignorance seduced, we speak, and be content to use our Princely authority like a Father to his Children for this time, to admonish you of your faults, not to punish them, to put you in remembrance of your duties, not to avenge your forgetfulness.

The Answer
of the K. to the Articles
of the Rebels in Devonshire.
1549-50

First, Your disorder to rise in multitudes, to assemble your selves against our loving Subjects, to array your selves to the War, who amongst you all can answer the same to Almighty God, charging you to obey us in all things? Or how can any English good heart answer us, our laws, and the rest of our very loving and faithful Subjects, who indeed by their obedience make our Honour, Estate and Degree?

Unlawful Assemblies.

Ye use our name in your writings, and abuse the same against our self. What injury herein do you us, to call those which love us, to your evil purposes by the authority of our name? God hath made us your King by his Ordinance and Providence, by our Blood and Inheritance, by lawful Succession and our Coronation; but not to this end, as you use our name. We are your most natural Sovereign Lord and King, Edward the Sixth, to rule you, to preserve you, to save you from all your outward enemies, to see our laws well minifred, every man to have his own, to suppress disordered people, to correct Traitors, Thieves, Pirates, Robbers, and such like; yea, to keep our Realms from foreign Princes from the malice of the Scots, of Frenchmen, of the Bishop of Rome. Thus, good Subjects, our name is written, thus it is honoured and obeyed, this Majesty it hath by Gods Ordinance, not by Mans. So that of this your offence we cannot write too much; and yet doubt not but this is enough from a Prince to all reasonable people, from a King to all kind hearted and loving Subjects, from a pious King of England, to every natural Englishman.

The Kings
name abused.

Your pretences which you say move you to do this, and wherewith you seek to excuse this disorder, we assure you, be either all false, or so vain, that we doubt not but, after ye shall hereby understand the truth thereof, ye will all with one noise knowledge your selves ignorantly led, and by error seduced; and if there be any that will not, assure you the same be rank Traitors, enemies of our Crown, seditious people, Heretics, Papists, or such as care not how they seek to provoke an Insurrection to they may do it; nor indeed can wax so rich with their own labours, and with Peace, as they can do with Spoils, with excuses.

KING with Wars, with Robberies, and such like, yea, with the spoil of your own goods, with the living of your labours, the sweat of your bodies, the food of your own Households, Wives and Children. Such they be, as for a time use pleasant persuasions to you, and in the end will cut your Throats for your own Goods.

Baptism. You be borne in hand, that your Children, though necessity chance, shall not be christened but upon the Holy-days. How false this is, learn you of us. Our Book which we have set forth by the free consent of our Parliament, in the English Tongue, teaching you the contrary, even in the first leaf, yea, the first side of the leaf of that part which intreateth of Baptism. Good Subjects (for to others we speak not) look and be not deceived. They which have put this false Opinion into your ears, they mean not the Christening of Children, but the destruction of you our Christened Subjects. Be this known unto you, our honour is so much, that we may not be found faulty of our word. Prove it, if by our Laws ye may not Christen your Children upon necessity, every day or hour in the Week, then might you be offended; but seeing you may do it, how can you believe them which teach you the contrary? What think you they mean in the rest, which move you to break your obedience against your King and Sovereign, upon these so false tales and persuasions in so evident a matter? Therefore you all which will knowledge us your Sovereign Lord, and which will hear the voice of your natural King, may easily perceive how ye be deceived, and how subtilly Traitors and Papists with their fallhood, seek to achieve, and bring their purpose to pass with your help. Every Traitor will be glad to disseble his Treason, and feed it secretly, every Papist his Papery, and nourish it inwardly; and in the end, make you our Subjects partakers of Treason and Papery, which in the beginning was pretended a Commonwealth and holiness.

2. Sacrament. And how are you seduced by them; which put in your heads, That the blessed Sacrament of Christs body should not differ from other common bread? If our Laws, Proclamations and Statutes, be all to the contrary, why shall any private man persuade you against them? We do our selves in our own heart, our Council in all their profession, our Laws and Statutes in all purposes, our good Subjects in all their doings, most highly esteem that Sacrament, and use the communion thereof to our most comfort. We make so much difference thereof from other common Bread, that we think no profit of other Bread, but to maintain our bodies; But of this blessed Bread we take the very food of our souls to everlasting life. How think you good Subjects, shall not we being your Prince, your Lord, your King by Gods appointment, with truth more prevail, than certain evil persons with open fallhood? Shall any seditious person persuade you, that the Sacrament is despised, which is by our Laws, by our Self, by our Council, by all our good Subjects esteemed, used, participated, and daily received? If ever ye were seduced, if ever deceived, if ever Traitors were believed, if ever Papists poisoned good Subjects, it is now. It is not the Christening of Children, nor the reverence of the Sacrament, nor the health of your souls that they shoot at, good Subjects. It is Sedition, it is High Treason, it is your destruction they seek, how craftily, how piteously, how cunningly soever they do it. With one rule judge ye the end, which of force must come of your purposes. Almighty God forbidde, upon pain of everlasting damnation, disobedience to us your King; and in his place we rule in earth. If we should be slow, would God er? If your offence be towards God, think you it pardoned without repentance? Is Gods judgment mutable? Your pain is damnation, your Judge is incorruptible, your fault is most evident.

Likewise are ye evil informed in divers other Articles, as for Confirmation of your Children, for the Mass, for the manner of your service of Mattens and Evening. Whatever is therein ordered, hath been long debated and consulted by many learned Bishops, Doctors, and other men of great learning in this Realm concluded; in nothing was so much labour and time spent of late time, nothing so fully ended.

3. Note and Service in English. As for the Service in the English Tongue, it hath manifestly reasons for it. And yet perchance it seemeth to you a new Service, and indeed is none other but the old. The self same words in English which were in Latine, saving a few things taken out, which were so found, that it had been a shame to have heard them in English, as all they can judge which list to report the truth. The difference is, we meant godly, that you our Subjects should understand in English, being our natural Country Tongue, that which was heretofore spoken in Latin, then serving only for them which understood Latin, and now for all you which be born English. How can this with reason offend any reasonable man, that he shall understand what any other faith, and so consent with the speaker? If the Service in the Church was good in Latin, it remaineth good in English: for nothing is altered, but to speak with knowledge that which was spoken with ignorance, and to let you understand what is said for you, to the intent you may further it with your own devotion. An alteration to the better, except knowledge be worse than ignorance. So that whosoever hath moved you to dislike this order, can give you no reason, nor answer yours, if ye understood it.

Wherefore you our Subjects remember, we speak to you, being ordained your Prince and King by Almighty God; If any wife we could advance Gods honour more than we do, we would do it: And see that ye become subject to Gods Ordinances, obeying us your Prince, and learn of them which have authority to teach you, which have power to rule you, and will execute our justice if we be provoked. Learn not of them whose fruits be nothing but wilfulness, disobedience, obitancy, dissimulation and destruction of the Realm.

For the Mass, we assure you, no small study nor travel hath been spent by all the learned Clergy therein, and to avoid all contention, it is brought even to the very use as Christ left it, as the Apostles used it, as holy Fathers delivered it; indeed somewhat altered from that the Popes of Rome, for their lucre brought to it. And although ye may hear the contrary of some Papists evil men, yet our Majesty which for our honour may not be blemished, nor stained, assureth you, that they deceive you, abuse you, and blow their opinions into your heads, to finish their own purposes.

And so likewise judge you of Confirmation of Children; and let them answer you this one question: Think they, that a Child Christened is damned, because it dieth before Bishopping? They be confirmed at the time of discretion, to learn that which they professed, in the lack thereof, by Baptism; taught in age, that which they received in infancy; and yet no doubt but they be saved by Baptism, not by Confirmation; and made Christs by Christening, and taught how to continue by Confirmation. Wherefore in the whole, mark good Subjects, how our Doctrine is founded upon true learning, and theirs upon shameless Errors.

To conclude, beside our gentle manner of information to you, whatsoever is contained in our Book, either for Baptism, Sacrament, Mass, Confirmation and Service in the Church, is by our Parliament established, by the whole Clergy agreed, yea, by the Bishops of the Realm devised, and further, by Gods word confirmed. And how dare ye trust, yea, how dare ye give ear, without trembling to any singular person, to disallow a Parliamentary Subject to persuade against our Majesty, a man of his singular arrogance against the determination of the Bishops, and all the Clergy, any invented argument against the Word of God?

But now you our Subjects, we resort to a greater matter of your blindness, of your unkindness and great unnaturalness, and such an evil, that if we thought it had not begun of ignorance, and continued by persuasion of certain Traitors amongst you, which we think few in number, but in their doings bulie; we could not be persuaded but to use our sword, and do justice, and, as we be ordained by God, to redress your errors by avengement. But love and zeal yet overcometh our just anger, but how long that will be, God knoweth, in whose hand our heart is; or rather for your own causes, being our Christened Subjects, we would ye were persuaded than vanquished, informed than forced, taught than overthrown, quietly pacified than rigorously persecuted.

Alteration of Service from an unknown Tongue to a known Tongue

4. The Mass.

5. Confirmation. Baptism is not any Bishopping.

5 Ann. 3. 1549

The false families of the Rebels touching Baptism recited.

The false families of the Rebels touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper resolved.

Ye require to have the Statute of the Six Articles revived, and know ye what ye require? or know ye what ease ye have with the loss of them? They were laws made, but quickly repented, too bloody they were to be born of our people, and yet at the first indeed made of some necessity. Oh Subjects, how are ye trapped by subtil persons? We of pity, because they were bloody, took them away, and you now of ignorance will ask them again. You know full well, that they helped us to extend rigour, and gave us cause to draw our Sword very often, they were as a Whetstone to our Sword, and for your causes we left to use them. And since our mercy moved us to write our laws with milk and equity, how be ye blinded to ask them in blood?

The Rebels require the Six Articles. The 6 Articles taken away by Parliament.

But leaving this manner of reasoning, and resorting to the truth of our authority, we let you wit, the same hath been annulled by our Parliament, with great rejoicing of our Subjects, and not now to be called by Subjects in question. Dare then any of you with the name of a Subject stand against an Act of Parliament, a Law of the whole Realm? What is our power, if laws should be thus neglected? yea, what is your surety, if laws be not kept? Assure your selves most surely, that we of no earthly thing under the Heaven make such a reputation, as we do of this one thing, to have our Law obeyed, and this cause of God, which we have taken in hand, to be thoroughly maintained, from the which we will never remove a hairs breadth, nor give place to any creature living, much less to any Subject, but therein will spend our own Royal Person, our Crown, Treasure, Realm, and all our state: whereof we assure you of our high Honour. For herein indeed resteth our Honour, herin standeth our Kingdom, herein do all Kings knowledge us a King. And shall any of you dare breath or think against our Honour, our Kingdom or Crown?

A notable zeal and a Princely word of a King

The Kings

In the end of this your request (as we be given to understand) ye would have them stand in force until our full age. To this we think, if ye knew what ye spake, ye would never have uttered that motion, nor ever given breath to such a thought. For what think you of our Kingdom? Be we of less authority for our age? Be we not your King now, as we shall be? Or shall ye be Subjects hereafter, and now are ye not? Have not we the right we shall have? If we would suspend and hang our doings in doubt until our full age, ye must first know, as a King, we have no difference of years nor time, but as a natural man and creature of God, we have youth, and by his fullness shall have age: We are your rightful King, your liege Lord, your King anointed, your King crowned, the Sovereign King of England, not by our age, but by Gods Ordinance, not only when we shall be of 21 years, but when we are of ten years. We possess our Crown, not by years, but by the Blood and Descent from our Father King Henry the Eighth. You are our Subjects, because we be your King; and rule we will, because God hath willed. It is as great a fault in us not to rule, as in a Subject not to obey.

A King not flesh his Crown, not by years, but by Gods Ordinance.

If it be considered, they which move this matter, if they durst utter themselves, would deny our Kingdom. But our good Subjects know their Prince, and will increase, not diminish his honour, enlarge, not abate his power, knowledge, nor defer his Kingdom to certain years: All is one, to speak against our Crown, and to deny our Kingdom, as to require that our Laws may be broken unto 21 years. Be we not your crowned, anointed and established King? Wherein then be we of less Majesty, of less authority, or less state, than were our Progenitors Kings of this Realm, except your unkindness, your uncharitableness, will diminish our estimation? We have hitherto, since the death of our Father, by the good advice and counsel of our dear and entirely beloved Uncle, kept our State, maintained our Realm, preserved our Honour, defended our People from our enemies; we have hitherto bin feared and dreaded of our enemies; yea, of Princes, Kings and Nations; yea, herein we be nothing inferior to any our Progenitors (which grace we acknowledge to be given us from God) and how else, but by good obedience of our people, good counsel of our Magistrates, due execution of our Laws? By authority of our Kingdom, England hitherto hath gained honour; during our Reign, it hath won of the enemy, and not lost.

It hath been marvelled, that we of so young years, have reigned so nobly, so royally, so quietly. And how chanceth it, that you our Subjects of that our Country of Devonshire, will give the first occasion to slander this our Realm of England, to give courage to the enemy, to note our Realm of the evil of Rebellion, to make it a prey to our old enemies, to diminish our honour, which God hath given, our Father left, our good Uncle and Council preserved unto us? What greater evil could ye commit, than even now, when our foreign enemy in Scotland, and upon the Sea, seeketh to invade us, to rise in this manner against our Law, to provoke so justly our wrath, to ask our vengeance, and to give us occasion to spend that force upon you, which we meant to bestow upon our enemies, to begin to slay you with that Sword which we drew against the Scots and other enemies, to make a Conquest of our own people, which otherwise should have been of the whole Realm of Scotland?

Thus far ye see we have defended from our high Majesty for love, to consider you in your base and simple ignorance, and have been content to fend you an instruction like a fatherly Prince, who of justice might have sent you your destruction like a King to Rebels; and now let you know, that as ye see our mercy abundant, so if ye provoke us farther, we swear to you by the living God, by whom we Reign, ye shall feel the power of the same God in our Sword; which how mighty it is, no Subject knoweth; how puissant it is, no private man can judge; how mortal it is, no English heart dare think. But surely, surely, as your Lord and Prince, your only King and Master, we say to you, repent your selves, and take our mercy without delay, or else we will forthwith extend our Princely power, and execute our sharp Sword against you, as against very Infidels and Turks, and rather adventure our own Royal Person, State and Power than the same shall not be executed.

And if ye will prove the example of our mercy, learn of certain which lately did arise, pretending some griefs; and yet, acknowledging their offences, have not received most humbly their pardon, but feel also by our order, to whom all publick order only pertaineth, redress devised for their griefs. In the end we admonish you of your duties to God, whom ye shall answer in the day of the Lord, and of your duties towards us, whom ye shall answer by our order, and take our mercy whilst God so inclineth us, lest when ye shall be constrained to ask, we shall be too much hardened in our heart to grant it you; and where ye shall now hear of Mercy, Mercy and Life, ye shall then hear of Justice, Justice, and Death.

Given at Richmond, the 8th day of July, the third year of our Reign.

Besides the Articles of these Devonshire men above mentioned, the said Rebels sent up also, not long after, a Supplication to the King, whereunto answer again was made by the Kings learned Council, which here, to make short, I shew serveth not to rehearse.

Over and besides, to behold the malicious working of those Popish Priests, to kindle more the spark of sedition in the peoples hearts, what bruits and rumors did they raise up against the King and his Council, making the vulgar multitude to believe, that they should be made to pay first for their Sheep, then for their Geese and Piggis also, and such other things like; and whatsoever they had in store, or should put in their mouths, they must first therefore to the King? Of all which matter never a word was either thought or meant. But this seemed matter fit for such Priests whereby to set the Prince and his Subjects together by the ears.

Against this seditious company of Rebels, was appointed and sent by the King and his Council, Sir John Russell, Knight, Lord Privy Seal, as Lieutenant General of the Kings Army, of whom chiefly depended the charge and attendance of that Voyage in the West parts. To him also were adjoined, as in part of ordinary Council in those affairs under him, Sir William Harbert, Sir Jo. Pawlet, Sir Hugh Pawlet, Sir Tho. Speck, with the Lord Gray, and other belide.

KING
A. Ed. 6. 1
The Rebels
of Devonshire discomfited.

Thus the said Lord Privy Seal, accompanied with the Lord Gray, advancing his power against the Rebels, although in number of Soldiers not equally furnished like to the other, yet through the gracious assistance of the Lords help, fighting in his cause, and giving the adventure against the enemy, about the later end of July, Anno 1549. gave them the repulse; who notwithstanding, recovering themselves again with such stomachs as they had, incurred the second time with the foresaid Lord Privy Seal, about the beginning of August following, of whom, through the Lords mighty power, they with their whole cause of false Religion, were utterly vanquished and quite overthrown.

The great goodness of God in the Victory against the Rebels.

In the which Victory a great work of Gods mighty power undoubtedly did appear. For although the number of the Rebels did surmount in great quantity, the power and strength of the Lord Privy Seal, and their stomachs were so fiercely set upon all desperate adventures; and though the power of Sir William Herbert (being the same time at Brislow) was not yet presently come, which should have joyed with the Lord Privy Seal; yet all this notwithstanding, the goodness of the Lord so wrought on the Kings behalf, more than any industry of man (which in all respects in handling that matter was very saw, and far behind) that the Victory fell to the Kings part, under the valiant guiding of the foresaid Lord Privy Seal, so that the Popish Rebels not only lost the field, but a great part of them also lost their lives; lying there slain miserably in the Chafe, to the compass of two Miles space. Where also were taken and apprehended the Chieftains and Ringleaders of that mischievous cause, whereof the Principal were Humphrey Arundel, Berry, Thomas Underbil, John Solesman, William Segar, Tempon and Barret two Priests, Henry Bray, and Henry Lee, two Mayors, with divers other more above specified, all which accordingly afterward were executed.

The laudable service of the Lord Privy Seal.

These Rebels, to make their part more sure by the help and presence of their consecrated God and maker, brought with them into the Battel, the Pix under his Canopy, and instead of an Altar, where he was hanging before, set him now riding in a Cart. Neither was there lacking Maffes, Croffes, Banners, Candellicks, with holy Bread also, and holy Water plenty, to defend them from Devils, and all ad-versary power; which in the end neither could help their friends, nor yet could save themselves from the hands of their enemies, but effusions both the consecrated God, and all the trumpety about him, was taken in the Cart, and there lay all in the dust, leaving to them a notable Lesson of better experience, how to put their confidence hereafter in no such vain Idols, but only in the true living God, and immortal Maker, to be served according to his prescribed Word, and that only in the faith of his Son, and not after their own dreaming fantasies.

Musclebo-rough field
in Scotland.

The story whereof putteth me also in remembrance of another like Popish Field, (called Muscleborough field) fought in Scotland the year before this, where the Scots likewise incamping themselves against the Lord Protector, and the Kings power sent into Scotland, did in semblable wise, bring with them to the Battel, the consecrated Gods of their Altars, with Maffes, Croffes, Banners, and all their Popish stuff of Idolatry, having great assistance by virtue thereof, to have a great day against the English Army, as indeed in mans judgment it might seem not unlike. For the number of the Scots Army so far exceeded ours, and they were so appointed with their Pikes in the first front against our Horsemen (which gave the first onset) that our men were faine to recule, not without the loss of divers Gentlemen. Notwithstanding, the mighty Arm of the Lord so turned the Victory, that the Scots in the end, with all their Maffes, Pixes and idolatrous Trinkets, were put to the worle. Of whom in that field were slain between thirteen and fourteen thousand, and not passing an hundred English men. The cause of this was the promise of the said Scots, made before to King Edward, for the Marriage of the young Scottish Queen to King Edward, which promise the said Scots afterward brake, and payed thereafter.

In the which Victory this is also to be noted, that the same day and hour when the Images were burned openly in London, the Scots were put to flight in Muscleborough, as is credibly noted in Records.

During this Hurly-burly amongst the Popish Rebels in Cornwall and Devonshire, the like commotion at the same time, by such like Popish Priests as Homes and his fellows, began to gender in the parts of Oxford and Buckingham; but that was soon appeased by the Lord Gray, who coming down that way into Devonshire, chased the Rebels to their houses. Of whom two hundred were taken, and a dozen of the Ringleaders delivered unto him; wherof certain were after executed.

A Note
in Oxfordshire and Bucks, England.

In Northfolk and parts thereabout, albeit the original Rebellion of their tumultuous stirring was not for the like cause, yet in the obdurate hearts of that unuly multitude, steamed no less bent upon mischief, to disturb publick peace, which was also in the Month of July, the year above said. For repression of which Rebellion, first was sent the Lord Marques of Northampton, with special instruction to avoid the fight, and so by order was appointed with a number of Horse to keep the field and passages, whereby they beinft stopped from Victual, might the sooner be brought to acknowledge their folly, and to seek their pardon. Who then following other policy than by order was given, came and pinned himself within the City of Norwich, which afterward they were faine to abandon, the Rebels pressing upon the City so on every side, that at length they obtained the same. Nevertheless in all that conflict there was but an hundred on both sides slain, and otherwifeno great loss, but only the loss of the Lord Sheffield.

Then was sent down against them the Earl of Warwick, with sufficient force and number of Soldier, besides the convoy of two thousand Almaines, by whom the ricide and confused Rabbie was there overthrown and slain, to the number, as is supposed, at the least of four thousand. And in fine, both the Kets, chief stirrers and authors of that commotion, were taken and put to execution, and one of them hanged up in Chains.

Moreover, besides these inordinate Uprores and Insurrections above mentioned, about the later end of the said Month of July the same year, which was 1549, another like stir or commotion began at Semer, in the Northriding of Yorkshire, and continued in the Eastriding of the same, and there ended. The principal doers and raisers up whereof were one William Omblor of Eastbellerton Yeoman, and Thomas Dale Parish Clerk of Semer, with one Stevenfon of Semer; Neighbour to Dale, and Nephew to Omblor. Which Stevenfon was a mean or messenger between the said Omblor and Dale, being afore not acquainted together, and dwelling seven Miles one from the other. Who at last, by the travel of the said Stevenfon, and their own evil disposition, inclined to ungraciousness and mischief, knowing before, one the others mind by secret conference, were brought to talk together on S. James his day, Anno 1549.

Another Rebellion
or Tumult began in Yorkshire.
The chief stirrers of this Rebellion in the North.

The causes moving them to raise this Rebellion, were these: First and principally, their traitorous hearts, grudging at the Kings most honourable proceedings, in advancing and reforming the true honour of God, and his Religion. Another cause also was, for trusting to a blind and a fantastical Prophecy, wherewith they were seduced, thinking the same Prophecy should shortly come to pass, by hearing the Rebellions of Northfolk, of Devonshire, and other places.

The causes moving the Yorkshire men to Rebellion.

The tenor of which Prophecy; and purpose together of the Traitors was, That there should no King reign in England, that the Noblemen and Gentlemen should be destroyed, and the Realm should be ruled by four Governours, to be elected and appointed by the Commons holding a Parliament in common, to begin at the South and North Seas of England, &c. Supposing that this their Rebellion in the North, and the other of the Devonshire men in the West, meeting (as they intended) at one place, should be the mean how to compass this their traitorous devilish device.

A blind Prophecy spread through the Northern
men.

And therefore laying their studies together, how they might find out more company to join with them in that detestable purpose, and so to set forward in this device they framed, to stir in two places, the one distant 7 Miles from the other, and at the first rush to kill and destroy such Gentlemen and men of substance about them, as were favourers of the Kings proceedings, or which would resist them.

The device
of the Rebels how they compassed their purpose.

Ann. } But first of all, for the more speedy raising of men, they 1549 } devised to burn Beacons, and thereby to bring the people together, as though it were to defend the Sea Coasts, and having the ignorant people assembled, then to pour out their poison; first beginning with the rudest and poorest sort, such as they thought were pricked with poverty, and were unwilling to labour, and therefore the more ready to follow the spoil of rich mens goods, blowing into their heads, that Gods service was laid aside, and new inventions neither good nor godly, put in place, and so feeding them with fair promises to reduce into the Church again their old ignorance and idolatry, thought by that means soonest to allure them to rage, and run with them in this commotion. And furthermore, to the intent they might give the more terror to the Gentlemen at their first rising, left they should be redited, they devised that some should be murdered in Churches, some in their Houses, some in serving the King in Commission, and others as they could be caught, and to pick quarrels with them for alteration of Service on the Holy-days. And thus was the Plat-form cast of their device, according as afterward by their confession at their examinations, it was testified, and remaineth in true record.

Thus they being together agreed, Ombler and Dale, and other by their secret appointment, so laboured the matter in the Parish of Semer, Winttingham, and the Towns about, that they were infected with the poison of this confederacy, in such sort that it was easie to understand whereunto they would incline if a commotion were begun. The accomplishment whereof did shortly follow; for although by the words of one drunken fellow of that Conspiracy, named Calvered, at the Alehouse in Winttingham, some suspicion of that Rebellion began to be smelted before by the Lord President and Gentlemen in those parts, and so prevented in that place where the Rebels thought to begin; yet they gave not over so, but drew to another place at Semer by the Sea-Coast, and there by night rode to the Beacon at Saxton, and set it on fire; and so gathering together a rude rout of Rascals out of the Towns near about being in a fir, Ombler, Thomas Dale, Barton, and Robert Dale, hasted forthwith with the Rebels to Master Whites house, to take him, who notwithstanding being on Horseback, minding to have escaped their hands, Dale, Ombler, and the rest of the Rebels took him, and Clopton his Wives Brother, one Savage a Merchant of York, and one Bury servant to Sir Walter Mildmay, which four, without cause or quarrel, saving to fulfil their feditious Prophecy in some part, and to give a terror to other Gentlemen, they cruelly murdered, after they had carried them one Mile from Semer towards the Wolde, and there after they had stripped them of their Clothes and Purfes, left them naked behind them in the plain field for Crows to feed on, until Whites Wife and Savages Wife, then at Semer, caused them to be buried.

Long it were and tedious to recite what revel these Rebels kept in their raging madness, who ranging about the Country from Town to Town, to enlarge their ungracious and rebellious band, taking those with force which were not willing to go, and leaving in no Town where they came any man above the age of sixteen years, so increased this number, that in short time they had gathered three thousand to favour their wicked attempts, and had like to have gathered more, had not the Lords goodness, through prudent circumspection, interrupted the course of their furious beginning.

For first came the Kings gracious and free Pardon, dispatched charging and pardoning them and the rest of the Rebels of all Treasons, Murthers, Felonies and other offences done to His Majesty, before the one and twentieth of August, Anno 1549. Which Pardon, although Ombler contemptuously refused, persisting still in his wilful obstinacy, dissuading also the rest from the humble accepting the Kings so loving and liberal Pardon, yet notwithstanding, with some it did good.

To make short, it was not long after this, but Ombler as he was riding from Town to Town, twelve Miles from Hummanby, to charge all the Constables and Inhabitants where he came, in the Kings name, to resort to Hummanby, by the way he was spied, and by the circumspect diligence of John Wood the younger, James Aslave, Ralph

Twinge, and Thomas Constable Gentleman, he was had in chaine, and at last by them apprehended, and brought in the night in sure custody unto the City of York, to answer to his demerits.

After whom within short time, Thomas Dale, Henry Barton, the first Chieftains and Ringleaders of the former commotion, with John Dale, Robert Wright, William Pecock, Witherell and Edmund Buttry, busie fitters in this Sedition, as they travelled from place to place to draw people to their Faction, were likewise apprehended, committed to ward, lawfully convicted, and lastly executed at York the one and twentieth of September, Anno 1549. To these pestiferous commotions raised up against King Edward, by his own Subjects in this year afore said, within the Realm, I might also adjoin the busie stirring and raging of the French King, against our young and innocent Prince, without the Realm. Who hearing of these Tumults and violent Insurrections of the Kings Subjects, in divers and sundry quarters of the Realm, supposing to take the time for his most advantage, thought likewise for his part, not to be unoccupied. Who after he had by his Embassador made open breach with the King, immediately after the revocation of the said Embassador from hence, intending to annoy the King, and make his first Invasion against the Isles of Jersey and Gernsey, thought to have surprised our Ships and the said Isles with a certain number of his Ships and Gallies. In the which his assault he was so hotly saluted by the Kings Ships and the Island, that by the confition of them that saw it, and by the report written unto the Lord Protector, the Frenchmen lost at least a thousand men, their Ships and Gallies were so spoiled, as being forced to return home, they were not able then to set out again.

Furthermore, out of France credible word was brought to the Lord Protector (which yet in Letters appeareth) that into one Town in one Vessel, were brought, at least, threecore Gentlemen to be buried; and also an inhibition specially given out by the King, not to speak of the success in that journey. This was about the beginning of August, 1549.

The like also might be noted of the losses of the said French King at Bullenburgh, the eighth day of August, the same year, as by the Lord Clinton's Letters may well appear; but for spending of time I pass it over. What the meaning of the French King was in these Voyages, or how he intended forth to proceed, I have not herein to deal. This is certain and evident, that the mighty Arm of God K. Edward mercifully fought for King Edward his servant, to defend and deliver him from so many hard dangers, so dangerous and sundry commotions, stirred up in so many Quarters within this Realm, and also without the Realm, and all within the compass of one year, and yet the Lord above fighting for his true servant, dispatched them all, as in story here ye have heard declared, and is no less worthy of all posterity to be noted.

Matter concerning Edmund Bonner, Bishop of London, with declaration of the acts and process entred against him in King Edward's time.

AND thus much hitherto having discoursed touching the manifold troubles and tumults raised up on every side against King Edward, by his unkind and unnatural Subjects, and yet notwithstanding, the gracious goodness of the Lord ever giving him the Victory; now let us return again to Bonner Bishop of London, where we left him before, that is, in his own house, where he was by the Council commanded to remain, as is above signified.

And now forsomuch as we have to enter into the story of the said Bonner, for the better understanding of the whole order thereof, it shall be requisite to rip up and declare the matter with the circumstances and occasions thereof from the first beginning of King Edward's time. Where is to be understood, that King Edward, in the first year of his Reign, Anno 1547, the first day of September, for the order of his Visitation, directed out certain Commissioners, as Sir Anthony Cooke, Sir John Goddard, Knights, Mr. John Goddard, Christopher Nevinsom, Doctors of the Law, and

the Kings Commissioners in Pauls
Church.

John

[KING] John Mader Doctor of Divinity. Who sitting in Pauls Church upon their Commission, the day and year afore said, there being present at the same time, Edmund Bishop of London, John Rayson, Polydore Virgil, Peter Van, and others of the said Cathedral Church, after the Sermon made and the Commission being read, ministred an Oath unto the said Bishop of London, to renounce and deny the Bishop of Rome, with his usurped authority, and to swear obedience unto the King, according to the effect and form of the Statute made in the thirty first year of King Henry the Eighth: also that he should present and redress all and singular such things as were needful within the said Church to be reformed.

Whereupon the said Bishop humbly and instantly desired them that he might see their Commission, only for this purpose and intent (as he said) that he might the better fulfil and put in execution the things wherein he was charged by them or their Commission. Unto whom the Commissioners answering, said, they would deliberate more upon the matter, and so they called the other Ministers of the said Church before them, and ministred the like Oath unto them as they did to the Bishop before. To whom moreover, there and then certain Interrogatories and Articles of Inquisition were read by Peter Lilly the publick Notary. Which done, after their Oaths taken, the said Commissioners delivered unto the Bishop afore said, certain Injunctions, as well in Print as written, and Homilies set forth by the King. All which things the said Bishop received, under the words of this Protestation, as followeth:

I Do receive these Injunctions and Homilies with this Protestation, that I will observe them, if they be not contrary and repugnant to Gods law, and the Statutes and Ordinances of the Church. And immediately he added, with an Oath, that he never read the said Homilies and Injunctions.

The which Protestation being made in manner and form afore said, the said Edmund Bonner Bishop of London instantly desired and required Peter Lilly, the Register afore said, there and then to register and enact the same. And so the said Commissioners delivering the Injunctions and Homilies to Master Bellaffere Archdeacon of Colchester, and Gilbert Bourn Archdeacon of London, Essex and Middlesex, and injoyning them in most effectuous manner, under pain therein contained, to put the same in speedy execution, and also referring other new Injunctions to be ministred afterward, as well to the Bishop, as to the Archdeacons afore said, according as they should see cause, &c. did so continue the said visitation till three of the clock the same day in the afternoon.

At the which hour and place assigned, the Commissioners being set, and the Canons and Priests of the said Church appearing before them, and being examined upon virtue of their Oath, for their Doctrine and Conversation of life, first one John Painter, one of the Canons of the said Cathedral Church, there and then openly confessed, that he vitiously and carnally had often the company of a certain married mans Wife, whose name he denied to declare. In the which crime divers other Canons and Priests of the fore said Church, confessed in like manner, and could not deny themselves to be culpable.

And after the Commissioners afore said, had delivered to Master Roiston Prebendary, and to the Proctor of the Dean and of the Chapter of the said Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, the Kings Injunctions, and the Book of Homilies, injoyning them to see the execution thereof, under pain therein specified, they prorogued their said Visitation until seven of the clock the next day following.

By this Visitation, above specified, it appears, gentle Reader, first how Bonner made his Protestation after the receiving of the Kings Injunctions, and also how he required the same to be put in publick record. Furthermore, thou hast to note the unchaite life and conversation of these Popish Votaries and Priests of Pauls. Now what followed after this Protestation of the Bishop made, remaineth further in the sequel of the story to be declared; wherein first thou shalt understand that the said Bishop shortly after his Protestation, whether for fear, or for conscience, repenting himself, went unto the King, where he submitted himself, and recanting his former Protestation, craved pardon of the King for his inordinate demeanour toward his Graces Commissioners, in the former Visitation. Which pardon, notwithstanding it was granted unto him by the King, for the acknowledging of his fault, yet for the evil example of the fact, it was thought good that he should be committed to the Fleet, as by the tenor of the Councils Letter sent to the Commissioners, may appear, which together with the form also of the Bishops Protestation and of his Recantation, here under followeth.

To our very loving friends, Sir Anthony Cook Knight, and the rest of the Commissioners for the Visitation at London, in haile.

After our hearty commendation: This shall be to signify unto you, that we have received your Letters, and in the same inclosed the Copy of the Protestation made by the Bishop of London in the time of your Visitation at Pauls: your wife proceedings wherein, and advertisements from you, we take in very thankful part towards us. And because the said Bishop, which being here before us hath acknowledged his indiscreet demeanour, did at that time at Pauls require the Register of your Visitation, to make record and enter of his Protestation, and now upon better consideration of his duty, maketh means to have the same revoked, as shall appear unto you by the true Copy of his writing enclosed, the original whereof remaining with us be hath subscribed; we pray you to cause the Register to make enter of this his revocation, according to the tenor of this his said Writing: Further signifying unto you, that in respect of his offence, and the evil example that might thereupon ensue, we have thought meet to send him to the prison of the Fleet, whether he hath been conveyed by Master Vicechamberlain. And whereas sundry things for the Kings Majesties service do now occur here, which require the present attendance of you Sir John Goddall, as well for your office of the Signet, as of the Protomariatship, we pray you that leaving the execution of the Visitation to the rest of your Collegues, you make your repair hither with convenient diligence. Thus fare you right heartily well. From Hampton Court the twelfth of September, 1547.

The form of Bonner's Recantation:

Whereas I Edmund Bishop of London, at such time as I received the Kings Majesties Injunctions and Homilies of my most dread Sovereign Lord, at the hands of his Highnesss Visitors, did unadvisedly make such Protestation, as now upon better consideration of my duty of obedience, and of the evil example that might ensue unto others thereof, appeareth to me neither reasonable, nor such as might well stand with the duty of an humble Subject; forsomuch as the same Protestation at my request was then by the Register of that Visitation, enacted and put in record, I have thought it my duty not only to declare before your Lordships, that I do now upon better consideration of my duty, renounce and revoke my said Protestation, but also most humbly beseech your Lordships, that this my Revocation of the same may be likewise put in the same Records, for a perpetual memory of the truth, most humbly beseeching your good Lordships, both to take order that it may take effect, and also that my former and unadvised doings, may be by your good mediation pardoned by the Kings Majesty.

The Registers of these affairs of Bonners remain in the hands of Peter Lillie, then being Register to the fore-said Commissioners.

The order of Bonners doings in the beginning of R. Edward.

Thus far thou hast heard, loving Reader, first the Popish prostitution of Bonner; then how he calling himself home again solemnly recanted the same, requiring further the said his revocation to be committed to public record, for a perpetual remembrance. Also how he upon his humble submission received his pardon of the King, and yet for example sake was commanded to the Fleet. Where he nevertheless did not long continue, but according to the effect of the Kings pardon afore granted was restored both to house and living again, which was in the first year of the King, Anno 1549.

After this ye have heard also in the story above, in the second year, and a great part of the third year of the King, how he demeaned himself, although not most forward in advancing the Kings proceedings; yet in such sort as no great advantage by any Law could be taken against him, both in swearing his obedience to the King, and in receiving his Injunctions; also in confessing his assent and consent touching the state of Religion then; and furthermore in directing out his Letters, according to the Archbishop of Canterburys precepts, to Cloney his Sumner, to the Bishop of Westminster and other Bishops, for abolishing of Images, for abrogation of the Mass, for Bibles to be let up, and for ministering in both kinds, with such other like matters of reformation; till at length he hearing of the death of the Lord Admiral the Lord Protectors Brother, and after that of the stirring and rising of the Kings subjects in sundry tumults against the King, began somewhat as he durst to draw back and slack his Pastoral diligence, so that in many places of his Dioceses, and in London, the people not only were negligent in resorting to Divine Service, but also did frequent and haunt foreign Rites of Masses, and other orders then in this Realm appointed, and he also himself, contrary to his wonted manner, upon principal Feasts refused in his own person to execute. Whereupon he being suspected and complained of, and converted before the Kings Council (as ye heard before) after sharp admonitions and reproofs, had certain private Injunctions to him enjoined.

Bonner be- ploneth to slack in his diligence.

Anno 1549

Matters put to rest.

1. First, That he should personally preach within three weeks after at Pauls-Crois.

2. That according as his Predecessors were wont to celebrate Mass, he at such wonted times should execute and administer the Communion.

3. That he should call before him and correct more diligently such transgressors as absented themselves from the order of Service, and ministrations of the Lords Board, appointed then in Churches by the Kings Ordinance.

4. That he should see more carefully and vigilantly to the punishment of Adulterers and Fornicators.

5. That he in the mean whiles should be resident within his own House during the time, whiles he should make his Sermon at Pauls above mentioned, which was Anno 1549. In the which Sermon certain special points were prefixed unto him, whereupon he should entreat. Which here in order follow, and are these.

Special Points and Articles to be entreated of by Bonner Bishop of London in his Sermon.

1. THAT all such as rebell against their Prince, get unto them damnation, and those that resist the higher power, resist the Ordinances of God, and he that dieth therefore in rebellion, by the Word of God is utterly damned, and so loseth both body and soul. And therefore those Rebels in Devonshire and Cornwall, in Norfolk, or elsewhere, who take upon them to assemble a power and force against their King and Prince, against the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and go about to subvert the state and order of the Commonwealth, not only do deserve therefore death as Traytors and Rebels, but do accumulate to themselves eternal damnation, even to be in the burning fire of Hell with Lucifer, the father and first author of pride, disobedience and rebellion, what pretences soever they have, and what Masses or holy water soever they pretend, or go about to make among themselves, as Chores, Dathan, and Abiram, for rebellion against Moses, were swallowed down alive into Hell, although they pretended to sacrifice unto God.

2. Likewise in the order of the Church, and extern Rites and Ceremonies of Divine Service, forasmuch as God requirith humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledge of him, charity and love toward our neighbours, and obedience to his word, and to his Ministers and superior powers, these we must bring to all our prayers, to all our service, and this is that sacrifice which Christ requirith, and these be those that make all things pleasant unto God. The extern Rites and Ceremonies be but exercises of our Religion, and appointable by superior powers; in chusing whereof we must obey the Magistrates; The which things also we do see ever have been and shall be (as the time and place is) divers, and yet all hath pleased God, so long as these before spoken inward things be there. If any man shall use the old Rites, and thereby disobey the superior power, the devotion of his Ceremonies is made naught by his disobedience: so that which else (so long as the Law did so stand) might be good, by pride and disobedience now is made naught; as Sauls sacrifice, Chores, Dathan, and Abiram, and Aarons two Children were. But whose joyneth to devotion obedience, he winneth the garland. For else it is a zeal, sed non secundum scientiam; a will, desire, zeal, and devotion, but not after wisdom; that is, a foolish devotion, which can require no thanks or praise. And yet again, where ye obey, ye must have devotion, for God requirith the heart more than the outward doings, and therefore he that taketh the Communion, or faith or heareth the Service appointed by the Kings Majesty, must bring devotion and inward prayers with him, or else his prayers are but vain, lacking that which God requirith, that is, the heart and mind to pray to him.

3. Further, ye shall for example on Sunday come seventh night after the foresaid date celebrate the Communion at Pauls Church.

4. Ye shall also set forth in your Sermon, That our Authority of Royal power is (as of truth it is) of no less authority and force in this our young age, than is or was of any our Predecessors, though the same were much elder, as may appear by example of Jesses and other young Kings in Scripture; and therefore all our subjects to be no less bound to the obedience of our Precepts, Laws, and Statutes, than if we were of thirty or forty years of age.

The delivery of these Injunctions and Articles unto the Bishop (with the time of his appointed preaching) was soon after known abroad among the Citizens, and other the Commons within the City of London, so that every man expected the time thereof, willing to hear the same. Which time being once come, the Bishop, according to the tenor of the Injunctions, publicly preached at the Crois of Pauls the first day of September. Howbeit as hypocritie never lurketh so secretly in the hearts of the wicked, but that at one time or other God in his most righteous judgment maketh it open unto the world: so at this present was that long coloured perverse obduracy, and the infected hatred of this double faced dissembler against the Kings godly proceedings, most plainly manifested by his disobedient demeanor in this his Sermon.

For whereas he was commanded to entreat only upon such special points as were mentioned in his Articles; he yet both besides the Councils commandment, to the withdrawing of the minds of the common people, in as much as in him lay, from the right and true understanding of the holy Sacrament ministered in the holy Communion then set forth by the authority of the Kings Majesty (according to the true sense of the holy Scripture) did spend most part of his Sermon about the gross, carnal, and Papistical presence of Christs body and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and also contrary therunto did not only slanderously touch the rest of his Articles, but of a rebellious and wilful carelessness did utterly leave out unspoken the whole last Article, concerning the as effectual and as lawful authority of the Kings Highness during his young age, as if he were thirty or forty years old; notwithstanding the same (because it was the trayterous opinion of the Popish Rebels) was by special commandment chiefly appointed him to entreat upon.

This

KING This contemptuous and disobedient dealing as it greatly offended most of the Kings faithful and loving subjects there present, so did it much mislike the minds, and was far from the good expectation; as well of that faithful and godly Preacher Master John Hooper, afterwards Bishop of Worcester and Glocester, and lastly a most constant Martyr for the Gospel of Christ, and also of Mr. Will. Latimer, Bachelor of Divinity: and therefore they well weighing the foulness of the fact, and their bounden Allegiances unto their Prince, did thereupon exhibit unto the Kings Highness, under both their names, a Bill of complaint or denunciation against the said Bishop in form following.

The Denunciation of John Hooper, and William Latimer, against Bonner, to the Kings Majesty, for leaving undone the points aforementioned, which he was charged to preach upon.

The Denunciation of Mr. Latimer, and John Hooper, denounced against Bonner.
IN most humble wise sheweth unto your Majesty William Latimer and John Hooper, that where of late, as we be certainly informed from your Majesty, by the hand of the right high and noble Prince Edward Duke of Somerset, Governour of your Royall person, and Protector of all your Highness Realms, Dominions and Subjects, and the rest of your Privy Council, there were certain Injunctions given to the Bishop of London that now is, with Articles to be infirmated and preached unto your Subjects at a certain day limited, the which Injunctions and Articles did only tend to the honour of God, and the better instructions of your Highness people to obedience and hatred of rebellion and mutinie, wherewith of late this your Majesties Realm hath been marvellously vexed, to the danger of your Highness person, and the state of the whole Realm, and therefore a thing at this time most necessary to be taught unto the people, that they might know their duty unto your Majesty, and unto Almighty God, and especially to acknowledge your Majesty in these years and age to be a perfect High and Sovereign Lord and King, and supreme Head, whose Laws, Proclamations, and Commandments we are bound to obey, as well as any Princes subjects are bound to obey the Laws, Proclamations, and Commandments of their natural and Sovereign Lord, notwithstanding that nature hath not yet given unto your person such age as I trust the shall nor so many years, which we wish to be so many as any Prince ever had, the which years do not make you King or Prince, but the right of your birth, and lawful succession whatsoever it be, so that we all must as well acknowledge your Majesty to be our King and Prince, at these years, as if you were at the age of thirty or forty years, and your Laws and Statutes no less to be feared and obeyed, than if your Highness were fifty or an hundred years old, (the which thing not only is most certainly true, but also at this time most necessarily to be taught, especially when divers Rebels have openly declared, that they would not obey your Highness Laws, nor acknowledge the Statutes made by your Majesty to be available till you come to the age of twenty years) and this not only being so, but the same thing being commanded by your said Majesty, amongst other Injunctions and Articles given in writing to the said Edmund Bonner, to be preached in his last Sermon, as by the same Injunctions may appear, of the which the true Copy we have when need is to be shewed: yet all this notwithstanding, the said Bonner, of what zeal or mind we cannot tell, whether favouring the opinion of the said Rebels, or concerning your Highness Commandment declared unto him, hath not only left out to declare the said Article, which we most and chiefly expected and looked for, but also in all the rest of his Sermon did not so fully and aptly declare the said Injunctions and Articles, as to our judgment did appear they ought to have been declared, and was of no light ground looked for, intreating of other far distant and divers from the Articles upon the which he was commanded to intreat; and such as most should move and stir up the people to disorder and dissention, willingly leaving out those things which should have made quiet and obedience. Wherefore not moved of any malice, grudge, envy, or evil will to the person of the Bishop, but constrained by the love and zeal which we bear towards your Highness, and of our duty and allegiance to your Majesty, whose honour and safety with tranquillity, quietness, and good governance of this your Realm, we do most desire and for the discharge of our most bounden duties, to avoid all the dangers that might ensue of the concealment thereof, we most humbly do denounce and declare the same to your Highness, to the intent that your Majesty, by the advice aforesaid, may, if it please your Highness, at this our humble denunciation, call the said Bishop to answer to the premises, the which we are ready to avow and prove, and then your Highness may take further order herein, as to your Princely wisdom shall seem most convenient, whose long life and most prosperous Government God Almighty long continue, for the which we shall pray during our lives.

The Kings Majesty having thus, by the information of these two credible persons, perfect intelligence of the contemptuous and perverse negligence of this Bishop, in not accomplishing his Highness Commandment given him by Injunction, thought it most necessary with all convenient speed (for the avoiding of further inconveniences) to look more severely unto the due punishment of such dangerous rebellious obstinacy; and therefore by the advice of the Lord Protector, and the rest of his Honourable Council, immediately he directed forth his Commission under his Broad Seal unto the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, and to other grave and truly Personages and Counsellors, appointing and authorizing all them, or certain of them, by virtue of the same, to call before them, as well the Bishop of London, as also the foresaid denouncers, and upon due examination and proof of the premises, or any other matter otherwise to be objected, further to proceed against him summarily & de plano, according to Law and justice, either to suspension, excommunication, committing to prison, or deprivation, (if the quality of the offence so required) or otherwise to use any other censure Ecclesiastical, which for the better hearing, and determining of that cause, might to their widows seem more pertinent, as appeareth more amply by the tenour of the Commission here ensuing.

The Copy of the Kings Commission sent down upon the Denunciation aforesaid, for the Examination of Bonner Bishop of London.

EDward the Sixth, &c. To the most reverend Father in God Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of England, the right reverend Father in God Nicolas Bishop of Rochester, our trusty and right well beloved Counsellors, Sir William Petre, and Sir Thomas Smith, Knights, our two principal Secretaries, and William May, Doctor of the Law Civil, and Dean of Pauls, greeting. It is come to our knowledge, that where we by the advice of our most entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerset, Governour of our Person, and Protector of all our Realms, Dominions, and Subjects, and the rest of our Privy Council, did give to the right reverend Father in God Edmund Bishop of London, upon certain complaints before made unto us, and other great considerations, certain Injunctions to be followed, done, and executed, and in a Sermon appointed to him to preach by us with certain Articles, and for the more sure knowledge, keeping, and observing, did exhibit the same in writing unto him by the hands of our said Uncle, in the fulfilling of our counsel: all this notwithstanding the said Bishop hath in contempt of us (as it may appear) overslipped and not observed certain of the said things so by us enjoined, and other so perversely and negligently done, that the things minded of us to reformation, and for a good quiet of our subjects and our whole Realm, be converted by the wilful negligence or perversity of him to a great occasion of slander, tumult, and grudge amongst our people, as it hath been denounced to us in writing by certain honest and discreet persons, and otherwise called. The which things if they be so, we rendering the health, quietness, good order, and government of our people, have not thought convenient to be let pass unpunished and uncorrected, and therefore by the advice aforesaid, have appointed you, four, or three, upon whose fidelities, wisdoms, dexterities, and circumstances, we have full confidence, to call before you as well the denouncers of the said faults, as also the said Bishop, and with due examinations and process, according to the Law and Justice, to bear the said matter, and all other matters, of what kind, nature, or condition soever they shall be, objected against the said Bishop, summarily (&c de plano) or otherwise as to your discretions shall be thought most meet, with full power and authority to suspend, excommunicate, commit to prison, or deprive the said Bishop, if the offence shall so appear to merit, or to use any other censure Ecclesiastical, which for the better bearing and determining of the cause shall be requisite and appertain, any Law, Statute, or Act to the contrary notwithstanding. In witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent.

Witness our self at Westminster the eighth of September, in the third year of our Reign.

The Commission delivered.

The Commission being sealed with the Kings Broad Seal, was by his Highness Council forthwith delivered at the Court unto Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest of the Commissioners mentioned in the same, being there all together present. Who upon the receipt thereof, determined by virtue of the same to sit at the Archbishops house at Lambeth the Wednesday then next ensuing, which was the tenth day of that present month of September, and therefore appointed the Bishop of London to be summoned to appear before them, as at that time and place. The manner of whose behaviour at his appearance, because it both declareth the froward nature and stubborn condition of the person, and also what estimation and authority he thought the Commissioners to be of, I thought it not meet first, before I enter into the Process, somewhat to note and describe unto you.

The Archbishop's behaviour out of Bonner before the Commissioners.

At his first entry into the place within the Archbishops House at Lambeth, where the Archbishop and other of the Commissioners sat, he passed forth directly by them with his Cap upon his head (making as though he saw them not) until one plucked him by the sleeve, willing him to do reverence unto the Commissioners. Whereat he laughingly turned himself, and spake unto the Archbishop on this wise: What, my Lord, are you here? by my troth I saw you not. No, said the Archbishop, you would not see. Well (quoth he) you sent for me, have you any thing to say to me? Yea, said the Commissioners, we have here authority from the Kings Highness to call you to account for your Sermon you made lately at Pauls-Croft, for that you did not there publish to the people the Article which you were commanded then to preach upon. At which words the Bishop, either for that he did not greatly delight to hear of this matter, or else because he would make his friends believe that he was called to account only for his opinion in Religion (as afterward in the sequel of this Process it more plainly appeareth) began to turn his talk unto other matters, and said unto the Archbishop, In good faith my Lord, I would one thing were had in more reverence than it is. What is it, said the Archbishop? The blessed Mass, quoth he. You have written very well of the Sacrament: I marvel you do no more honour it. The Archbishop of Canterbury therewith perceiving his subtilty, and seeing his grofs blindness; to commend that which was utterly contrary to his opinion, said unto him again: If you think it well, it is because you understand it not. The other then adding unto his former grofs ignorance an oblique impudency, answered, I think I understand it better than you that wrote it. Unto which words the Archbishop replied, Truly I will easily make a child that is but ten years old to understand therein as much as you. But what is this to the matter?

And so forth, at what time as they began to enter the Judicial prosecuting of their Commission, and had called forth the denouncers to propound such matter as they had to object against him, he hearing them speak, fell to scoffing and taunting of them, saying to the one, that he spake like a Groat; and to the other, that he spake like a Woodcock, utterly denying their accusations to be true. Whereupon the Archbishop seeing his perversity malice against the denouncers, asked him, if he would not believe them, whether he would credit the people there present? and there withal (because many of them were also at the Bishops Sermon at Pauls) he stood up and read the Article of the Kings authority during his young age; saying unto them, How say you my Masters, did my Lord of London preach this Article? Whereunto they answered, No, no. At which words the Bishop turning himself about, deriding said, Will you believe this fond people?

Besides this, at all his appearances he used many irreverent, uncomely, obstinate, and froward words and behaviours towards the Commissioners and others (in defacing their authority with the terms of pretended Commissioners, pretended Witnesses, and unjust, unlawful, and pretended proceedings, with recusation of some, and terming others Daws, Woodcocks, Fools, and such like) which I will here omit, for they do more manifestly appear in the sequel of the story in the time and place as they happened; adding yet this much by the way, that although such stoutness of heart and will, if it had been in a cause true and rightful, might have perchance seemed in some mens judgment to be somewhat sufferable; yet to say the truth, in what case soever it be, being immoderate, as this shall appear, it befemed no wise man, and therefore much less one of his calling. For if his cause had been good, why did he not take the wrong patiently and meekly, as the true Canon-Law of the Gospel doth teach him? If it were (as it was indeed) naught and wrong, wherefore served he bold sturdy stoutness, but to shew the impudency of the person, and to make the cause worse which was had enough before? But belike he was disposed to declare, if he need were, what he was able to do in the Law, in shifting off the matter by subtil Dilatories, and frivolous cavilling about the Law. And if that would not help, yet with facing and bracing, and raising upon the Denouncers with furious words, and irreverent behaviour toward the Kings Commissioners, he thought to countenance out the matter before the people, that something might seem yet to be in him, whatsoever was in the cause. For to conclude, for all his crafty cauels and tergiversations alledged out of the Law, yet neither his Cause could he so defended, nor his behaviour so excused, but that he was therefore both justly imprisoned, and also in the end most lawfully deprived; as by the sequel of this Process may well appear, the manner whereof is as followeth.

The first Action or Session against Bonner.

UPON Wednesday the tenth day of September, in the year of our Lord 1549, and in the third year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of all England, associate with Nicholas Ridley then Bishop of Rochester, Sir William Peter Knight, one of the Kings two Principal Secretaries, and Master William May, Doctor of the Civil Law and Dean of Pauls, by virtue of the Kings Commission, sat Judicially, upon the Examination of Edmund Bonner Bishop of London, within the Archbishops Chamber of Prefence, at his House in Lambeth, before whom there then also personally appeared the said Bishop. At which time the Commissioners, first shewing forth their Commission, requested Sir William Peter that he would openly publish and read the same. Which done, the Archbishop in the name of the rest declared unto the Bishop, that a grievous complaint had been heretofore made and exhibited against him in writing, unto the Kings Majesty and his most Honourable Council, and that therefore his Highness, with their advice, had committed the Examination thereof unto him and other his Colleagues there present, as also unto Sir Thomas Smith Knight, the other of his Majesties two Principal Secretaries, though then absent, and there withal shewed also forth a Bill of complaint exhibited unto the King by William Lasimer, and John Hooper Ministers, which they likewise requested Sir William Peter to read.

These things ended, the Bishop like a subtil Lawyer, having most like some secret intelligence before of these matters (whatsoever he pretended to the contrary) pulled out of his bosom a solemn Protestation ready written, which he then exhibited unto the Commissioners, requesting that the same might be there openly read; the Copy whereof is in this tenor and form as followeth.

Itaque contra formam & tenorem earundem, vel contra personas aliquorum vestrum, ea quæ de jure ac naturali ratione mihi competunt in hac parte, cum reverentia (qua deest) obijcere, ac in debita jura forma proponere non possum in presenti ut deberem. This Protestation being read, he requested the Commissioners that he might have the Bill of complaint delivered him. Which when he had well perused, he said, that the same was very general, and so general, as that he could not directly answer thereunto. Whereunto the Archbishop answered, that the special cause of the complaint against him was, for that he had transgressed the Kings Commandment, given unto him by his Council, in that he in his late Sermon made at Pauls-Crofs did not set forth unto the people the Kings Highness Royal power in his Minority, according to the tenor of the Article delivered unto him by them for that purpose; and for proof thereof called forth William Lasimer and John Hooper Preachers, who before that time had put up the Bill of complaint unto the King against him.

Upon whom when the Bishop had earnestly looked, and well beheld them, he said, As for this Merchant Lasimer, I know him very well, and have born with him, and winked at his doings a great while, but I have more to say to him hereafter. But as touching this other Merchant Hooper, I have not seen him before, howbeit I have heard much of his naughty preaching. And then turning himself again unto the Archbishop (of purpose most like to make his friends think that he was not called thither to answer for his contemptuous disobedience, but for matters of Religion) said unto him, Ah my Lord, now I see that the cause of my trouble is not for the matter that you pretend against me, but it is for that I did preach and set forth in my late Sermon the true Presence of the most blessed Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar. For as for these my Accusers, as they be evil, infamous, notorious, and criminal persons, so are they manifest and notable Hereticks and seducers of the People, especially touching the Sacrament of the Altar: and most of all this Hooper. For where in my late Sermon at Pauls-Crofs I preached, That in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration, there is the true Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, the self same in substance that was hanged and shed upon the Crofs; he the same day at afternoon, having a great rablement with him of his damnable sect, openly in the Pulpit within my Diocess, did preach erroneously to the people against it; and maliciously inveigling against my Sermon, denied the verity and presence of Christs true Body and Blood to be in the same Sacrament, and also falsely and untruly interpreted and expounded my words. And especially, where I preached and affirmed the very true Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ to be in the said Sacrament, the self same in substance that was hanged and shed upon the Crofs, he like an Als (as he is an Als indeed) falsely changed and turned the word that into as, like an Als, saying, that I had said as it hanged, and as it was shed upon the Crofs.

Hooper.

The Archbishop hereupon perceiving the Bishops drift, and hearing him talk so much of the Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament, said unto him, My Lord of London, ye speak much of a Presence in the Sacrament; what Presence is there, and of what Presence do you mean? Wherewith the Bishop being somewhat flustered and moved in mind (as appeared by his cholerick countenance) spake again to the Archbishop very earnestly, and said, What Presence my Lord? I say and believe that there is the very true Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ. What believe you, and how do you believe my Lord? Upon which words the Archbishop, because he saw his answer dark and subtil, and minding somewhat to nip the grofs absurdities of the Papists, asked him further, whether he were there, face, nose, mouth, eyes, arms and lips, with other lineaments of his body? Whereat the Bishop shaking his head, said, Oh, I am right sorry to hear your Grace speak these words, and therewith boldly urged the Archbishop to shew his mind therein. Who wisely weighing the fond presumption of the party, with the place and occasion of their assembly, refused them to do so, saying, that their being there at that time was not to dispute of those matters, but to prosecute their Commission committed to them by their Prince, and therefore willed him to answer them unto such things as were objected against him.

A Question to Bonner.

Whereupon under his Protestation, he required to have a Copy both of the Commission, and also of the Denunciation given unto him, with time to answer thereto. Which the Commissioners willingly granted, assigning him there to appear again before them upon Friday then next following, at eight of the Clock before Noon, and then to answer the tenor of the Denunciation. And so for that day (he complaining somewhat of the shortness of his time to answer) they all together departed.

The second appearance of Bonner in the Chappel of Lambeth, before the Archbishop and other four Commissioners, the Bishop of Rochester, Secretary Peter, Secretary Smith, and the Dean of Pauls.

UPON Friday the thirteenth of September afore-named, four Commissioners, associated then also with Sir Thomas Smith Knight, the other of the Kings two Principal Secretaries, and joynt Commissioner with them, sat judicially in the Archbishops Chappel within his house at Lambeth. Before whom (according to their former assignment) there and then appeared the Bishop of London. To whom the Archbishop in the name of the rest, first said, My Lord of London, the last time you were before us, we laid certain Articles and matter to your charge touching your disobedience to the Kings Majesty, and you have this day to make your answer thereunto, wherefore now shew us what you have to say for your defence,

Whereto

Bonnars answer to the Archbishop of Canterbury. A precise point of the Law, where a new Commission may fit afterwar, which fat not at the beginning.

Where to the Bishop first asking the Archbishop if he had all said and done, and he again saying, Yea, made this answer: My Lord, the last day that I appeared before you, I remember there fat in the Kings Majesties Commission, your Grace, you my Lord of Rocheſter, you Maſter Secretary Peter, and you Maſter Dean of Pauls, but now I perceive there litleth alſo Maſter Secretary Smith. Who becauſe he fat not at the beginning, nor took there the Commiſſion upon him, ought not ſo to do: for by the Law, they which begin muſt continue the Commiſſion. Whereupon the Archbishop firſt answered, that he was no Lawyer, and therefore could not certainly ſhew what the Law willesh in that caſe, but, faith he, if the Law be ſo indeed, ſurely I take it to be an unreaſonable Law.

Well, ſaid the Biſhop, there be here that know the Law, and yet I ſay not this to the intent to ſtand or ſtick much in this point with you, but to tell it you as it were by the way; for I have here mine answer ready.

The words of Secretary Peter to Bonner.

Then ſaid Maſter Secretary Peter to the Biſhop, My Lord, in good ſooth I muſt ſay unto you, that although I have profeſſed the Law, yet by diſcontinuanſe and diſuſe thereof, and having been occupied a long time in other matters from ſtudy of the Law, I have perhaps forgotten what the Law will do precisely in this point: but admit the Law were ſo as you ſay, yet your ſelf knoweth, my Lord, that this is our certain rule in Law, Quod Conſuetudo eſt juris interpret optimus, and I am ſure you will not, nor cannot deny, but that the cuſtom is commonly in this Realm in all Judgments and Commiſſions uſed to the contrary; and in very deed we all together at the Court, having the Commiſſion preſented unto us, took it upon us; and therefore for you to ſtick in ſuch trifling matters you ſhall rather in my judgment hurt your ſelf and your matter, than otherwiſe.

The answer of Bonner to Secretary Peter.

Truly Maſter Secretary, ſaid the Biſhop, I have alſo of long while been diſuſed in the ſtudy of Law, but having continueth ſtill in his ſaid poyſoned and wicked venomous Doctrine, in all points maintaining and defending the ſame and every part thereof all the ways he can, ſpecially againſt the Preſence of Chriſts bleſſed Body in the Sacrament of the Altar; and his ſaid Books, eſpecially the ſaid Declaration of Chriſt and of his Office, Printed (as he ſaith ſummiſh) in Zurich, by Auguſtine Friers, where he in many places Heretically and damnablely denieth the true Preſence of Chriſts Body in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo in effect denieth the verity of Chriſts bleſſed Body upon the Croſſe, calling it Mathematical, and excluding thereby the true and very ſubſtance thereof.

The words of Secretary Smith to Bonner.

At which words, Maſter Secretary Smith ſaid alſo unto the Biſhop, Well my Lord of London, as cunning as you make your ſelf in the Law, there be here that know the Law as well as you: and for my part I have ſtudied the Law too, and I promiſe you theſe be but quiddities and quirks invented to delay matters, but our Commiſſion is to proceed ſummarily, Ex de pleno, and to cut off ſuch frivolous Allegations.

The answer of Bonner to Secretary Smith.

Well (ſaid the Biſhop again) look well on your Commiſſion, and you ſhall find therein theſe words, To proceed according to the Law and Juſtice: and I aſk both Law and Juſtice at your hands.

The words of Secretary Peter.

Then Maſter Secretary Peter willed him to ſtand no more thereupon, but to proceed unto his answer. Whereupon he took forth a writing, wherein was contained his answer to the Denunciation exhibited the day before by Latimer and Hooper, and delivering it unto the Archbishop, ſaid, that it was of his own hand-writing, and for lack of ſufficient time written ſo haſtily and curioſly, that it could ſcarcely be read of any other, and therefore he deſired to read it himſelf; and ſo taking it again, read it openly, the Copy whereof here followeth.

The Answer of the ſaid Biſhop, made to the Denunciation aforeſaid.

I Edmund Biſhop of London, concerning William Latimer, and John Hooper, the pretended Denunciators of this matter here now before you, and for answer unto the unlawful, untrue, and uncharitable pretended Denunciation of them, lately in deed contrary to Juſtice and good reaſon, exhibited here and read before you, under preteſtation heretofore made by me, and read unto you, remaining in the Acts of this Court, unto which I refer me, and have the ſame here again for repeated and rehearſed to all purpoſes agreeable to the Law, do for my neceſſary defence and help alledge and ſay as followeth.

Allegations or rather cavillations of Bonner againſt the Denunciators.

1. Firſt, I do alledge and ſay, That the ſaid William Latimer, and John Hooper, or either of them, were not, nor now are to be admitted in any wife, by vertue of this or any other Commiſſion, as Denunciators againſt me their Biſhop; ſpecially, for that they and either of them have as well before the time of their pretended Denunciation, and alſo then and ſince been and be vile and infamous, notorious criminous perſons, and alſo open and maniſeſt notable Hereticks, eſpecially concerning the Sacrament of the Catholick Church, and namely concerning the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, by reaſon of which their Hereties, they were and be by the order of the ſaid Catholick Church, here in this Realm of England, juſtly and duly Excommunicated and accuſed, and have divided themſelves thereby from the unity and integrity of Chriſts Catholick Church, and for ſuch perſons they have been and are named, reputed, and taken openly, notoriously and commonly amongſt the Catholick people of this Realm of England, and eſpecially of this City of London, familiarly haunting and converſant with Sacramentaries, and openly known condemned Hereticks, and favourers and abettors of the ſame, and their detestable and peſtilent Doctrine and Heretic.

(KING)
Edw 6

How ſaid would this man find a fault if he could tell how.

2. Item, That the ſaid John Hooper, amongſt other his poyſoned and venomous Doctrine, and amongſt other his erroneous, detestable, and abominable Errors and Hereties taught and ſpread abroad here within this Realm, infecting and poyſoning the Kings ſubjects therewith, hath before the time of the ſaid pretended denunciation, damnablely and detestably made divers Erroneous and Heretical Books, eſpecially one, Intituled, A Declaration of Chriſt, and of his Office, Printed (as he ſaith ſummiſh) in Zurich, by Auguſtine Friers, where he in many places Heretically and damnablely denieth the true Preſence of Chriſts Body in the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo in effect denieth the verity of Chriſts bleſſed Body upon the Croſſe, calling it Mathematical, and excluding thereby the true and very ſubſtance thereof.

This term blackmouſe is referred of the ſubſtance of the Body upon the Croſſe, but to Parliaments without ſubſtance upon the Altar.

3. Item, That the ſaid John Hooper doth perſevere and continueth ſtill in his ſaid poyſoned and wicked venomous Doctrine, in all points maintaining and defending the ſame and every part thereof all the ways he can, ſpecially againſt the Preſence of Chriſts bleſſed Body in the Sacrament of the Altar; and his ſaid Books, eſpecially the ſaid Declaration of Chriſt and of his Office, he doth yet allow and maintain as good and Catholick, where indeed it is Heretical, wicked and damnable: the Contents of which Doctrine and Book ſo Intituled, the ſaid Latimer, eſpecially touching the Heretic againſt the verity of Chriſts Body, and his true Preſence in the Sacrament of the Altar, hath heard, taught, read, preached, believed, holden, maintained and kept, and ſo at this preſent doth yet believe, hold, maintain, and keep, contrary to the Faith of Chriſts Catholick Church, and the unity of the ſame obſerved amongſt all true Chriſtian people, incurring thereby Heretic, Excommunication, and Schiſm, to the loſs both of their ſouls, and of their believers.

If all truth were away he had ſpoken more truly.

4. Item, That the ſaid Latimer and Hooper, and either of them, being of theſe vile and detestable qualities, and conſequently by the Ordinance of the Catholick Church of Chriſt, as well of this Realm, as alſo throughout all Chriendom, being ſo excommunicated and cut off thereby from the ſaid Church, are not to this pretended denunciation againſt me their Biſhop, nor to any judicial act, to be admitted, ne yet to be accompanied withal, or answered unto, but are by Scripture and the order of Chriſts Catholick Church here in this Realm, utterly and truly to be excluded, avoided, deteſted, eſchewed, and abhorred, in all manner of wife, of all faithful and true Chriſtian people, fearing God, and deſiring the advancement of the Truth.

5. Item, That where the ſaid Latimer and Hooper, in their ſaid pretended Denunciation, amongſt other things, do untruly deduce that they have made their ſaid pretended Denunciation, not moved of any malice or evil will, but for the good tranquility and governance of this Realm, which as they pretend in their gay and glorious prohemie, they would ſeem to have a great care and ſolicitude of, where in very deed they and ſuch as they are by ſundry ways, and ſpecially by their corrupt Doctrine, and Heretical naughty preaching and infecting of the Kings Majesties people, have diſturbed and greatly inquieted the good tranquility and governance of this Realm, as evidently and notoriously it is well known, the truth is, that their ſaying is evident and plain falſe; for notorious it is, and lawfully ſhall be proved, that

KING that the said Hooper, conspiring with the said Latimer and other Heretics of their factious Sect and damnable Opinion, did the first day of September last past, after that I the said Bishop of London had made the Sermon at Pauls Cross, assemble maliciously, uncharitably, and unlawfully, a great rabblement of such as himself is, within my Diocese and jurisdiction, and under the colour of reading, did openly and manifestly rail and inveigh against me the said Bishop, for my said Sermon, not for any such matter, pretence, or cause, as is falsely and untruly furnished in the said pretended denunciation, but only and chiefly for that I the said Bishop, as became a Christian man, and especially him that had and hath cure and charge of his flock, faithfully and truly to teach them, did, taking occasion of the Communion not frequented nor revered, but neglected and contemned, confess and declare my faith and belief openly before my audience, touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar ministered in the same Communion, affirming as the Catholic Church affirmeth and teacheth, That in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar there is the very true body of our Saviour Christ, the self same in substance that hanged upon the Cross, and the very true blood of our Saviour Christ, the self same in substance that was shed upon the Cross. Against which affirmation and assertion, being Catholic and true, the said John Hooper (albeit now colourably and falsely, and foolishly he pretendeth another matter more plausible in his opinion and judgment in sundry places of the City and Suburbs of London) hath since that time maliciously inveighed and taught, learning and teaching his audience heretically (being many in number, and assembling in great routs) to reprove, condemn and despise the said blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and not to have a true and faithful belief of it, as hitherto always the Catholic Church hath * ever had, the said William Latimer, and the rabblement of his accomplices, conspiring and agreeing in points therein, and inducing other to do the same, not making any such pretence at all (as they in their said pretended denunciation do falsely furnish and deduce) but only and chiefly offended for my faith, affection, and affirmation of the verity of Christs body and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar.

But what and where were your troops?

As though he could not both confute your error, and also say the truth now, without all malice or affection. * But, that his false hope, concerning the third, his time, 400 years ago.

Though the Bill of Articles bear no seal or Signet, yet you be but a Caviller knowing that you ever lent Fox, in the presence of the Lord Secretary, in the Council Chamber received the Copy of the Instructions, with the Articles provided to be sent to you in writing, as they were. Indeed, whether are able to deny the same, though you sit to shift out the matter with vain terms of incertainty and obscurity, when the purpose of the thing maketh clear as gainst you, according as it appears in the Articles hereafter mentioned against you the second time.

mans, and it at large declaring unto the audience: Further more speaking of the Rebels in Devonshire, Cornwall, Norfolk, and elsewhere within this Realm, standing in doubt whether I might put them in the place of those that put trust in themselves and despised all other, or in the place of both, doing as they did, forgetting God, not duly considering the Kings Majesty their supreme, head next and immediately under God, forgetting their Wives, their Children, their Kinsfolk, their Alliance, Acquaintance, and Friends, yea themselves, and their native Country; and most unnaturally rebelling against their Sovereign Lord and King, whom by Gods Law they were bound to love, serve, and faithfully obey; I did to the best of my power dissuade Rebellion, and exhort the audience unto true obedience being thus commanded; and all Rebellion being in like manner forbidden under pain of eternal damnation, all these Rebels in Cornwall, Devonshire, Norfolk, or elsewhere, who take upon them to assemble a power and force against their King and Prince, against the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, and went about to subvert the order of the Commonwealth, did not only deserve therefore death, as Rebels and Traitors, but also did accumulate unto themselves eternal damnation, even to be in the burning fire of Hell, with Lucifer the Father and first author of pride, disobedience and rebellion. And here I did ask who had induced the said Rebels thus to do? To which I answered by another question, demanding who moved and induced Fox to take the Apple and break her obedience against Gods commandment? Who moved also and induced Cain to kill his Brother Abel? Yea, who moved Judas the Apostle to betray his Master Christ? Was it not the Devil? Yes truly, and he it is, said I, that of his great malice and hatred to men and good order hath moved and induced these Rebels to this unnatural rebellion against their Prince and Sovereign Lord. Whereupon I asked, what pretences they had, and answering thereto, said; that amongst other they had Masses and Holy Water, upon which I exclaiming against them, said good Lord; is not this a marvellous thing, to palliate, colour, excuse, and maintain Rebellion and inobedience, to pretend Mass or Holy Water, as who faith, that these things had been instituted and ordained to defend, maintain, and excuse Rebellion, Treason, and inobedience, which I told the audience they could not do. And thereupon I brought four Texts of Scripture to prove this thing that I said, alleging the sixteenth Chapter of the Book of Numbers, the fifteenth Chapter of the first Book of Kings, the tenth Chapter of Leviticus, and the fourth that my self added also, the thirteenth of S. Luke, and joined with the fifth of the Acts, setting them forth the best I could, as one not much exercised in preaching, but restrained therefrom. And here I concluded, that whatsoever pretences these Rebels had of Masses, Holy Water, or such other, it could not in any wise excuse or defend their Rebellion and Inobedience, referring my self herein to the indifferent hearers in the said audience. And here pulling out a writing, sent from the Kings Majesties Privy Council unto me, touching the victory against the said Rebels, which for brevity of time my memory would not serve to declare without Book, I did rehearse it in writing word by word. In doing whereof it well appeared, that I did not favour the opinion of the said Rebels, nor maintain their enterprise, but contrariwise did detest them and all their doings, declaring obedience to be better than sacrifice; And that in disobedience and rebellion nothing could or did please Almighty God. Further, taking occasion of the proud Pharisee and the humble Publican ascending into the Temple to pray, and noting the outward and extern doing of them both, with the success thereof, I declared to the audience touching the order of the Church and the extern rites and ceremonies of the divine service, that for as much as God requirith humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledge of him, Charity and love to our neighbour, and obedience to his Word, to his Ministers, and to the superior powers, we must bring all these things to all our prayers, to all our service, and that this is the sacrifice that Christ requirith, and that these be the things that make all other things pleasant to Almighty God; further saying, that the extern rites are but exercises of Religion, and appointed by superious powers, and that in the choosing thereof we must obey the Magistrates, and that we also do see that those things ever have been and shall be divers, as the time and place is, and yet all hath pleased God, so long as humility of heart, innocency of living, knowing of God, charity and love our neighbour, with obedience to Gods word, Gods ministers, and superiour powers, are concurrent and present therewith.

7. Moreover, I then said, that if any man should use rites and disobey thereby the superiour powers, the devotion of his ceremony was made evil by his disobedience. Inasmuch that that which, standing the Law, might be good, was by pride, disobedience, and rebellion, made evil and unprofitable, putting example in the fact of Saul, reserving the fat Sheep for sacrifice, and in Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, and also in Nadab and Abihu, Aarons two children, and in the Galileans, whose blood Pilate did mix with their sacrifices. And thereupon I told the audience that they must do herein especially two things: The first, they must joyntly and with their devotion faithful obedience, and then they shall win the Garland, and otherwise have but a zeal, Sed non secundum scientiam, deserving no thank or praise of God; and also they must, with and to their obedience, joynt devotion, knowing that God more doth require and consider the heart, than the outward doing. And thereupon I exhorted the audience, that when they came to take the Communion, or to hear or say the Service, appointed by the Kings Majesty, they must, bring devotion and inward prayer with them, or else their prayers shall be but vain, as wanting and lacking that thing which God requireth, that is, the heart and mind to pray to him. And herein because I marvelled that the Communion was no more frequented now a days, and lamenting the unreverent coming to it and using of it, fearing that it proceeded of an evil opinion and belief touching the Sacrament of the Altar, ministered and distributed at the same Communion, and to the intent to make the people have better opinion of it than they seemed to have, I did faithfully, truly and plainly declare my belief of the said Sacrament, wherewith the said Latimer and Hooper, with their complices, were so much offended and agrieved.

But where was any mention made of the Kings power in his authority, as it was injoynted you to trust of?

8. Item, That where the said William Latimer and John Hooper do further in the said pretended denunciation untruly, and uncharitably deduce and alledge, that I in my said Sermon did treat of such things, as most should move and stir up the people to disorder and dissention, it doth hereby evidently and clearly appear, that either the said pretended denunciations do take and esteem a declaration faithfully made of the loyal obedience of Subjects to the Kings Majesty, the supreme and Sovereign Lord, and the great peril and danger of Rebellion committed by Subjects against their King and Prince and Sovereign Lord, to be a moving, provoking and stirring up of people to discord and dissention, or else that the affirmation and assertion Catholick of the verity of Christs body and blood in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, set forth by me as afore doth effect and work such disorder and dissention: For evident it is to all those which indifferently heard my said Sermon, that I (grounding my self upon Scripture, and taking occasion of the Sunday then occurred) did speak specially and earnestly of these two things, without taxing of any man specially by name, or other circumstance, to slander them thereby, and I did both set forth the obedience and duty of all Subjects, generally to their King, and specially of Subjects of this Realm to the Kings Majesty that now is, whose minority to all people of this Realm is more than manifest, and is also apparent, or evidently known to all the whole world beside: And also, I did then declare and lay open the imminent danger and great peril of rebellion in Subjects against the high powers and authority, and also specially of the rebellion late committed by them of Devonshire, Cornwall, Norfolk, and elsewhere, against the Kings Majesty that now is, which I would not have done, except I both had believed that all the Kings Subjects without exception were bound to obey the Kings Majesty even as he now is, was, and shall be, during his life, which our Lord long preserve to all our comforts and wealth, and also that the Rebellion of late so committed against his Ma-

If ye did believe it, why did ye not fully approve and declare the same to the people?

jesty was damnable, and utterly detestable and condemned by Gods Law; and herein I refer me to the indifferent hearers of this my Sermon, wishing that this Latimer, and Hooper, with all the rest of these new Preachers, did mean as faithfully, truly, obediently and Catholically, as I alwaies have done toward the Kings Majesty, his honour, authority, Royal power, and surety of his person and Realm, and did not more move, incourage, and stir the Kings Majesties Subjects to sedition, tumult, and inobedience, by their erroneous doctrine and teaching, than I did at any time incourage, move or stir any of them in any wise, or give occasion to any of the same.

9. Item, Where the said William Latimer and John Hooper do fully furnish in their pretended denunciation, that it was of no light ground looked for, that I the said Bishop of London should more aptly have declared the Injunctions and Articles aforesaid, and that it did so appear unto their judgments; I do say that their judgments are corrupted and only set to slander and picking of quarrels in this behalf, being well assured and so credibly informed that all the worshipful and honest Catholick persons of my said audience were fully satisfied both as touching obedience to the Kings Majesty in his tender age and minority, and also touching the penalty and great peril of punishments of the Rebellion so lately committed against the said Majesty by the fore-said Rebels. And moreover I do say, that before my Lord Protectors Grace, and the rest of the Kings Majesties most honourable Council then present, I made my excuse, and alledged many impediments for my not preaching at the Crois, and did not further promise but to do the best I could, which of my fidelity and conscience I did, not omitting any thing of purpose or evil will, that might be to the satisfaction of all people both good and bad in every condition and point, specially in this behalf, collecting and gathering together, with all diligent study, all that might make, in my judgment and opinion, for the better setting forth of the same.

Thus have you Bonnors answer to the denunciation aforesaid: Wherin first he alledged (or rather shamefully and slanderously cavilled) that those his denouncers were vile, infamous and notorious criminous persons, and also open and manifest Heretics, as well against the rest of the Sacraments of the Church, as chiefly against the Sacrament of the Altar; and were for the same by the orders of the Church excommunicated and accursed, and were so taken of all the Catholicks of this Realm, and especially Hooper; who, besides other his poysoned doctrine and Heresies amongst the people, had also before the time of the denunciation made divers erroneous and Heretical Books against the true presence of Christs body in the Sacrament of the Altar, and did also continue in the same, allowing and maintaining it as good and Catholick. Which Books and Doctrine (chiefly against the Sacrament of the Altar) William Latimer had, and then likewise did allow, believe, and teach, to the loss of both their own souls, and also their believers, and therefore were not now nor ought at any time to be admitted either in this their denunciation against him, or in any other judicial act; and that the rather also, because that although they pretend in their denunciation, that they made not the fame of any malice or evil will towards him, but for the good tranquillity and quiet governance of this Realm, yet was it notoriously known, that as well the same day at afternoon in which he the said Bishop preached at the Crois of Pauls, as also at sundry other times, they two, conspiring with other of their faction, did maliciously and unlawfully within his Diocesse assemble together a great rabblement of such as themselves were, and there under the colour of reading did openly rail and inveigh against him, not for any the causes pretended in their denunciation, but because he had in his Sermon declared (as the Catholick Church taught) that in the Sacrament of the Altar there was the very true body and blood of Christ, the same in substance that was hanged and shed upon the Crois.

Then after these vain and frivolous allegations against the denouncers, he cometh and answereth to the substance of their denunciation, and saith, that where they in the fame do fully furnish that there were delivered unto him from

By, by your own confession it appears that these Injunctions were given you by my Lord Protector, and that you will not grant. Bonnors writing exhibited to the Commissioners, answering to the denunciation.

Exceptions said by Bonnors against Latimer and Hooper his denunciation.

The frivolous quarrelling of Bonnors against his denouncers.

Bonnors put to the substance of their denunciation, and saith.

KING from the Kings Majesty, by the hands of the Lord Protector and the rest of his Highnes Council, certain Injunctions and Articles to be published and declared unto the people, at a day limited in the same, their Information, in such sort as it was deduced, was most false and untrue, for that the Articles delivered unto him by Sir Thomas Smith, one of the Kings Secretaries, were neither signed with the Kings own hand, neither sealed with his Highnes Seal or Signet, nor yet subscribed by any of his Council, &c.

Bonner's
refusation to sign
Articles.

Where mark, I beseech you, the subtilty of a disloyal Papist, who, because the Articles were not sealed by the King and his Council, would make them therefore not to be of any such force, as that the breach thereof should cause him to incur the danger of contemptuous disobedience. But admit they were not Signed nor Sealed (of which thing by the way in the denunciation there is no mention yea or nay) yet it is manifest by the second Bill of Articles ministered unto him by the Commissioners, in the fourth Act of his Procees, that at such time as he was before the Council, those Articles were by the commandment of the Lord Protector, openly there read unto him by one of the Secretaries, and after addition of the Article concerning the Kings lawful power and authority during his young years, were also delivered unto him by the hands of the Lord Protector, in the presence of the rest of the Council; who thus receiving them, promised there faithfully to accomplish all the contents thereof. After which, they were again delivered unto Secretary Smith, to amend such things therein as the Lord Protector and the rest of the Council had there appointed. Which being accordingly done (as the Bishop himself at the last receipt thereof confessed) were finally delivered unto him by the Secretary; and therefore was this but a poor shift.

position.

Now after this, he maketh a supposition, that in case it were true, that the Injunctions were delivered him according to their information: Yet was it untrue that he did omit or refuse to declare the same for any such causes as they had alleged against him, and that did well appear in the discourse of his Sermon, which tended principally (as he said) to the disallowing and condemnation of all Rebels, and chiefly of the Rebels in Norfolk, Suffolk, Devonshire, and Cornwall, or elsewhere within in this Realm of England: Who forgetting their Allegiance and Duty unto their Prince, assigned to them by Gods word as their supreme Head, their natural love and care for their Countrey, Wives, Children, and Kinsfolke, did both deserve death bodily as Traitors, and also accumulate unto themselves damnation of body and soul eternally with Satan the Father and first mover of all Rebellion and Disobedience; and herewithal further exclaiming against the pretences of those Rebels, who amongst other things pretended the Malt and Holy Water, with such like, which were never ordained for the purpose to colour and maintain Rebellion (as he said he then proved out of the 16. of Numbers 1. Reg. 15. Leviti. 10. and 4. Luke 13. and Act 5. in the best manner that he could, as one not exercised greatly in preaching, but restrained therefrom) but having humility of heart, innocency of living, knowledge of God, love to our Neighbours, with obedience to Gods word, Ministers, and superior powers concurrent with them, they being external Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, were exercises of Religion, and appointable by superior powers; and yet that, which (standing the Law) might be good, was by pride and disobedience made evil and unprofitable.

Bonner's
rites and ceremonies.

And here he further said because he saw the people slack in coming to the Communion and Divine Service, set forth by the Kings Majesty, and to the intent he would make them have a better opinion in the Sacrament than he thought they had, he then faithfully did declare his belief therein. Wherewith his denouncers being offended, they uncharitably and untruly deduced in their pretended denunciation, that in his Sermon he did intreat of such things as most should stir up unto diffention and tumult; whereby it appeared unto him, that his Denouncers either took his Catholick assertion of the verity of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, or else his faithful declaration made of the obedience of Subjects unto the Kings Majesty their supreme and Sovereign Lord, with the peril and danger of Rebellion committed against him, to be the cause of disorder and diffention; for that, saith he, of these two points he chiefly spake, and especially of obedience to the King, whose minority was more than manifestly known, as well amongst the people of this Realm, as elsewhere throughout the world besides; which he would not have done except he had believed, that both all his Subjects were bounden to obey him, even as he then was and should be during his life, and also that the Rebellion of late committed against him was detestable and condemned by Gods Word: And therefore he wished that his two Denouncers, with all the rest of the new Preaches, did mean as faithfully, obediently, and Catholickly towards the Kings honour, Royal power, and surety of person, as he did, and had not more moved the people to tumults and disobedience by their erroneous Doctrine and teaching, than he had at any time given any occasion thereunto.

Then finally he concluded and said, That whereas his aforesaid Denouncers surmise, That it was of no light ground looked for, as it appeared in their judgements, that he should more aptly have declared the contents of the Injunctions and Articles than he did, that their judgements were in that behalf corrupted and set to slander and picking of quarrels; for he was well assured, and credibly informed, that all his honest and Catholick Audience were fully satisfied, both touching their obedience to the Kings Majesty in his tender age, and also concerning the great penalty and peril that the late Rebels incurred by their disobedience. And besides that, when he was before the Lord Protector and the rest of the Council, after he had made his excuse, and alleged many impediments for his not preaching at the Cross, he did not then further promise but to do the best he could, which he hath of his Fidelity and Conscience accomplished, not omitting any thing of purpose or evil will, that might satisfie the people in any point concerning the Premises.

Whilst he was thus reading these Answers, objecting against his denouncers such causes and quarrels as he before alleged, for which he would have earnestly had the denouncers to be repelled of the Commissioners; the Archbishop of Canterbury replied, That if there were any such Law, he thought it not to be a good or godly Law, but a Law of the Bishop of Rome. For, said he, if my matter and cause be good, what should I care who accuse me, yea although he were the Devil of Hell.

No Sir, said the Bishop of London, it is the Kings Law used in the Realm.

Well, My Lord (said the Archbishop) ye be too full of your Law: I would with you had less knowledge in that Law, and more knowledge in Gods Law, and of your duty.

Well, answered the Bishop again, seeing your Grace falleth to wishing, I can also wish many things to be in your person.

Bonner.

Then spake Secretary Peter to the Bishop as touching these denouncers; we are not so straitened in this matter but that we may proceed against you, either at their promotion, or without them at our pleasure.

A Gods name then (said Bonner) put them by, and then do as your pleasure shall be, so you do me right, for I ask but right.

Nay said Secretary Smith, you ask you wot not what: Secretary Smith You would have us follow your mind in these Quiddities and Quirks; and all is nothing else but to delay justice. And you do herein as Thieves, Murderers, and Traitors, not to have the truth known.

Say you so to me, quoth the Bishop? I thank you. Well, I could say somewhat to you also, were ye not in the place ye be, but let it pass. As for my matter, I fear it not, it is not so evil as you make it; for I have your own hand-writing for my discharge, which when I shall see time, I shall shew forth.

Bonner.

My hand, quoth the Secretary. Let me see it, and let it be read openly. So it shall, said the Bishop, when I shall see time.

Secretary
Smith.

Then said Mr. Smith, you do use us thus to be seen a cunning Lawyer.

With that, Secretary Peter willed the Bishop to proceed in reading of his answers; who so did, and when he had finished, Latimer delivered up a writing in Paper unto the Archbishop and the rest of the Commissioners; who then said unto the Bishop of London, here be certain Articles which we intend to minister unto you.

The Bishop therewith said, do you minister them of your office, or at the promotion of these men? (pointing to Latimer and Hooper) for I perceive they gave them unto you.

Secretary
Peter.
Bonner requith ref-

swer.

Nay said Secretary Peter, we will minister them unto you, Ex officio mero, and thereupon took an Oath of the Bishop de fideliter respondendo. Who, desiring a Copy of the Articles, required also a competent time to be given unto him to make answer thereunto.

Secretary
Peter.

To whom Secretary Peter replied, saying, My Lord, here be certain of the Articles touching your own fact, which you may answer unto forthwith; as whether you wrote your Sermon or not before you preached it.

Bonner.

Whereunto the Bishop answered, that he wrote it not, but he drew certain notes of it.

Secretary
Peter.
Bonner.

Then whole Counsel, said he, and advise used you in making your Sermon?

To which he also answered, that he had therein used his own Counsel and Books, and yet my Chaplains, quoth he, be much suspected for my doings in many things, and sometimes I for theirs, when there is no cause why.

These words ended, the Commissioners assigned him Monday the sixteenth of September then next following, to appear before them, and to make his full answers unto all the Articles ministered unto him by them this day; the Contents whereof are as followeth.

themselves against Bonners flanders Foulsation of Latimer.

But before the same were there read, the Archbishop said unto him, that his late answer, made the thirteenth of September unto the denunciation, were very obscure, and therewith also contained much matter of slander against Latimer and Hooper, and much untruth, and therefore they desired there to purge themselves. Whereupon Latimer, first obtaining leave to speak, said, that the Bishop of London had most falsely, untruly, and uncharitably accused him, laying to his charge many fained and untrue matters in his former answers to the denunciation, and such as he should never be able to prove. For where in his said answer he alleged, that Hugh Latimer and John Hooper, with other Hereticks conspiring against him, did the first day of September after the Bishops Sermon assemble themselves together unlawfully against the said Bishop, that saying of his was most untrue. For neither that day, nor yet before that day, nor until certain days after, he ever knew or spake with Hooper. And as touching his own preaching there, openly accused by the Bishop, he said he never held, taught, or preached any thing concerning the blessed Sacrament, otherwise than he ought to do, nor otherwise than according to the Scriptures, and true Catholic Faith of Christs Church; and therefore offered himself to be tried by the Archbishop, or other such learned men as it should please the Kings Majesty, or the said Commissioners to appoint; and further to suffer, to be hanged, drawn and quartered, if the Bishop could justly prove true the things that he had there shamefully laid to his charge. Then Master Hooper, upon like Licence obtained, said to this effect.

Mr. Hooper

gainst the false flanders
of Bonner.

This ungodly man (pointing to the Bishop) hath most uncharitably and ungodly accused me before your Grace and this audience, and hath laid to my charge that I am an Heretic. Whereas I take God to record, I never spake, read, taught, or preached any Heretic, but only the most true and pure Word of God. And where he saith, I frequent the company of Hereticks, I do much marvel of his so saying: For it hath pleased my Lord Protectors Grace, my singular good Lord and Mr. and my Ladies Grace, to have me with them, and I have preached before them, and much used their company, with divers other worshipful persons, and therefore I suppose this man meaneth them. And further, whereas he saith that I have made heretical Books against the blessed Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, calling it Mathematical, I perceive that this man knoweth not what this word Mathematical there meaneth, and therefore understandeth not my Book: Which, I take God to be my judge, I have made truly and sincerely, and according to his holy word: And by the same his holy word and Scriptures I am always and shall be ready to submit my self to your Graces judgment and the superior powers to be tried; with many such more words of like importance. Which ended, the Archbishop, to shorten this matter, asked the Bishop how he could prove that Hooper and Latimer assembled together against him the first of September, as he had alleged, seeing they now denied it, and therefore willed him to answer forthwith thereunto.

The Bishop then answered that he would duly prove it, so that he might be admitted to do it according to Law, and with that he pulled out of his sleeve certain Books, saying, I have this Varkets Books which he made against the Blessed Sacrament which you shall hear. Then as he was turning certain leaves thereof, Hooper began again to speak: But the Bishop, turning himself towards him, tauntingly said, Put up your Pipes, you have spoken for your part, I will meddle no more with you, and therewith read a certain sentence upon the Book. Which done, he said, Lo here you may see his opinion, and what it is. At which words the people standing behind, and seeing his unrevrent and unseemly demeanour and railing, fell suddenly into great laughing. Whereat the Bishop being moved, and perceiving not the cause wherefore they did laugh, turned him towards them in a great rage, saying, Ah Woodcocks, Woodcocks.

Then said one of the Commissioners, why say you so My Lord? Marry, quoth he, I may well call them Woodcocks, that thus will laugh, and know not whereat, nor yet heard what I said or read.

Well my Lord of London, said the Archbishop, then I perceive you would perfwade this audience, that you were called hither for preaching of your belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, and therefore you lay to these mens charges (meaning Hooper and Latimer) that they have accused you of that. Howbeit, there was no such thing laid to your charge, and therefore this audience shall hear openly read the denunciation that is put up against you, to the intent they may the better perceive your dealing herein. And therewithal he said unto the people, My Lord of London would make you believe, that he is called hither for declaring, and preaching his opinion touching the Sacrament of the Altar: But to the intent you may perceive how he goeth about to deceive you, you shall hear the denunciation that is laid in against him read unto you, and thereupon he delivered the denunciation unto Sir John Mason Knight, who there read it openly. Which done, the Archbishop said again unto the Audience, Lo, here you hear how the Bishop of London is called for no such matter as he would perfwade you.

But the Commissioners, seeing his inordinate contumacy, denied him to speak any more, saying, that he used himself very disobediently, with more like words.

Notwithstanding, he still persisting in his unrevrent manner of dealing with the Commissioners, pulled out of his sleeve another Book, and then said unto the Archbishops My Lord of Canterbury, I have here a note out of your Books that you made touching the Blessed Sacrament, wherein you do affirm the verity of the Body and Blood of Christ to be in the Sacrament, and I have another Book also of yours of the contrary opinion; which is a marvelous matter.

KING To the which the Archbishop answered, that he made no Books contrary one to another, and that he would defend his Books, howbeit he thought the Bishop understood them not: For I promise you, quoth he, I will find a Boy of ten years old, that shall be more apt to understand that matter than you my Lord of London be.

Bonner commanded to answer to the Articles.

Thus after much multiplying of like words, the Commissioners, thinking not good to spend any more waste time with him, willed him to shew forth his answers unto the Articles objected the last day against him. Whereupon, he having them ready did read the same openly to them. Wherein, after many words of his former protestation recited, with a marvellous lamentation to see that one of his vocation, at the malicious denunciation of vile Hereticks, should be used after such strange sort, having nevertheless done the best he could to declare his obedience unto the Kings Majesty for the repressing and discouraging of Rebellion and Rebels, and also for the advancement of the verity of Christs true body and his presence in the Sacrament of the Altar, for which only the malicious denouncers with their complices had studied to molest and trouble him, he then cometh to answering the Articles and faith, that to the First, Second, and Fourth, he hath already in the former answers to the denunciation sufficiently answered, and therefore was not bound by Law to answer any further.

Bonner answered to the Articles.

As to the third, and fifth, he said, he began to write his Sermon, but being soon weary, he did only make certain notes thereof, without help of any other, saving that he shewed them to his Chaplains, requiring them to put him in remembrance thereof. Amongst the which, for the better setting forth of the Kings Majesties power and authority in his minority, he had collected as well out of Histories, as also out of the Scriptures, the names of divers young Kings, who notwithstanding the minority were faithfully and obediently honoured, and reputed for very true and lawful Kings: As Henry the Third, being but Nine years old, Edward the Third, being but thirteen years, Richard the Second, being but eleven years, Henry the Sixth, being not fully one year, Edward the Fifth being but eleven years, Henry the Eighth being but eighteen years of age. And out of the Old Testament, Osias and Achaz who were but sixteen years old, Solomon and Manasses being but twelve years, Josias, Joachims, and Jonah, being but eight years of age when they entered their Reigns. All which notes with many other he had purposed to declare, if they had come into his memory, as indeed they did not, because the same was disturbed, partly for lack of use of preaching, and partly by reason of a Bill that was delivered to him from the Kings Council, to declare the Victory then had against the Rebels in Norfolk and Devonshire, which being of some good length confounded his memory; and partly also for that his Book in his Sermon time fell away from him, wherein were divers of his notes which he had collected for that purpose: So that he could not remember what he would, but yet in general he perswaded the people to obedience to the Kings Majesty, whose minority was manifestly known to them and to all other.

Bonner executed his Obedience. A good Priest that had little memory for lack of preaching.

Bonner knew not the Rebels opinion if you will believe him.

Then as to the sixth he said he knew not the Rebels opinion, and therefore could not answer thereunto. And as for answer to the seventh, eighth, ninth, and eleventh Articles which touched his Pastoral Office, he said that notwithstanding his manifold and great troubles, as well by his own business and his Families sickness, as also by uncharitable informations made against him, yet he hath not failed to give order unto his Officers straightly to look unto such matters, and such as he hath known, which were very few or none, he caused to be punished according to the Laws. All which answers, with other written with his own hand hereunder follow.

The answers of Bonner unto the Articles objected to him by the Kings Commissioners the first time.

I Edmund Bishop of London, under protestation heretofore by me made, exhibited and repeated before you, which in all my sayings and doings I intend to have for repeated and rehearsed again to all lawful effects and purposes for my honest and necessary defense, with pro-testation also of the nullity and iniquity of your process I had made in this behalf, and likewise of the Generality, Incertainty, Obscurity, Contrariety, Repugnancy, Variety, Insufficiency, and Invalidity of the things alledged and deduced before you against me, as well in the Commission and denunciation in divers parts, as also touching the Articles and Interrogatories so miniluted unto me; Lamenting not a little, that one of my vocation, at the malicious denunciation of vile heretical and detestable persons, should be used after this strange sort, having done the best I could to declare mine obedience unto the Kings Most excellent Majesty, for the repressing and discouraging of Rebellion and rebellious persons, and for the advancement of the verity of Christs true body and his presence in the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar. For which only the malicious denouncers with their complices have studied to molest and trouble me; although colourably they would be seen to pretend other causes, especially the good and tranquility of this Realm, which our Lord God knoweth they care nothing for, but contrariwise do let and impeach the same, corrupting and infecting with thier poisoned and false Doctrine, and teaching the Kings Subjects in this Realm, to the great peril and danger thereof many ways; do answer unto certain pretended Articles and Interrogatories miniluted by you indeed unto me the said Bishop the thirteenth day of September, 1542, as followeth.

TO the first Article objected against me, beginning thus; First it is reported, &c. and ending thus, to observe and follow the same; I do say and for answer do refer me unto my former answers heretofore, that is to wit the thirteenth of September made and exhibited by me before you unto the said pretended denunciation, touching this matter; alledging wishal, that a report of things doth not absolutely prove, nor necessarily infer things to be in very deed true after such a sort, fashion, manner, and form, as sometimes they be reported and rehearsed.

After his long period well blowed up with much waste of words, at length he begins to shew himself to be an answerer to the Articles before objected.

To the second, beginning thus; Item, Whether that you, &c. and ending thus; as they were put unto you; I do answer and say, That this Article doth depend on the first Article next before, which after such sort, fashion, manner, and form as it is deduced, was justly by me, in my answer made unto the same, denied, and I therefore now not bounden by the Law efficones to make other answer thereunto.

Answer to the 2. Article.

To the third, being an Interrogatory, and beginning thus; Item, Whether, &c. And ending thus ye did preach; I do answer and say, That I began to write a piece of my Sermon, and being soon weary thereof, I did leave off, and did make only certain notes of my said Sermon, and put the same notes in writing of mine own hand, without help or Council of any other, and the same notes did shew unto my Chaplains Master Gilbert Bourn and Master Jo. Harpsfield, both before and also since my said Sermon, only desiring them to put me in remembrance of my said notes, and process to be made thereupon, and also to search out for me the names of such Kings as were in their minority when they began to Reign.

Answer to the 3. Article.

To the fourth Article beginning thus; Item, That ye to the 4 have not declared, &c. and ending thus, as it is in your Article; I do answer and say, That this Article doth depend upon the first and second Articles here before denied, deduced in such sort, manner, and form, as is expressed in the same, and moreover I say, that already answer is made hereunto by me, in my former answers made to the said pretended Denunciation.

To the fifth Article beginning thus; Item, That ye to the 5 have not, &c. and ending thus, declared it; I do answer and say, That this Article also doth depend upon the first and second Articles, and that answer is made thereunto by me already in my former answers made unto the said pretended denunciation. And moreover I do say, That for the better advancement and setting forth of the Kings Majesties Royal Power and authority even in his minority, and for the due obedience of his Majesties Subjects unto his Highness, even during the said minority, I had collected together as well out of Histories as also out of the Scripture of the old Testament, the names of divers Kings being in minority, who not withholding their said minority were faithfully, duly, and reverrently obeyed, honoured, served, taken and reputed for very true and lawful Kings, as Henry the Third, being but nine years old when he entred to reign and govern as King. Edward the Third, being but thirteen years of age. Richard the Second, being but eleven years old. Henry the Sixth, being not fully one year of age. Edward the Fifth, being but eleven years old. Henry the Eighth, being about eighteen years old; and so all these Kings beings in their minority as the Kings Majesty that now is, and yet having Authority and power Regal, as appertaineth; and in the old Testament, Othas and Achaz were very true Kings in their minority, being but sixteen years of age; Solomon and Manasse being but twelve years of age; Jofias and Jachim being but eight years of age, and Jos being but eight years old: All which things I say I had collected in notes, communicating the same with my said two Chaplains, and praying them to put me in remembrance, if in numbering of them, or in setting forth in my other notes at the time of my Sermon, I did fail, or have default of memory in any wise. And all these things I would have specially set forth in my said Sermon if they had come to my memory, as indeed they did not, partly for disturbance of my memory not accustomed to preach in that place, partly also by reason of a certain writing that was sent to me from the Kings Majesties Privy Council, being of good length, to declare unto the people touching the victory against the Rebels, specially in Norfolk, Devonshire, and Cornwall, confounding my memory in things which before I had set in good order, and partly also for the falling away of my Book in the time of my said Sermon, in which were contained divers of my said notes touching the Kings Majesties minority, as is aforesaid, having yet nevertheless otherwise in generality and speciality, perswaded the people to obedience, unto the Kings said Majesty, whose minority to them and all other is notoriously and manifestly known, and his Majesty, favouring of these late Rebels, faithfully, truly, and reverently obeyed of all the rest of his Subjects.

To the 6 Article. To the sixth, which beginneth, Whether ye will, &c. And ending thus, The opinion or no; I do answer and say, that not knowing certainly of which Rebels the Article meaneth, nor yet what their opinion is indeed, I ought not to be driven to make answer hereunto, nor yet can make good and perfect answer therein though I would.

To the 7 Article. To the seventh Article, beginning thus; Item, That ye know, &c. And ending thus, The Kings Majesties Book; I do answer and say, that albeit I have by the space of these five weeks last past and more, been in manner continually in business and trouble, as well in providing for my said Sermon, as otherwise, specially by reason of my Family, much vexed with sickness, to my great disquietness and charge, and also by reason that I have been so much troubled and cumbered by informations and complaints unjustly and uncharitably made against me, over and besides the having of divers and sundry persons, which daily resort and come unto me for their suits and business, both in matters of justice and otherwise, yet I have not omitted to send forth to my Archdeacons and other my Officers, to inquire and search diligently in this behalf, and to certify me accordingly, and yet I cannot hear certainly of any that have heard, been at, or celebrated Masses or Evenings in the Latine tongue, after the old rite and manner, except it be in the house of my Lady Maries Grace, or in the houses of the Embassadors, nor yet there nor in any of them, but by flying and not assured report, and without knowing the names and persons for to have heard, been at, or celebrate the same, and in this behalf how far I can and ought to proceed and after what sort, I do refer me unto the Statute made in that behalf.

To the 8 Article. The eighth Article beginning thus, Item, That ye have, &c. And ending thus, Punishment unto them; I do answer and say, that this Article doth depend of the next Article going before, and so consequently answer is already thereto made.

To the 9 Article. To the ninth Article beginning thus, Item, that ye know, &c. And ending thus, Nor see them punished; I do answer and say, that touching such as either have been denounced or detected for such criminous and culpable persons to me or my Officers, there hath been process already made before my said Officers, as it appeareth in my Register, and the Acts of my Court: And moreover I have given express commandment to my said Officers, to inquire and search for such offenders, and to certify me thereof, that I may proceed against them accordingly.

To the tenth Article beginning thus, Item, Ye were, &c. And ending thus, The Kings Majesties authority in his minority; I do answer and say, That as touching the time mentioned in the Article, and the Declaration to be made by Doctor Cox, I do not well remember either the same time, or yet the special points and substance of the said Doctor Coxes Declaration: Truth it is, I was at a Sermon made at Pauls Cross by the said Doctor Cox, where in he inveighed against my Lord of Winchester, and as far as I can now call to my remembrance, it was touching disobedience, wherewith my Lord of Winchester by the said Doctor Cox seemed to be charged, and for a Sermon also that my Lord of Winchester was seeming to have made before the Kings Majesty in the Court of Winchester.

To the 11 Article. To the eleventh Article being by it self delivered unto me the fourteenth of this present September, 1549, in the Night at my House of London beginning thus, Item, That the rites, &c. And ending thus, The misuses thereof: I do answer and say, that I have already given commandment to my Officers to make diligent search and inquire herein, and to certify accordingly, to the intent I may proceed therein as appertaineth, and would before this time my self have also inquired and proceeded, had I not been of all sides oppressed and pestered with multitude of other necessary business, as I have been, to my great disquietness and trouble.

The 5 Article infinitely altered of Bonner. When he had ended the reading of these answers, the Commissioners said unto him that he had in the same very obscurely answered unto the fifth Article rehearsed the thirteenth of September; wherefore they would him there expressly to answer by mouth, whether he had according to the Injunctions delivered unto him, declared the Article beginning thus, You shall also set forth in your Sermon that our authority, &c. Wherunto he again answered, that he had already made as full and sufficient an answer in writing, as he was bound to make by Law.

The Judges then replied, that the answers already made in that part were obscure and in sufficient, so that it appeared not certainly whether he had preached indeed according to the same Injunction or not; and therefore they efficaciously willed him, as before, directly to answer whether he had so accordingly preached or no, the Bishop still answering as before.

The Judges again demanded of him, whether he would otherwise answer or no? To the which he said, no, unless the Law did compel him. Then they asked him whether he thought the Law did compel him to answer more fully or no? He answered, no; adding further that he was not bound to make answer to such positions.

The Commissioners, then seeing his froward contumacy, told him plainly, that if he persisted thus in his frowardness, and would not otherwise answer, they would according to Law take him pro confesso, and ex abundanti receive witnesses against him, and therewithal did recite again to him six of the first and principal Articles, demanding his final answer thereto. Who said, as before, that he had already fully answered them by writing; but where they requested to have his notes, which he said he had made of his Sermon, they should have them if they would send for them. And whereas in his answer to the sixth Article he doubted what the opinion of the Rebels was, the Judges declared unto him that there opinion was, That the Kings Majesty, before his Grace came to the age of one and twenty years, had not so full authority to make Laws and Statutes, as when he came to opinions further years; and that his Subjects were not bound to obey the Laws and Statutes made in his young age. Wherunto the Bishop answered, that he was not of the opinion of the Rebels mentioned in that Article, as did well appear by his answers, as well unto the denunciation, as also unto the fifth Article objected against him.

Which ended, they, perceiving his scornful carelessness, presently did admit for witnesses, upon the Articles objected against him, Master John Cleeke, Henry Markham, John Joseph, John Douglas, and Richard Chambers, whom also they orenated with a corporal Oath upon the Holy Evangelists, truly to Answer and Depose upon the same Articles in the presence of the Bishop, who under his former protestation, like a wily Lawyer, protested of the nullity of the receiving, admitting, and swearing of those witnesses, with protestation also to object against the persons and sayings of the witnesses in time and place convenient; demanding also a competent and lawful time to minister Interrogatories against them, with a Copy of all the Acts of that day. Wherewith the Delegates were well pleased, and assigned him to Minister his Interrogatories against Master Cleeke on that present day, and against the rest of the next day before noon.

Interrogatories concerning the Eleventh Article.

18. Item, If they or any of them do say, That I do know or bear certainly of the diversity of the Rites of the common Service of the Church, now set forth, and of the Ministers and Parsons transgressing therein, let them and every of them, in virtue of their Oath, be examined whether there hath been any detection or denunciation made to me thereupon, and how they know or can prove that I have been culpable and negligent herein, & interrog. ut supra.

19. Item, Whether they or any of them have been spoken unto or solicited herein to refuse, and after what sort, by whom, when, and where, and what was their conference and communication therein, & interrog. ut supra.

20. Item, That they and every of them declare and shew the true and sufficient cause of their Testimony, in all and singular the Premises.

By which it is manifestly evident that the King of Bonner is a schismatic.

After this the Judges Delegate assigned the Bishop to appear again before them upon Wednesday then next ensuing, between the hours of seven and eight of the Clock before Noon, in the Hall of the Archbishops Mannor of Lambeth, there to shew the cause why he should not be declared, pro confesso, upon all the Articles whereunto he had not then fully answered, and to see further process done in the matter; and so (he still protesting of the nullity and invalidity of all their proceedings) they did for that present depart.

The Commissioners certify the King of Bonner's demeanor.

In this mean while the Commissioners certified the Kings Majesty and his Council, of the Bishops demeanor towards them, and what objections he had made against their proceedings, making doubts and ambiguities, whether by the tenor of his Majesties Commission, the Commissioners might proceed not only at the denunciation, but also at their meer Office; and also whether they might as well determine or hear the cause. Whereupon his Majesty by advice aforesaid, for the better understanding thereof, did the seventeenth of September send unto the Commissioners a full and perfect declaration and interpretation of his Will and Pleasure in the foresaid Commission, giving them hereby full Authority to proceed at their own discretions, as appeareth more at large by the tenor thereof ensuing:

{RING}
{Edw. 6}

A certain Declaration or Interpretation of the King, touching certain points and doubts in his former Commission, with License given to the Commissioners, as well to determine as to hear, in the Case of Bonner.

Edward the Sixth by the Grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England, and also of Ireland, in Earth the Supreme head: To the most reverend Father in God, Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of England, the right reverend Father in God Nicholas Bishop of Rochester our trusty and right well-beloved Counsellors, Sir William Petet, and Sir Thomas Smith, Knights, our two principal Secretaries, and William May Doctor of Law Civil and Dean of Pauls, greeting: Where we of late, by the advice of our most entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerset, Governor of our Person, and Protector of our Realm, Dominions, and Subjests, and the rest of our Privy Council, have addressed unto you, five four, or three of you, our Letters Patents of Commission, bearing Date at Westminster the Eighth day of September, in the Third year of our Reigne, willing you by force thereof to hear the matters and cause of contempt therein expressed, and calling before you as well the denouncers thereof, as also the right reverend Father in God Edmund Bishop of London, against whom such Denunciation is made, as in our said Letters of Commission more at large doth appear, we be now credibly informed, that upon the said Commission divers doubts and ambiguities have and may rise.

As whether you by the tenor of the said Commission may proceed not only at the denunciation, but also of meer office.

And also whether ye may as well determine as hear the said cause.

For further declaration whereof we do now interpret Ex Anno 1549 and declare, That our full Mind and Pleasure, by the advice aforesaid, was by our Commission, and now is, that you should proceed as well by meer Office, as also by the way of Denunciation, and either of them, or by any other ways or means at your discretions, whereby the truth and merits of the cause may be most speedily and best known, and that ye might and may as well finally determine as hear the said matters in all your orders and doings, cutting away all vain and superfluous delays, and having respect to the only truth of the matter. And this our Declaration we send unto you of our full knowledge and meer motion, by the advice aforesaid, supplying all defaults, ceremony, and point of the Law, which hath, shall, or may arise of your doings by reason of any default of words in our said former Commission or any part thereof, any Law, Statute, or Act to the contrary notwithstanding. And therefore we Will and Command you to proceed in the said matters accordingly, as well to our foresaid Commission as this our Declaration, and so sail ye not. In Witness whereof we have made these our Letters Patents.

At Hampton-Court the seventeenth day of September.

The Fourth Session against Bonner, Bishop of London, before the Kings Commissioners, in the great Hall at Lambeth, the Eighth of September.

After this Declaration being sent down and received from the King, the Bishop of London, (according to the Commissioners Assignment the Monday before) appeared again before them upon Wednesday the Eighth of September, in the great Hall at Lambeth. Where under his wonted profection, first he declared, That although he had already sufficiently answered all things, yet he ought further to satisfy the term Assigned unto him, to shew not to be declared cause why he ought not to be declared, pro confesso, upon pro confesso, the

The Fourth Session against Bonner, before the Kings Commissioners, in the great Hall at Lambeth, the Eighth of September.

{ KING }
{ Edm. 6 } the Articles theretofore ministered against him, and to the which he had not fully answered, he had then a matter in writing to exhibit unto them, why he ought not so to be declared, which he read there openly. Wherein first under his accustomed unreverent terms of pretended, unjust, and unlawful Process and Assignation, he said he was not bound by the Law (for good and reasonable causes) to obey the same, especially their Assignation.

Caufes alleged of Bonner,
why he ought not to obey the Commissioners Af-
signation. And first, for that the same was openly pronounced by Sir Thomas Smith, one of the pretended Commissioners, without the consent of his pretended Collegues; or at the least he as a Commissioner did prescribe the Actuary what to write, which he ought not to have done, because by Law he ought not to have intermeddled therein, for that his Collegues did the first day begin to sit as Judges against him the Bishop, without the presence of the said Sir Thomas Smith.

The Second
Cause. And Secondly, because his answers, as well unto the pretended Denunciation, as also to all the Articles theretofore objected against him, were as full and sufficient, as the Law required (or at leastwise there was nothing good in Law apparent to the contrary) and therefore he was not enforced by Law further to answer thereto without further allegation.

The Third
Cause. And because also that all their proceedings thereto were so extraordinarily done, that they had confounded all manner of Lawfull Process, sometimes proceeding ad denuncian-dam, sometimes ex officio mero, and sometimes ex officio missa, contrary unto the Kings Ecclesiastical Laws, and contrary also unto their Commission in that behalf.

The Fourth
Cause. And likewise because divers of the Articles pretended were superfluous and impertinent, not revealing, though they were proved, containing in them untruth and falsity, some obscure and uncertain, some depending upon other Articles, either denied or at the least qualified, some captious and deceitful to bring the answer into a snare, and some also being Articles of the Law, in such sort as by the Ecclesiastical Laws of this Realm the Kings Subjects were not bound to make answer thereto.

The Popes
Lave. And lastly, because that Sir Thomas Smith Secretary to the Kings Majesty, when that the Bishop was last with the Council in the Council Chamber at White-Hall, after the departure of the Lord Protector and the rest of the Council, did himself alone (without any other) write certain Articles, or Injunctions (amongst the which was that of the Kings Authority in his minority) and afterward did Copy the same at the Table within the said Council Chamber, and so himself did deliver them unto him. By reason whereof that is not true, which in the Commission, Denunciation and Articles was deduced and objected against him.

The intolerable contempt and unreverent behaviour of Bonner toward and openly reproved. When these fond and frivolous objections were thus read, the Archbishop feeling his inordinate and intolerable contempt towards them, charged him very sharply, saying, My Lord of London, if I had sitten here only as Archbishop of Canterbury, it had been your part to have used your self more lowly, obediently and reverently towards me than you have; but seeing that I with my Collegues sit here now as Delegates from the Kings Majesty, I must tell you plain, you have behaved your self too much inordinately. For at every time that we have sitten in Commission, you have used such unseemly fashions, without all reverence and obedience, giving taunts and checks as well unto us, with divers of the Servants and Chaplains, as also unto certain of the ancientest that be here, calling them Fools and Daws, with such like, as that you have given to the multitude an intolerable example of disobedience. And I assure you my Lord, there is you and one other Bishop whom I could name, that have used your selves so contemptuously and disobediently, as the like I think hath not before been heard of or seen; whereby you have done much harm.

The words of the Archbishop to Bonner. At which words the great Bishop (a Beast, a Man might justly term him) said comrally to the Archbishop, You shew your self to be a meet Judge.

Bonner's
careless answer to the Archbishop.
The Archbishop. The Archbishop then proceeding, laid to his charge how indifferently the last day in the Chappel he had called all the people Woodcocks.

Whereunto he answered, That the last Session William Latimer, one of the denouncers, being there present, had practised with the Audience, that when he lifted up his hand to them, they should (and did as it were by a token given them) say as he said, and do as he did; as one time upon the lifting up of his hand, they cried, Nay, nay; and at another time, Yea, yea, and laughed they could not tell wherewith, with such like fashions.

Unto which words Latimer, feeling his vain suspicion, replied saying, That he lifted not up his Hand at any time but only to cause them to hold their peace.

Then Secretary Smith said to the Bishop, That in all his Writings and Answers that he had hitherto laid in, he would not once acknowledge them as the Kings Commissioners, but used always protestations with divers in-

Indeed (said he) such terms the Proctors of Churches use, to delay matters for their Clients, when they will not have the truth known: But you my Lord to use us, the Kings Majesties Commis-

For when Letters or Pardons were brought them from the King and his Council, they would not credit them, but said they were none of the Kings or his Councils, but Gentlemens doings, and made under a Bush, with such like terms. But now my Lord, because hitherto we cannot make you confess whether, in your Sermon that you Preached, ye omitted the Article touching the Kings Majesties Authority in his tender age or not, but still have said that ye will not otherwise answer then ye have done, and that ye have already sufficiently answered (with many such delays) so as we can by no means induce you to confess plainly what you did yea or nay; therefore I say, to the intent we may come to the truth, we have dilated the matter more at large, and have drawn out other Articles wherewith you shall be Sworn, and then I trust you will dally with us no more as you have done. For although ye make your Answers in writing, yet you shall be examined by us and make your Answers by mouth to the same Articles, or else you shall do worse. Indeed I do not (as I said) discommend your protestations and terms of Law, if it were in a young Proctor that would help his Clients Cause; but in you it may not be suffered so to use the Kings Commissioners.

Then did the Delegates minister unto him certain new Articles and Injunctions, and did there operate him with a corporal Oath in form of Law to make a full and true answer thereto. The Bishop notwithstanding still (according to his wonted manner) under his former protestation protested of the nullity and invalidity of these Articles, Injunctions, and Process, desiring also a Copy thereof, with a competent time to answer thereto. To whom the Judges Decreed a Copy, commanding him to come to his Examination to the Archbishop the next day at Eight of the Clock before Noon.

Then the Commissioners did receive for witness, upon these new Articles now ministered unto the Bishop, Sir John Mason, Sir Thomas Chalenor, Knights, Master William Cecil, Armigel Wade, and William Hanning, Clerks to the Kings Majesties Council, whom they operated with a corporal Oath in the presence of the Bishop, who still protesting of the nullity of their receiving and swearing, objected against them and their sayings; and therewith, repeating his Interrogatories already ministered, said he had more to minister by to morrow at Eight of the Clock.

The same day and time likewise the Bishop exhibited unto the Commissioners an Information, or rather Cavillation against William Latimer, for that he, notwithstanding that he had in all his talk pretended the great tranquillity of this Realm, which was greatly impeached and hindered when that any the Kings Subjects should think that his Majesty hath not as full Power and Authority Royal in his minority, as when his Majesty came to perfect age, or should think that his Subjects were not bound bound to obey the same; yet hath of late there in open Audience reported, That he hath heard with his Ears divers persons unreverently speak of the Kings Majesty, saying, Truth, the King is but a Babe or Child, what Laws can he make? Or what can he do in his minority? Let him have a Toffe and Butter, or Bread and Milk, and that is meet for him than to make Laws and Statutes, or to bind us to obey them; we are not bound to obey till he be past his minority, and come to his full and perfect Age; with the hearing of which words the Bishop also charged the Commissioners, and that because Laisher, at the recital of the same in their presence, was neither by them controlled, nor yet caused to bring forth the same persons, but was let pass in silence, saying that he the said Bishop did speak against him in that behalf, saying, That he would detect him, because that, as it appeared, he had of long time concealed the words and not opened the same in such place and to such persons as he ought to have done, but had kept the persons and sayings of them secret, either not taking the matter to be of such importance as he pretended, or else thereby unfaithfully behaving himself towards his Prince, and therefore was worthy with his aids, favourers, and counsellors to be punished.

William Laisher impeached of treason for concealing of treason.

A new term assigned to Bonner to appear.

These vain Cavillations ended, the Commissioners for that day finished their Session, assigning the Bishop to appear in that same place again upon Monday then next following, between the hours of Six and Nine, in the Forenoon, then and there to shew a final cause why he should not be declared pro confesso. And so delivering him a Copy of the Articles, they departed; the Contents whereof ensue:

Articles and Positions given by the Kings Commissioners to the Bishop of London, to be Answered by him jointly and severally in every point the second time.

Articles against Bonner registered the second time.

1. That ye were sent for to the Lord Protector's Grace, and the rest of the Council, and came thither into the Court at Westminster the tenth of August, or some other day of the same month.

2. Item, That at the same time the Lord Protector and divers other of the Kings Majesties Privy Council sitting in Council, ye were called in, and there the said Lord Protector did on the Kings Majesties behalf declare unto you divers faults and abuses the which were found in you, and gave you strict charge to amend them, adding threatening that else you should be otherwise looked unto.

3. Item, That the said Lord Protector's Grace did declare unto you, for better admonition and amendment of you, that you should have from the Kings Majesty, by his advice and the rest of the Privy Council, certain Articles and Injunctions, to observe and follow, given you in writing.

4. Item, That there and then the said Lord Protector commanded Sir Thomas Smith Knight, Secretary to the Kings Majesty, to read a certain Paper Book of Injunctions and Articles unto you, the said Secretary standing at the Council-Tables-end, and you standing by and hearing the same.

5. Item, That the said Lord Protector there and then willed certain things in the said Book of Injunctions to be reformed, as where ye were appointed to preach sooner, at your request it was appointed unto you to preach the Sunday three weeks after the Date of the said writing.

6. Item, That in the said Articles the Lord Protector's Grace found fault, because an Article or Commandment unto you set forth and declared of the Kings Majesties Authority now in his young age, and of his Laws and Statutes in the same time, was omitted, and therefore either immediately before you came into the Council-Chamber, or you being present and standing by, commanded the said Secretary Smith to put in writing and annex it to the rest of the Articles.

7. Item, That the said Secretary Smith, then and there did, immediately upon commandment, write into the said Book or Paper, wherein the rest of the Articles were written, the said Article, viz. you shall also set forth in your Sermon, that the Authority of our Royal power is (as truth it is) of no less authority and force in this our young age, than was of any of our predecessors, though the same were much elder, as may appear by example of Josiah and other young Kings in the Scripture, and therefore all our Subjects to be no less bound to the obedience of our Precepts, Laws, and Statutes, than if we were of thirty or forty years of age.

8. Item, That the Lord Protector did so deliver you the Book or Paper, willing first the said Secretary Smith to amend all things as he had appointed.

9. Item, That ye then and there did promise to the Lord Protector's Grace, that ye would observe and fulfil all in the said Injunctions and Articles contained.

10. Item, That all things in the said Book, put in and mentioned by the said Secretary Smith, and the same so read to you by him, and you first agreeing that all that was by him so written was by the Lord Protector's appointment, the said Book was so delivered unto you then and there by the said Secretary Smith in the Council-Chamber.

11. Item, That you have the said Book in your possession, or else know where it is, the true Copy whereof in effect is annexed to these Articles.

12. Item, That ye were commanded in the same Injunctions to preach the Sunday three weeks after the delivery thereof at Pauls, and there to intreat upon certain Articles, as is specified in the said Book of Injunctions, and especially the said Article, beginning, Ye shall also set forth, and ending, Thirty or forty years of age.

13. Item, That for the accomplishment of part of the said Injunctions and Commandment, you did preach the first day of September last past at Pauls's-Cross.

14. Item, That at the said Sermon, contrary to your Injunctions, ye omitted and left out the said Article, beginning, Ye shall also set forth in your Sermon, &c. and ending, Thirty or forty years of age.

15. Ye shall also answer whether ye think and believe that the Kings Majesties subjects be bound to obey as well the Laws, Statutes, Proclamations, and other Ordinances made now in this young age of the Kings Majesty, as the Laws, Statutes, Proclamations, and Ordinances made by his Highness's progenitors.

These Articles being thus ministered to the said Bishop of London, the next day being Thursday and the Nineteenth of September, the fore-named Commissioners fate in the Archbishops Chamber of presence at Lambeth, attending the coming of the Bishop of London. Before whom there appear Robert Johnson the Bishops Register, and there did declare unto the Commissioners, that the Bishop his Master could not at that time personally appear before them without great danger of his bodily health, because that he feared to fall into a Fever by reason of a cold that he had taken by too much over-watching himself the last Night before, whereby he was compelled to keep his Bed: nevertheless, if he could without danger of his bodily health, he would appear before them the same day at Afternoon. This excuse the Judges were content to take in good part. Yet said Master Secretary Smith, That if he were sick indeed, the excuse was reasonable, and to be allowed, but (quoth he) I promise you, my Lord hath so dallied with us, and used hitherto such delays, that we may mistrust that this is but a feigned excuse: Howbeit upon your faithful Declaration we are content to tarry until one of the Clock at Afternoon, and so they did, willing Mr. Johnson to signify then unto them whether the Bishop could appear or not.

At which hour Robert Johnson and Rich Rogers, Gentlemen of the Bishops Chamber appeared again before the Commissioners, declaring that (for the causes aforesaid) their Master could not appear at that time neither. Whereupon Master Secretary Smith said unto them, My Lord of London your Master hath used us very homely, and fought delays hitherto, and now perhaps, perceiving these last Articles to touch the quick, and therefore loth to come to his Answer, he feigneth himself sick. But because he shall not so deceive us any more, we will send the Knight Marshal unto him, willing him if he be sick indeed to let him alone, for that is a reasonable excuse; but if he be not sick, then to bring him forth-

KING'S Edw. 6.

Bonner for fear of a Fever either could not or durst not appear.

Bonner pretended again his Fever.

Bonner excuse of sickness not well taken of the Commissioners.

KING with to us; for I promise you he shall not use us as he hath done, we will not take it at his hands: and therefore Master Johnson, said he, you do the part of a truly servant as becometh you, but it is also your part to shew my Lord his stubborn heart and disobedience, which doth him more harm than he is aware of. What, thinketh he to stand with a King in his own Realm? Is this the part of a subject? Nay, I ween we shall have a new Thomas Becket. Let him take heed, for if he play these parts he may fortune to be made, shorter by the head. He may appeal if he think good; but whether? To the Bishop of Rome? So he may help himself forwards. I say he cannot appeal but to the same King who hath made us his Judges, and to the Bench of his Council, and how they will take this matter when they hear of it, I doubt not. He would make Men believe that he were called before us for preaching his Opinion of the Sacrament, wherein ABNO I assure you he did both fully and naughtily, yea and lewdly, and more than became him, and more than he had in commandment to do, for he was not willed to speak of that matter, and perhaps he may hear more of that hereafter; but yet we will lay no such thing to his charge, and therefore we will not have him to delay us as he doth. Which ended, the Delegates notwithstanding Decreed to tarry again for him until two of the Clock at Afternoon the next day, being Friday, and the twentieth of September.

The Fifth Action or Process the twentieth of September, against Bonner Bishop of London, before the Kings Commissioners.

AT which day and time the Bishop appeared himself personally before them in the same Chamber of Presence; where first he did exhibit his Answers unto the last Articles ministred unto him the Eighteenth of September: the Contents whereof hereunder follow:

The Answer of the said Bishop of London made unto the Articles ministred unto him the Second time.

THE Answers of me Edmund Bishop of London, under mine accufed Profection given unto the Articles of late ministred and exhibited against me here in this Court, with special profection also, that I do not intend in any wise to make Answer to any of the said Articles, otherwise than the Law of this Realm doth bind me to do, nor to speak or say contrary to any thing that in my former Answers I have said or done; and that if it so chance me to do, it is not nor shall not be with my good will or full consent, and that so soon as I shall perceive it, I intend to revoke it, and so now as then, and then as now, do so in that case revoke, to all honest and lawful purposes.

To the First Article I do answer and say, that there was a Messenger, whose name I know not, that came unto me to Fulham, as I now remember, but I do not remember the day thereof, and he said that my Lord Protector's Grace required me to come by and by to speak with him. And thereupon, having made the said Messenger to break his fast, I repaired to the Court at Westminster, but not upon the Tenth day of August, but some other day of the said month.

To the Second Article I do say, That it is obscure, incertain, and over general, especially in those words at the same time, which may be referred to the Tenth of August, and then answer already is made thereunto, and it may be referred to some other day of the said month of August, either before the Tenth of August, or after. And because it remaineth undeclared, I am not bound in Law to answer unto it, neither yet to these words and sentences in the said Article, to wit, Then, and There, for they without declaration are incertain, obscure, and general, and I, before the specification and declaration thereof, not bound herein to make an answer, specially having already made full and sufficient answer in this matter, according to the Commission, as I do take it, and according unto the Law; which also willeth, That if a certain answer be looked for, the Petition and Article must before be certain.

To the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Articles, he answereth all after one manner and sort, as thus, That it doth depend on the Articles, to which for causes aforesaid, he saith, he is not bound in Law to make answer, especially having already made.

Saving that in the Sixth he addeth thereunto, That he at no time heard the Lord Protector find fault, nor commanded, as is deduced in the said Article, so far as he doth find.

Also saving the Seventh Article, where he addeth nevertheless confessing and acknowledging, with heart and mouth, the Kings Majesties Authority and Regal Power and Minority, as well and full as in his Majority.

Also saving the Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Articles, where he addeth, As they be deduced they are not true, as appeareth in conferring one with another.

To the Twelfth and Fourteenth Articles, he addeth, As they be deduced they are not true; Confessing nevertheless the Kings Majesties Authority and Power Regal, as before is exprest.

To the Fifteenth Article he answereth and saith, That it is a Position in Law; and that yet both now and heretofore he hath made answer thereunto in effect and substance, as appeareth in his former answers, and so shall do always according to the Law and his bounden duty, acknowledging, as he hath already done, the Kings Majesties Regal Power in his Minority to be no less than in his Majority, and the subjects bound to obey unto his Grace, his Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, and his said Authority, as well in his Minority as in his Majority, not allowing, but expressly condemning the Opinion of all Rebels holding the contrary.

After this, perceiving that Master Secretary Smith was somewhat more quick with him than others of the Commissioners, and that he would not suffer him any longer to dally out the matter with his vain quiddities and subtilties in Law, but ever earnestly urged him to go directly to his matter, and therewithal sometimes sharply rebuking him for his evil and stubborn behaviour towards them; he to deface his Authority (as he thought) did also then exhibit in writing a Reculation of the Secretaries Judgment against him. The form and manner whereof, as he exhibited it unto the Judges, I thought here also to exhibit unto the Reader as hereunder followeth:

The Reculation of the Judgment of Sir Thomas Smith, made by the Bishop of London, the first time.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Forasmuch as equity, natural reason, and all good Laws do require that Judges shall be of that Integrity, Wisdom, Circumspection, Learning, and Indifferency, that exercising the office and room of a Judge, they may and shall do it without hatred, malice, or grudge against any person convented or called before them, uprightly, sincerely, and duly executing and doing their office unto them in any wise committed; and forasmuch also as all Judgments and Processes ought to have their due course, and proceed without suspicion of corruption in any wise, and finally forasmuch as very dangerous it is to appear and make defence before an incompetent Judge, who commonly and accustomedly of private and unlawful corrupt affection to the one side, and for malice, hatred and envy born against the other side, rather serveth his carnal, corrupt, and wilful appetite, than any thing else is moved to obedience and keeping of good Order, Law, or Reason, touching him that is convented and compelled to make answer against his will: Therefore Edmund Bishop of London, having perceived and felt by all the sayings, proceedings, and doings of you Sir Thomas Smith, Knight, one of the two principal Secretaries to the Kings Majesty, in this matter attempted and moved against me, that ye have been, and yet continually are a notorious and manifest enemy of me the said Edmund, and much offended that I should in any wise alledge and say, or use any such things for my most defence, as the Law giveth me licence and liberty to do, yea, bearing most favourably and effectually my denunciations and enemies

He saith he is not bound in Law to make answer

Answer to the Twelfth and Fourteenth Articles

Bonner is somewhat more quick with him than others of the Commissioners

He is moved to obedience and keeping of good Order, Law, or Reason

Bonner is somewhat more quick with him than others of the Commissioners with both ears in any thing that they shall alledge, purpose, attempt, or do against me, though their persons in Law are not in any wise to be heard or admitted, ne yet their sayings true, and not hearing me so much as with one Ear in my Lawfull sayings and doings in this behalf; but contrariwise opening your mouth at large, ye have sundry times against good Wisdom and Reason outraged in words and deeds against me the said Edmund, saying among other words, That I did as Thieves, Murderers, and Traitors are wont to do, being my self as ye unwisely did say, inward indeed culpable, and yet outward otherwise unable to defend the matter against me, but only by taking exceptions, and making frivolous allegations against my Judges and Commissioners, and that I have been and am as surdy, wilful, and disobedient, as may be in your Judgment and Opinion, maintaining and upholding the Rebels and their Opinions, and that I shall answer by mouth, or else smart and do worse, or else ye will send me to the Tower, there to sit and be joynted with Ket and Humphry Arundel the Rebels; over and besides divers other threatenings and comminatory words by you pronounced and uttered unseemly, and far unmeet to proceed out of the mouth of you that are in such room and place as ye be in.

And moreover, increasing your malice, evil will and grudge born against me, ye have amongst other things unwisely surmised, written, alledged, and said, That a certain Book of Articles and Injunctions by the Lord Protectors Grace in the full Council after a certain prescribed fashion and form in the Denunciation, Commission, and Articles, which (de facto) were induced, brought in and objected against me, was delivered unto me; and moreover of an evil will and ungodly intent and purpose, contrary to the truth, ye have withdrawn, added, altered, and qualified divers things in the same, otherwise than they were spoken and done, and yet ye are not ashamed to alledge, write, and say, that all is true, and one consonant and agreeable in all points with the other, where indeed it is not so: And yet have further (de facto) against the Law, and against the Commission to you directed, and against my just and lawful allegations and sayings, proceeded unlawfully and unjustly against me, attempting many things against me unlawfully and unjustly, as appeareth in the acts of this matter, to the which I do refer me so far forth as they make for me, and be expedient by me and for me to be alledged, and referred unto your self also unlawfully and unjustly (de facto) with your Colleague, the which without you had begun the said matters, proceeding where by the Law ye ought not to have done indeed, but abstained therefrom, as heretofore sundry times I have alledged, appearing in the acts of this Court; do upon these just and reasonable causes, according to the order of the Kings Majesties Ecclesiastical Law, refuse, decline, and recuse you the said Sir Thomas Smith, as an uncompleint, unmeet, and suspect Judge, against me in this behalf, and decline your pretended Jurisdiction in this matter for causes aforesaid, desiring nothing but Justice, and offering my self prompt and ready to prove them as far as I am bound, and according to the order of the Kings Majesties Ecclesiastical Law of this Realm in this behalf, as time, place, and otherwise shall require.

This Recusation ended, the Secretary told him plain, That notwithstanding he would proceed in his Commission, and would be still his Judge until he were otherwise inhibited; and said unto him further, My Lord, whereas you say in your Recusation, that I said, That you did like Thieves, Murderers, and Traitors, indeed I said it, and may and will so say again, since we perceive it by your doings.

Whereunto the Bishop in a great and stout rage replied, saying, Well Sir, because you lit here by virtue of the Kings Commission, and for that ye be Secretary to his Majesty, and also one of his Highness Council, I must and do honour and reverence you; but as you be but Sir Thomas Smith, and say as ye have said, That I do like Thieves, Murderers, and Traitors, I say ye lie upon me, and in that case I defie you; and do what ye can to me, I fear you not, and therefore, quod facis, fac citius.

Whereat the Archbishop with the other Commissioners said unto him, That for such his unreverent behaviour he was worthy Imprisonment.

Then the Bishop, in more mad fury than before, said again unto him, A Gods Name ye may do de facto, send me whether you will, and I must obey you, and so will, except ye send me to the Devil, for thither I will not go for you. Three things I have (to wit) a small portion of Goods, a poor Carcase, and mine own Soul: the two first ye may take (though unprofitably) to you, but as for my Soul ye get not, Quia anima mea in manibus meis semper.

Well, said the Secretary then, ye shall know that there is a King.

Yea Sir, (saith the Bishop) but that is not you, neither, I am sure, will you take it upon you.

No Sir, said again the Secretary, but we will make you know who it is; and with that the Commissioners commanded the Bishop and all the rest to depart the Chamber, until they called for him again.

Now in the mean while that the Commissioners were in consultation, the Bishop with Gilbert Beorn his Chaplain, Robert Warrington his Commiffary, and Robert Johnson his Register, were tarrying in a quadrant void place before the Door of the same Chamber. Where the Bishop leaning on a Cupboard, and seeing his Chaplains very sad, said unto them in effect as followeth: Sirs, what mean you? Why flew you your selves to be sad and heavy in mind, as appeareth to me by your outward gestures and countenances? I would wish you, and I require you to be as merry as I am (saying therewith his hand upon his Brest) for afore God I am not sad nor heavy, but merry and of good comfort, and am right glad and joyful of this my trouble, which is for Gods cause, and it grieveth me nothing at all.

But the great matter that grieveth me and pierceth my heart, is, for that this Hooper and such other vile Heretics and Beasts be suffered and licensed to preach at Pauls Crofs, and in other places within my Diocess and Cure, most detestably preaching and railing at the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and denying the verity and presence of Christ his true Body and Blood to be there, and so infect and betray my Flock. But I say it is there in very deed, and in that Opinion I will live and die, and am ready to suffer death for the same. Wherefore, ye being Christian men, I do require you and also charge and command you in the Name of God, and on his behalf, as ye will answer him for the contrary, that ye go to the Mayor of London, and to his Brethren the Aldermen, praying and also requiring them earnestly in Gods Name and mine, and for mine own discharge on that behalf, that from henceforth, when any such detestable and abominable Preaches (and especially those which hold opinion against the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar) do come to preach unto them, they forthwith depart out of their presence, and do not hear them, lest that they tarrying with such Preachers, should not only hurt themselves in receiving their poisoned Doctrine, but also give a visage to the encouragement of others, which thereby might take an occasion to think and believe that their erroneous and damnable Doctrine is true and good: and this efforts I require and command you to do.

And then turning himself about, and beholding two of the Archbishops Gentlemen, which in the same place kept the Chamber-door where the Commissioners were in consultation, and perceiving that they had heard all his talk, he spake unto them also and said, And Sirs, ye be my Lord of Canterburie Gentlemen, I know ye very well; and therefore I also require and charge you in Gods behalf, and in his Name, that ye do the like for your parts in places where you shall chance to see and hear such corrupt and erroneous Preachers, and also advertise my Lord your Master of the same, and of these my sayings that I have now spoken here before you, as ye are Christian men, and shall answer before God for the contrary.

With this the Commissioners called for the Bishop again, who did read unto them an Instrument, containing a Provocation to the King, which he made in manner and form here following:

{ KING }
{ Edw. 6 }

The first Appellation intimated by Edmund Bonner Bishop of London.

Bonner appeals to the King because he could not to the Pope.

IN the Name of God, Amen. It shall appear to all men by this publick instrument that An. Dom. 1549, the twentieth day of September, the third year of the reign of our Most high and renowned Prince Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and in earth the supreme head of the Church of England and Ireland, in a Chamber within the Palace of the said Bishop, situated in London, and in the presence of me the publick Notary, and of the Witnesses hereafter named, the foresaid Bishop did personally appear, and there did shew forth in writing a certain protestation and appellation, the tenor whereof is such.

IN the Name of God, Amen. I Edmund Bishop of London, say, alledge, and propound before you being a publick Notary, and these credible Witnesses here present, that although I the foresaid Edmund have attained the Bishoprick aforesaid by the benevolence of the famous Prince of memory King Henry the eighth, and was lawfully elected and translated to the same, with his rites and appurtenances, have of a long time possessed peaceably and quietly the same, and presently do possess, being taken as Bishop and lawful possessor of the said Bishoprick, and am lawfully called, taken, and reputed notoriously and publicly, and moreover do keep residence and hospitality on the same, according to the order, state, person, and dignity, and as the revenues of the same would permit, and have exercised and done all things appertaining to my pastoral Office, as the Law do require, as hereafter I trust by Gods grace to do and observe, a man of good name and fame, neither suspended, excommunicate, nor enterdicted, neither convicted of any notable crime or fact, always obeying readily the commandment of the Church, and other my superiours in all lawful causes, nevertheless fearing upon certain probable causes, likely conjectures, threatnings, and assertions of certain injurious men my enemies, or at the least, such as little favour me, that great damage may come to me hereafter about the premises or part of them; and lest any man by any authority, commandment, denunciation, inquisition, office, or at the request of any person or persons, may attempt prejudice or hurt to me or my said dignity, either by my excommunication, interdiction, sequestration, spoyling, vexing and perturbing by any manner of means, do appeal unto the most high and mighty Prince our Sovereign Lord Edward the sixth by the grace of God, King of England, France, &c. and in these my writings do provoke and appeal to his regal Majesty. I do also require the Apostles, so much as in this case they are to be required, the first, second, and third time, earnestly, more earnestly, and most earnestly of all, that there may be given to me the protection, tuition, and defence of my foresaid most dread Sovereign Lord, for the safeguard of me, my dignity and title, and possession in the premises, and to all that will cleave to me in this behalf. I do also protest, that I will be contented to correct, reform, and amend this my present protestation, and to the same to add, to take away, and to bring the same into the best form and state that may be devised, by the Council of learned men, or as the case shall require, and the same to intimate according to time and place, and the order of the Law, and still shall require.

Apostles is a term of Canon Law, and signifies as much as letters or verbal or dispositive. { Anno 1549 }

Upon all the which things the foresaid Edmund Bishop of London did require the publick Notary hereunder written to make unto him, and the Witnesses hereafter named, one, two, or more copies of this protestation.

These things were done the year, day, and time above written, there being present Gilbert Bourn Bachelor of Divinity, John Harpsfield and Robert Colen, Masters of Art, John Wakeling and Richard Rogers learned men, being of the Diocess of Worcester, Westminster, Coventry, Litchfield, and Gloucester, and specially requested to be Witnesses of the same. And I Francis Harward of the Diocess of Worcester and publick Notary by the Kings regal Authority, forasmuch as I was present when the foresaid protestation, appellation, and other the premises were done, the year of our Lord, the year of the Reign of the King, the day of the month and place aforesaid, the witnesses above named being present, and forasmuch as I did in all the same, therefore to this present publick instrument, written faithfully with mine own hand, I have put to my mark, being specially requested unto the same.

Which thing after he had read, he did under his protestation first intimate unto the Archbishop, the Bishop of Rochester, and Doctor May, and then protesting also not to recede from his reculation, did likewise intimate the same unto Master Secretary Smith, requiring the Register to make an Instrument as well thereupon, as also upon his reculation, with Witnesses to testify the same.

Then the Delegates did again proceed to the examination of the last answers, and finding the same imperfect, they demanded of him (according to the first Article) what special day of August he was sent for by the Lord Protector? To whom he obediately answered, that he was not bound to make other answer than he had already made, unless they did put their Articles more certain: neither would he otherwise answer as long as Master Secretary Smith was there present, whom he had before refused, and therefore would not recede from his reculation.

The Secretary, seeing him so wilful and perverse, said sharply unto him, My Lord, come off and make a full and perfect answer unto these Articles, or else we will take other order with you to your pain.

In faith Sir, then said the Bishop again, I thought ye had been learned, but now before God I perceive well that either ye be not learned indeed, or else ye have forgotten it: for I have so often answered lawfully and sufficiently, and have so oft shewed causes sufficient and reasonable, why thereunto I ought not by law to be compelled (you shewing nothing to the contrary but sensuality and will) that I must needs judge that you are too ignorant herein.

Well, said M. Secretary, ye will not then otherwise answer?

No, said the Bishop, except the Law do compel me. Then said the Secretary, call for the Knight Marthal, that he may be had to Ward.

With that all the rest of the Commissioners charged the Bishop, that he had at that time findry ways very outrageous and irreverently behaved himself towards them sitting on the Kings Majesties Commission, and especially towards Sir Thomas Smith his Graces Secretary, and therefore, and for divers other contumelious words which he had spoken, they declared they would commit him to the Marthalley.

By this time the Marthals Deputy came before them, whom M. Secretary commanded to take the Bishop as prisoner, and so to keep him that no man might come unto him, for if he did, he should sit by him himself.

When the Secretary had ended his talk, the Bishop said unto him, Well Sir, it might have become you right well that my Lords Grace here present, being first in Commission, and your better, should have done it.

Then the Commissioners assigning him to be brought before them on Monday next before Noon, between seven and nine of the clock in the Hall of that place, there to make full answer to these Articles, or else to shew cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, did for that present break up that Session.

Now as the Bishop was departing with the under Marthal, he in a great fury turned himself again toward the Commissioners, and said to Sir Thomas Smith: Sir, where ye have committed me to prison, ye shall understand, that I will require no favour at your hands, but shall willingly suffer what shall be put unto me, as Bolts on my heels, yea, and if ye will, from about my middle, or where ye will.

Then departing again, he yet returned once more, and so foming out his poison, said unto the Archbishop: Well, my Lord, I am sorry that I being a Bishop am thus handled at your Graces hand; but more sorry that ye suffer abominable Hereticks to practise as they do in London and elsewhere, infecting and disquieting the Kings liege people: and therefore I do require you, as you will answer to God and the King, that ye will henceforth abstain thus to do; for if you do not, I will accuse you before God and the Kings Majesty; answer to it as well as ye can. And so he departed, using many reproachful words against sundry of the common people, which stood and spake to him by the way as he went.

The sixth Action or Process upon Monday the 23d of September, had against Bonner Bishop of London, before the Commissioners, in the great Hall at Lambeth.

The 6. Act
tion or appearance of Bonner.

IT was assigned as ye have heard in the fourth Act prosecuted the eighteenth of September, that upon Monday then next following, being the three and twentieth of the same Month, the Bishop should again appear before the Commissioners, within the great Hall at Lambeth, then to shew a final cause why he should not be declared pro confesso, upon all the Articles whereunto he had not fully answered.

According to which assignment, the same three and twentieth day of September, the Bishop was brought before them by the Undermarshal (to whom for his disobedient and obnoxious behaviour he was before that time committed) and there did first declare unto them, that his appearance at that time and place was not voluntary, but coerced, for that he was against his will brought thither by the keeper of the Marshalsey, and therewithal also under his former protestation, recantation and appeal, did then again intimate a general recantation of all the Commissioners, alleging in the same, that because the Archbishop with all his Collegues had neither observed the order of their Commission, neither yet proceeded against him after any laudable or good fashion of judgment, but contrariwise had sundry times as well in his absence, as in his presence, attempted many things unlawfully against his person, dignity and state, especially in committing him to strait Prison, and yet commanding him to make answer; and further, because that he with the rest had proceeded in Commission with Sir Thomas Smith Knight, supporting and maintaining all his evil doings (notwithstanding that he the said Bishop had before justly refused and declined from him) he therefore did also there refuse and decline from the judgment of the said Archbishop and his Collegues, and did except against their jurisdiction as suspect, and they thereby unmeet persons to proceed against him; therefore, according to his former Appeal, he intended to submit himself under the tuition, protection, and defence of the Kings Majesty; for whose honour and reverence false (he said) they ought not to proceed any further against him, but quietly suffer him to use the benefit of all the recantations, provocations, and other lawful remedies before alleged, with other superfluous words, at large to be read and seen as followeth.

The second recantation made by Edmund Bonner Bishop of London.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Forasmuch as both natural reason and all good policies of Laws, especially of this Realm of England, do admit and suffer him that is convicted before an incompetent and suspect Judge, to refuse him and to decline his jurisdiction, in as much as Law and reason on the one side willeth proceed to run uprightly and justly, and that on the other side corruption and malice labourereth to the contrary, and needeth therefore to be bridled; and because ye my Lord of Canterbury with your Collegues in this behalf (deputed as ye say Commissioners against me) neither have observed your said Commission, neither yet proceeded hitherto against me after any laudable, lawful, or any good fashion of judgment, but contrariwise, contrary to your Commission, and against the Law, good reason and order, have at sundry times, and in sundry acts attempted and done many things against me unlawfully, unseemly, and unjustly, and suffer the like to be attempted and done by other, not reforming and amending the same, as appeareth in divers and sundry things remaining in your Acts.

And moreover, because you my said Lord with your said Collegues, have both in mine absence, being let with just causes of impediment, which according to the Laws of this Realm I have fully alleged, and very sufficiently and fully proved according to the order of the Kings Ecclesiastical Laws, injuriously, and much to the hinderance of my name, person, title, dignity, and state, and also otherwise, specially in my presence, against all Laws, good order, and reason, without good cause or ground attempted and done many things against me, especially touching mine imprisonment, sending me to strait Ward, and yet commanding me to make answer, as appeareth in your unlawful Acts.

I for these causes, and also for that yemy said Lord and your said Collegues proceeding with Sir Thomas Smith Knight (whom upon just and lawful causes I have refused, recused and declined) have favoured, yea maintained, supported and born him, in his unlawful and evil doings, do also refuse, recuse and decline you my said Lord with the rest of your said Collegues agreeing and joining with you, and also except against your proceedings, doings and jurisdiction as suspect, and thereby unmeet persons to proceed herein against me.

And further I do allege, that having been provoked to the Kings most excellent Majesty, as appeareth by the tenor of my provocation, remaining in your Acts, whereunto I do protest that I intend to adhere and cleave, submitting my self unto the tuition, protection, and defence of his said Majesty in this behalf, ye in any wise ought not (if ye regard the person and authority of his Graces royal power, as ye ought to do) proceed herein against me, especially for the honour and reverence ye ought to have unto his Majesty in this behalf. And because it appeareth that ye do not duly and circumpectly consider the same, as ye ought to do, but more and more do grieve me; that considered, I both here to all purposes repeat my former recantation, provocation, and all other remedies that heretofore I have used and mentioned in your said Acts.

And also do by these presents refuse, recuse, and decline you my said Lord, and your said Collegues, and your jurisdiction, upon causes aforesaid, offering my self prompt and ready to prove all the same, afore an arbiter and arbiters, according to the tenor and form of the Law herein to be chosen, requiring you all, for that honour and reverence ye ought to bear to our said Sovereign Lord, and his Laws allowed and approved in this behalf, that ye do not attempt or do, ne yet suffer to be attempted or done, any thing in any wise against me, or unto my prejudice, but suffer me to use and enjoy the benefit of my said former and this recantation, provocation, allegation, and other lawful remedies mentioned in your said Acts. And in case ye do de facto, where ye ought not de jure, to attempt or suffer any thing to be attempted or do ne against me in any wise herein, I protest herewith, and hereby, of my great grief and hurt in that behalf, and that not only I do intend to appeal from you, but also, according to the Kings Ecclesiastical Laws, to accuse and complain upon you, as justly and truly I both may and ought to do.

Notwithstanding these recantations, and former appellations, the Archbishop with the rest told him plain that they would be still his Judges, and proceed against him according to the Kings Commission, until they did receive a Superseas, which if he did obtain, they would gladly obey.

Then the Bishop, seeing that they would still proceed against him, did there likewise intimate another appellation unto the Kings Majesty, expressing therein in effect no other matter, but such as is already alleged in the two former recantations and appeals: saving that he requirith that Letters dimissories or appellatories might be given him according to the Law, and that for his better safeguard he did submit himself under the protection of the King.

The Commissioners for all this stuck still unto their Commission, and would not in any case defer, but urged him straitly to make a more full answer to his Articles than he had done.

the King.

KING To whom the Bishop said, that he would stand unto his reculations and appellations before made, and would not make other answer.

Bonner standing up on his reculations and appellations, denieth he make answer.

Then the Delegates demanded of him what cause he had to alledge, why he ought not to be declared pro confesso, upon the Articles whereunto he had not fully answered, the Bishop still answering (as before) that he would adhere unto his appellation and reculation.

Bonner declared Consumax & pro confesso, that he was guilty.

Whereupon the Archbishop, with consent of the rest, seeing his pertynacy, pronounced him Consumax, and in pain thereof declared him pro confesso, upon all the Articles which he had not answered.

This done, Maister Secretary Smith shewed forth a Letter which the Bishop of London had before that time sent unto the Lord Maior and the Aldermen of the City of London, the tenor whereof ensueth as followeth.

To the Right honourable and my very good Lord,
The Lord Maior of London, with all his worshipful Brethren, my very dear and worshipful Friends, with speed.

Bonner Letter to the Lord Maior and Aldermen of London.

Right honourable, with my very humble recommendations: where I have perceived of late and heard with mine ears, what vile Beasts and Hereticks have preached unto you, or rather like themselves prated and vailed against the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar, denying the verity and presence of Christ's true Body and Blood to be there, giving you and the people liberty to believe what ye list, teaching you desperately, That Faith in this behalf must not be coerced, but that every Man may believe as he will: by reason whereof, left my presence and silence might unto some have been seem to have allowed their heretical Doctrine, and given credit unto them, betraying my Flock of the Catholick sort, ye know I departed Yesterday from the heretic Praters uncharitable charity, and so could have wished that you and all other that be Catholick should have done, leaving those there with him that be already cast away, and will not be recovered. For you tarrying with him still, shall not only hurt your selves in receiving his poisoned Doctrine, but also shall give a visage that their Doctrine is tolerable by reason that ye are content to bear it, and say nothing against it. And because I cannot tell when I shall speak with you to advertise you hereof, therefore I thought good for mine own discharge and yours, thus much to write unto you, requiring and praying you again and again in Gods behalf, and for mine own discharge, that ye suffer not your selves to be abused with such naughty Preachers and Teachers, in hearing their evil Doctrine that ye shall perceive them go about to sow. And thus our blessed Lord long and well preserve you all with this noble City in all good rest, godliness, and prosperity. Written in haste, this Monday morning, the 16th of September 1549.

Your faithful Reads man and poor Bishop Edmund Bonner.

Bonner delivered still the next Friday and from that still Tuesday after.

This Letter being read, the Secretary demanded of him whether he wrote it not. To whom he would not otherwise answer, but that he would still adhere and stand unto his former reculations and appeals. Which the Commissioners, seeing, determined to continue this case in state as it was until Friday then next following, between the hours of eight and nine of the clock before Noon, assigning the Bishop to be there at the same time and place, then to hear a final Decree of this matter, he still protesting as before.

The seventh Session or appearance of Bonner upon Tuesday the fourth of October, before the Kings Commissioners at Lambeth.

The 7. Session or appearance of Bonner

Upon Friday the Commissioners, for divers urgent causes letting them, did not sit in Commission according to their appointment, but deferred it until Tuesday the fifth of October then next following. Upon which day the Bishop appearing before them, the Archbishop declared unto him, that although as upon Friday last they had appointed to pronounce their final Decree and Sentence in this matter, yet so far as they thought that that Sentence (although they had just cause to give it) should have been very fore against him, they had not only deferred the same until this day, but minding to be more friendly to him than he was to himself, and to use more easie, and gentle reformation towards him, had also made such sute and means for him, that although he had grievously offended the Kings Majesty, and very disobediently behaved himself, yet if he would in the mean while have acknowledged his fault, and have been contented to make some part of amends in submitting himself according to his bounden duty, he should have found much favour: So the Sentence should not have been so fore and extrem against him, as it was like now to be, for which they were very sorry, especially to see the continuance of such stubborn disobedience, whereby they were then more enforced to give such sentence against him.

The Bishop nothing at all regarding this gentle and friendly admonition and favour, but persisting still in his wonted contumacy, draw forth a Paper, whereon he read these words following.

I Edmund Bishop of London brought in as a prisoner by his keeper, one of the Marshalsey, here before you my Lord of Canterbury and your pretended Collegues, do under my former protestations heretofore by me made before you and remaining in your Act declare that this my protest here at this time is not voluntary, nor of mine own free will and consent, but utterly coerced and against my will, and that being otherwise sent for or brought before you than I am (that is as a prisoner) I would not, being at liberty, have come and appeared before you, but would have declined and refused to make any appearance at all, and would have absented my self from you, as lawfully and well I might have done, standing to, using and enjoying all and singular my lawful remedies and defences heretofore used, exercised and enjoyed, especially my provocation, and appellation heretofore interposed and made unto the the Kings most excellent Majesty, to whom I am, Ex abundant, I have both provoked and appealed, and also made supplication, as appeareth in these writings, which, under protestation aforesaid, I do exhibit and leave here with the attuary of this cause, requiring him to make an Instrument thereupon, and the persons here present to bear record in that behalf, especially to the intent it may appear, I do better acknowledge the Kings Majesties Authority even in his tender and young age, provoking and appealing to his Majesty, as my most gracious Sovereign and Supreme head, with submission to his Highness (as appeareth in my appellation and other remedies) for my evasion and defence, than otherwise (I do mean you my Lord of Canterbury and your said pretended Collegues) which by Law and good reason ought to have deferred and given place unto such provocation, appellation, and supplication, as heretofore lawfully have been by me interposed, and made unto his Majesties most Royal Person and Sovereign Authority in this behalf.

As soon as the Bishop had read these words, he did deliver as well that Paper, as also two other, unto the Actuary, the one containing an appellation, and the other a supplication unto the Kings Majesty; which appellation beginneth thus. In the Name of God, Amen.

Wherein first he shewed how natural every Creature declineth gladly from that thing which goeth about to hurt it, and also seeketh help and remedy to withstand such hurts and injuries.

Further he shewed that it is found by experience to be hurtful and dangerous to trust him that once hath hurt and beguiled, lest he might add more, rather than to take ought from.

Moreover he shewed, that he had found heretofore at the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the rest of the Collegues in this matter, much extremity and cruelty, injuries, losses, and griefs, contrary to Gods Law, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, and against Justice, Chantty and good order, being well assured if they were not stayed but proceeded, they would add more evil to evils, loss to loss, displeasure to displeasure, as (said he) their Servants have reported, and they agreeably do shew the same.

A declaration of Bonner before the Commissioners.

Bonner pretended submission to the King.

Again in the said Appeal he shewed that the Bishop of Canterbury and the other Commissioners ought to have considered and done better in that matter for honour and obedience to the Kings Majesty, which hitherto they have not done (said he) in that they have not given place to his provocations and appellations heretofore made unto him, justly and lawfully, and upon good and just causes, namely, for the unjust griefs they did against him, which he said do appear in the Acts of that matter: as in pronouncing him contumacem unreasonably without good cause, and further in assigning the Term ad audiendum suale decretum, and in committing him to straight prison, as appeareth in their Acts. Therefore he did not only, Ex abundantia, ad omnem juris cautelam, decline and refuse their pretended jurisdiction as before, but also by these presents here shewed, he did appeal from the said Archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest, unto the Kings Majesty, asking also those Letters of appeal which the Law doth admit, and he did not intend to go from his former provocations and appellations, but to joyn and cleave unto them in every part and parcel, submitting himself to the protection and defence of the Kings Majesty: and he therein made intimation to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and to his said Collegues, to all intents and purposes that might come thereof.

Furthermore, as touching the supplication above mentioned, which Bonner (as we said) put up in Writing to the Commissioners, the Copy thereof hereunder likewise ensueth.

The supplication of Bonner to the Chancellor of England, with all the rest of the Kings Majesties most honourable privy Council.

Please it your most honourable good Lordships, with my most humble recommendations, to understand, that albeit I have according to the Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances of this Realm made supplication, provocation, and appellation unto the Kings most excellent Majesty, from the unlawful and wicked process of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, Master Secretary Smith, and the Dean of Pauls, as also as will from their unjust interlutory; as also their definitive sentence, whereby in Law I ought to have liberty to come abroad and prosecute the same, yet such is the malignity of the Judges against me, with bearing and maintenance of other which sundry and many ways have sought my ruine and destruction, that I am here penned and locked up, used very extremely at their pleasure, and for the contentation of the said Master Smith, not suffered to find surerries, or to go abroad to prosecute and sue my said appellation.

In consideration whereof, it may please your said good Lordship to take some order and redress herein, especially for that it is now the time that the Kings Subsidy, now due, ought to be called upon, and Justice also ministered unto his Majesties Subjects, which, being as I now am, I cannot be suffered to do. And thus without further extending my Letter therein, considering that your great wisdom, experience, and goodness can gather of a little, what is expedient and necessary for the whole, I do beseech Almighty God to preserve and keep well all your honourable good Lordships.

Written in haste this seventh of October, 1549, in the Marshalsey.

Your honourable Lordships poor Orator, and most bounden Bondsman, Edmund London.

These things ended, the Archbishop said unto him: My Lord, where you say that you come coasted, or else you would not have appeared, I do much marvel of you. For you would thereby make us and this audience here believe, that because you are a prisoner, ye ought not therefore to answer. Which if it were true, it were enough to confound the whole State of this Realm.

For I dare say, that of the greatest Prisoners and Rebels that ever your Keeper there (meaning the under Marshal) hath had under him, he cannot shew me one that hath used such defence as you here have done.

Well (quoth the Bishop) if my Keeper were learned in the Laws, I could shew him my mind therein.

Well, said the Archbishop, I have read over all the Laws as well as you, but to another end and purpose than you did, and yet I can find no such priviledg in this matter.

Then Master Secretary Smith did very fore burthen and charge him, how disobediently and rebelliously he had always behaved himself towards the Kings Majesty and his Authority.

Whereupon, the Bishop under his Protestation answered again. That he was the Kings Majesties lawfull and true Subject, and did acknowledge his Highness to be his gracious Sovereign Lord, or else he would not have appeared unto him as he did, yea, and would gladly lay his hands and his neck also under his Graces Feet, and therefore he desired that his Highness Laws and Justice might be ministered unto him.

Yea (quoth Master Secretary) you say well my Lord, but I pray you what other hath all these Rebels both in Norfolk, Devonshire, and Cornwall, and other places done? Have they not said this? We be the Kings true Subjects, we acknowledge him for our King, and we will obey his Laws, with such like: and yet when either commandment, Letter, or Pardon was brought unto them from his Majesty, they believed it not, but said it was forged and made under a Hedge, and was Gentlemens doings, so that indeed they neither would nor did obey any thing.

Ah Sir, said the Bishop, I perceive your meaning: as who should say that the Bishop of London is a Rebel like the people them. Yea by my Troth, quoth the Secretary. Whereat the people laughed.

Then the Dean of Pauls said unto him, That he marvelled much, and was very sorry to see him so untractable, that he would not suffer the Judges to speak.

To whom the Bishop disdainfully answered; Well, Master Dean, you must lay somewhat. And likewise at another time as the Dean was speaking, he interrupted him and said, You may speak when your turn cometh.

Then said the Secretary Smith, I would you knew your duty.

I would (quoth he again) you knew it as well as I: with an infinite deal more of other such stubborn and contemptuous talk and behaviour towards them. Which the Commissioners weighing, and perceiving no likelihood of any tractable reason in him, determined that the Archbishop, with their whole content, should at that present there openly read and publish their final Decree or Sentence definitive against him. Which he did, pronouncing him thereby to be clean deprived from the Bishoprick of London, and further as in the same appeareth, in tenor as followeth.

KING mature discussis meritis & circumstantiis causæ & causarum inquisitionis ejusmodi, servatisque ulterius per nos de jure in hac parte servandis in presentia sui Episcopi antedicti, judicialiter coram nobis constituti, ac protestantis de coactione, & de cæteri, prout in ultima protestatione hodie per te facta continetur, ad definitionem causæ & causarum hujusmodi, prolationemque sententiæ nostræ, sive nostri finalis decreti, super eisdem ferendum sic duximus procedendum, & procedimus in hunc qui sequitur modum. Ye shall also set forth in your Sermon, that our Authority of our Royal Power is (as of truth it is) of no less authority and force in this your younger age, than is and was of any of our Predecessors, though the same were much older, as may appear by example of Josias and other young Kings in Scripture. And therefore all our Subjects to be no less bound to the obedience of our Precepts, Laws and Statutes, than if we were thirty or forty years of age.

Which ended, the Bishop immediately did therefrom appeal by word of mouth, alledging, that the same Sentence there given against him, was Lex nulla. The tenor of whose words I thought here to express, according as they were by him uttered, in this wise as followeth.

I Edmund Bishop of London, brought in and kept here as a prisoner against my consent and will, do under my former Protestation heretofore made, and to the intent it may also appear, that I have not being so here in this place, consented nor agreed to any thing done against me and in my prejudice, alledge and say that this sentence given here against me, is Lex nulla; and so far forth as it shall appear to be Aliqua; I do say it is Iniqua & Injusta, and that therefore I do from it, as Iniqua & Injusta, appeal to the most excellent and noble King Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England and also Ireland, next and immediately under God here on Earth, Supreme head, and unto his Court of Chancery or Parliament, as the Law, Statutes, and Ordinances of this Realm will suffer and bear in this behalf, desiring instantly first, second and third, according to the Law, Letters, reverential or dismissores, to be given and delivered unto me in this behalf, with all things expedient, requisite, or necessary in any wise; and thereupon also the said Bishop required the publick Notary or Attorney, William Say, to make an Instrument, and the witnesses aforesaid and other present to record the same. To whom so appealing, and requiring as aforesaid, the said Judges delegate said, that they will declare and signify to the King's Majesty what is done in this matter, and thereupon will defer or not defer to his said appellation, according as his Graces pleasure and commandment shall be given to them in that behalf, and after all this, the said Bishop of London said to them, Jam functi estis officio. What will your Grace do with me now, touching my imprisonment? Will ye keep me still in prison? Shall I not now be at liberty to prosecute mine appeal? To whom the Archbishop answering, said, That they perceived now more in that matter than they did at the first, and that this matter is greater Rebellion than he is aware of, and therefore said that as yet they would not discharge him, and thereupon they committed him again to his keeper in prison.

This talk finished, the Archbishop considering that most of the audience there present did not understand the meaning of the Sentence being read in the Latin Tongue, said to them, Because there be many of you here that understand not the Latin Tongue, and so cannot tell what judgment hath been here given, I shall therefore tell you the effect thereof; and therewith did declare in English the causes expected in the Sentence, adding thereunto these words,

Because my Lord of London is found guilty in these matters, therefore we have here by our Sentence deprived him of our Bishoprick of London; and this we shew unto you to the intent that from henceforth ye shall not esteem him any more as Bishop of London.

Then Bonner desired the Archbishop to declare likewise what he had done, and how he had appealed. But the other, seeing his froward contempt, refused it, saying, you may do it your self. Whereupon very disdainfully again he said, Jam functi estis officio. What will your Grace do with me touching my imprisonment? Will you keep me still in Prison?

To whom the Commissioners answered, That they perceived now more in the matter than they did before, and that his behaviour was greater Rebellion than he was aware of, and therefore they would not discharge him, but committed him again to his Keeper to be kept in prison. Where he most justly remained until the death of that most worthy and godly Prince King Edward the Sixth. After which time he wrought most horrible mischief and cruelties against the Saints of God, as appeareth hereafter throughout the whole Reign of Queen Mary. From the executing of the which like Tyranny the Lord of his great mercy keep all other such, Amen.

Now, immediately after his deprivation, he writeth out of the Marthaley other Letters supplicatory unto the Lord Chancellor, and the rest of the Kings Council. Wherein he thus complaineth, that by reason of the great enmity that the Duke of Somerset and Sir Thomas Smith bare unto him, his often and earnest Sutes unto the King and his Council could not be heard. He therefore most humbly desired their Lordships, for the causes aforesaid, to consider him, and to let him have liberty to prosecute his matter before them, and he would daily pray for the good preservation of their honours as appeareth by the words of his own supplication hereunder following.

Letters reverential or dismissores.

Ann. 1549

The Archbishop declared the effect of Bonner's sentence in English.

Bonner deprived and unhithoped.

Bonner desired words to the Commissioners.

Bonner again committed to his keeper.

Thus after the Commissioners had finished with Boner, he being now Prisoner in the Marshalsey, leaving no shift of the Law unfought how to work for himself as well as he might, drew out a certain Supplication, conceived and directed to the Kings Majesty, out of the said Prison of the Marshalsey.

To the right Honourable, my Lord Chancellor of England, with all the rest of the most honourable Privy-Council.

PLEASE it your most Honourable good Lordships with my most humble Commendations to understand, that albeit heretofore I have made such Suit, and to such persons as I cannot devile to make more, or to more higher; that is to wit, to the Kings most excellent Majesty, and his most gracious Person in divers sorts, and also unto your most honourable good Lordships being of his Privy-Council, for redress of such notable and manifest injuries and extremities as have been contrary to all Law, Honesty, and good Reason inflicted upon me by my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Rochester, Doctor Smith, and Doctor May: yet because the said Doctor Smith being a Minister to the Duke of Somerset, and they both my deadly Enemies, hath sundry ways studied and laboured my ruine and destruction, staying and letting heretofore all my lawful Remedies and Suits, having therein help and furtherance of these two other aforesaid persons, being ready at foot and hand to accomplish all their desires and pleasures, I shall at this present, having for a time forborn to trouble (for good respects) your most honourable good Lordships with any my Suits, and especially for your other manifold great affairs in the Kings Majesties businesses, my self yet, the mean while, neither wanting good will, ne yet just cause (being where I am) to make such Suit, renew my Suit, and most humbly beseech your most honourable good Lordships to give me leave to make most humble Supplication again to your said Lordships, for honest and lawful liberty to prosecute my Appellation and Supplication heretofore made to the Kings most excellent Majesty, and according to the Law to make my suit for redress of the said great and manifest injuries, extremities, and wrongs done against me by the said persons. And your said Lordships, over and besides the furtherance of Justice many ways herein to me and other, and the Collection of the Kings Majesties Subsidy now to be levied of the Clergy in my Diocese, which hitherto hath been and is staid by reason of the premises, shall also bind me most greatly and intirely to pray daily for the good preservation of your said most honourable good Lordships in all honour, felicity, and joy, long to continue and endure unto Gods pleasure. Written in the Marshalsey the 26th of October, 1549.

Your Lordships most faithful and assured Beadsman Edmund London.

A Supplication made and directed by Edmund Bonner, late Bishop of London, to the Kings Majesty, out of the Prison of the Marshalsey.

Bonners
Supplication to the King.

IN the which Supplication, first after the used form of stile, he prayed for the prosperous estate of the King long to Reign. Then he shewed that his faithful heart and service to him hath, is, and shall be, as it was to his Father before.

Then he declared how he had been belied of evil men, and misreported not to bear a true heart to his Grace, but a rebellious mind, in denying his Royal Power in his Minority, where indeed he faith, His Grace should find him always during life both in heart, word and deed to do and acknowledge otherwise, and to be most willing to shew, &c. and to do all other things for his Grace, as willingly as any other Subject, or as those that were his denouncers, who he thought were not sent of his Grace, but pretended Commissioners, &c.

Further, he complained of his denunciation by certain Commissioners (who said they were sent by his Grace) alledging the same not to be lawful; and of his long and sharp imprisonment, and that the Commissioners observed neither Law nor reasonable Order, but extremity. And where he had made Appeal to his Grace, and he could not have it; he desired to have Law to prosecute and sue his Appeal for his remedy, and that he (considering his Vocation) might not be shut up and put from liberty, which his meaneest Subjects have.

Then he desired his Graces Letters of Saperfedees against the Commissioners, and that the matter might be heard before the Council, and then he doubted not but to be found a true faithful man, and herein to have wrong. So in the end he concluded, this (prostrating himself even to the very ground, and humbly kissing his Graces Feet) to be the only thing which he humbly desired, &c.

THIS done, and the Supplication perused, the King effusions giveth in charge and commandment to certain men of Honour and Worship, and Persons skillful in the Law, as to the Lord Rich, high Chancellor, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Marquis Dorset, the Bishop of Ely, Lord Wentworth, Sir Anthony Wingfield, Sir William Herbert Knights, Doctor Rich, Wootton, Ed. Montague, Lord Chief Justice, Sir John Baker Knight, with Judge Hales, John Gofnold, Doctor Oliver, and also Doctor Layton, that they scanning and perusing all such Acts, Matters, and Minuments of the said Bonner by him exhibited, produced, propounded, and alledged, with all and singular his Protections, Recusations, and Appellations, should upon mature consideration thereof give their direct answer upon the same, whether the Appellation of the said Bonner were to be deferred unto whether the Sentence defined against him stood by the Law sufficient and effectual, or not. Who effusions after diligent discussion and considerate advisement had of all and singular the premises, gave their resolute answer, that the pretended Appellation of Edmund Bonner aforesaid was naught and unreasonable, and in no wise to be deferred unto; and that the Sentence by the Commissioners against him, was rightly and justly pronounced. And this was the conclusion of Bonners whole matter, and deprivation for that time.

Thus then leaving Doctor Bonner a while in the Marshalsey with his Keeper, we will proceed (the Lord permitting) further in the course of our story, as the order of years and time requireth. And although the trouble of the Lord Protector falleth here jointly with the deprivation of Doctor Bonner, yet because he was shortly again delivered out of the same through the Lords mighty working, I will therefore delay the tractation thereof, till the time of his second trouble, which was two years after; and so in the mean time, returning again into our discourse, intend by the Lords leave to collect and continue the matters begun, touching the Kings godly proceedings for reformation of Religion in the foresaid year of our Lord, curring, Anno 1549.

And here first a note would be made of Peter Martyr and of his learned travels, and disputation in the University of Oxford the said present year with Doctor Chedsey, and other more about the matter of the Sacrament; which was, that the substance of Bread and Wine was not changed in the Sacrament, and that the Body and Blood of Christ was not carnally and bodily in the Bread and Wine, but united to the same Sacramentally.

In like manner, some touch or mention here also would be made of the Ecclesiastical Laws, for the gathering and compiling whereof thirty two persons were assigned by Act of Parliament the said present year, 1549. But because these be rather matters of tractation, than historical, I mean (God willing) to defer the further consideration thereof unto the end of the History of this Kings days, and so to pass forward to other matters in the mean while.

Books of Latine-Service called in and abolished.

IT followeth then in story, that certain of the vulgar multitude, hearing of the apprehension of the Lord Protector, and supposing the alteration of publick Service into { KING } into English, and Administration of the Sacrament and other Rites lately appointed in the Church, had been the act chiefly or only of the said Lord Protector, began upon the same to noise and brute abroad, that they should now have their old Latine-Service with holy Bread and holy Water, and their other like superstitious Ceremonies again: whereupon the King, with the body and state of the Privy-Council then being, directed out his Letters of Request, and strait commandment to the Bishops, in their Dioceses, to cause and warn the Dean and Prebendaries of their Cathedral Churches, all Parsons, Vicars and Curates, with the Church-Wardens of every Parish within their Dioceses, to bring in and deliver up all Antiphoners, Missales, Grailes, Processionals, Manuals, Legends, Piet, Portusces, Journals, and Ordinals after the use of Salus, Lincoln, York, Bangor, Hereford, or any other private use, and all other Books of Service, the having whereof might be any let to the Service now set forth in English, charging also and commanding that all such as shall be found stubborn or disobedient in this behalf should be committed unto Ward.

The Kings Commandment to the Bishops.

Common Bread used in the holy Communion.

And because the King moreover was advertised, That there was a slackness and frowardness among the people, refusing to pay toward the finding of Bread and Wine for the holy Communion, by reason whereof the Communion in many places was omitted, the Bishops in like manner had given in charge to provide for redress thereof, and to punish them which should refuse so to do. Whereby it may appear to us now, that no Wafer-Cakes, but common Bread was then by the Kings appointment ordinarily received and used in Churches. This was about the later end of December, Anno 1549.

Taking down of Altars, and setting up the Table in stead thereof.

Taking down Altars.

Furthermore, in the year next following, 1550. other Letters likewise were sent for the taking down of Altars in Churches, and setting up the Table in stead of the same, unto Nicholas Ridley, who, being Bishop of Rocheſter before, was then made Bishop of London in Bonnys place. The Copy and Contents of the Kings Letters are these, as followeth.

The Kings Letters to Nicholas Ridley Bishop of London, &c.

The Kings Letter to Nicholas Ridley then Bishop of London.

Right Reverend Father in God, right trusty and well-beloved, we greet you well. And where it is come to our knowledge, that the Altars within the most part of the Churches of this Realm being already upon good and godly Considerations taken down, there do yet remain Altars standing in divers other Churches, by occasion whereof much variance and contention ariseth among sundry of our Subjects, which, if good foresight were not had, might perchance ingender great hurt and inconvenience; we let you wit, that minding to have all occasion of contention taken away, which many times groweth by these and such like diversities, and considering that amongst other things belonging to our Royal Office and Cure, we do accompt the greatest to be, to maintain the common quiet of our Realm; we have thought good by the advice of our Council to require you, and nevertheless especially to charge and command you, for the avoiding of all matters of further contention and strife about the standing or taking away of the said Altars, to give substantial Order throughout all your Dioceses, that with all diligence all the Altars in every Church or Chappell, as well in places exempted as not exempted, within your said Dioceses, be taken down, and in stead thereof a Table to set up in some convenient part of the Church, within every such Church or Chappell, to serve for the ministracion of the blessed Communion. And to the intent the same may be done without the offence of such our loving Subjects as be not yet so well persuaded in that behalf as we would wish, we send unto you herewith certain considerations gathered and collected, that make for the purpose, the which, and such other as you shall think meet to be set forth to persuade the weak to embrace our proceedings in this part, we pray you cause to be declared Altars taken down and destroyed.

Considerations to be used to persuade the people.

to the people by some discreet Preachers, in such places as you shall think meet, before the taking down of the said Altars; so as both the weak Consciences of other may be instructed and satisfied as much as may be, and this our pleasure the more quietly executed. For the better doing whereof, we require you to open the foresaid Considerations in that our Cathedral Church in your own person, if you conveniently may, or otherwise by your Chancellor, or some other grave Preacher, both there and in such other Market-Towns and most notable places of your Dioceses, as you may think most requisite.

Reasons why the Lords Board should rather be after the form of a Table, than of an Altar.

The first Reason.

First, The form of a Table shall more move the simple from the superstitious Opinions of the Popish Mals, unto the right use of the Lords Supper. For the use of an Altar is to make Sacrifice upon it; the use of a Table is to serve for men to eat upon. Now when we come unto the Lords Board, what do we come for? To Sacrifice Christ again, and to Crucifie him again, or to feed upon him that was once only crucified and offered up for us? If we come to feed upon him, spiritually to eat his Body, and spiritually to drink his Blood, which is the true use of the Lords Supper, then no man can deny but the form of a Table is more meet for the Lords Board than the form of an Altar.

Considerations and Reasons why the Table were more convenient in the Church than the Altar.

The second Reason.

Item, Whereas it is said, The Book of Common Prayer maketh mention of an Altar; wherefore it is not lawful to abolish that which the Book alloweth. To this is thus answered, The Book of Common Prayer calleth the thing whereupon the Lords Supper is ministered, indifferently a Table, an Altar, or the Lords Board, without prescription of any form thereof, either of a Table or of an Altar: so that whether the Lords board have the form of an Altar, or of a Table, the Book of Common Prayer calleth it both an Altar and a Table. For as it calleth it an Altar, whereupon the Lords Supper is ministered, a Table, and the Lords Board, so it calleth the Table where the holy Communion is distributed with Lauds and Thanksgiving unto the Lord, an Altar, for that there is offered the same Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving. And thus it appeareth, that here is nothing either said or meant contrary to the Book of Common-Prayer.

The second Reason. Answer to certain Cavillers which take hold of the term of the Altar in the Kings Book.

The Table how it may be called an Altar, and in what respect.

The third Reason.

Thirdly, The Popish Opinion of Mals was, That it might not be celebrated but upon an Altar, or at the least upon a Super-Altar, to supply the fault of the Altar, which must have had his prints and characters, or else it was thought that the thing was not lawfully done. But this superstitious Opinion is more holden in the minds of the simple and ignorant by the form of an Altar, than of a Table; wherefore it is more meet, for the abolishment of this superstitious Opinion, to have the Lords Board after the form of a Table than of an Altar.

The third Reason. This reason for taking away the superstitious Opinion, serveth also as well for the abolishing of other things more besides Altars, &c.

The fourth Reason.

The fourth Reason.
The name of an Altar, how it is derived, and what it significeth.

Fourthly, The form of an Altar was ordained for the Sacrifices of the Law, and therefore the Altar in Greek is called θυσιαστήριον, Quasi Sacrificii locus. But now both the Law and the Sacrifices thereof do cease; wherefore the form of the Altar used in the Altar ought to cease withall.

The fifth Reason.

The fifth Reason.
Christ used a Table and not an Altar.
The Altar never used among the Apostles.

Fifthly, Christ did institute the Sacrament of his Body and Blood at his last Supper at a Table, and not at an Altar, as it appeareth manifestly by the three Evangelists. And Saint Paul calleth the coming to the holy Communion, the coming unto the Lords Supper. And also it is not read, that any of the Apostles or the Primitive Church did ever use any Altar in ministrat[i]on of the holy Communion.

Wherefore seeing the form of a Table is more agreeable to Christs Institution, and with the usage of the Apostles, and of the Primitive Church, than the form of an Altar, therefore the form of a Table is rather to be used than the form of an Altar in the Administration of the holy Communion.

The sixth Reason.

The sixth Reason.

Finally, It is said in the Preface of the Book of Common Prayer, that if any doubt do arise in the use and practising of the same Book; to appeale all such diversity, the matter shall be referred unto the Bishop of the Diocess, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and appeasing of the same, so that the same Order be not contrary unto any thing contained in that Book.

After these Letters and Reasons received, the forenamed Nicholas Ridley, Bishop of London, consequently upon the same did hold his Visitation, wherein, amongst other his Injunctions, the said Bishop exhorted those Churches in his Diocess, where the Altars did then remain, to conform themselves unto those other Churches which had taken them down, and had set up in stead of the multitude of their Altars one decent Table in every Church.

Anno 1550.

Nicholas Ridley Bishop of London appointed in his Diocess the right form of a Table.

Upon the occasion whereof there arose a great diversity about the form of the Lords Board, some using it after the form of a Table, and some of an Altar. Wherein when the said Bishop was required to say and determine what was most meet, he declared he could do no less of his bounden duty, for the appeasing of such diversity, and to procure one godly Uniformity, but to exhort all his Diocess unto that which he thought did best agree with Scripture, with the usage of the Apostles, and with the Primitive Church, and to that which is not only not contrary unto any thing contained in the Book of Common Prayer, (as is before proved) but also might highly further the Kings most godly proceedings in abolishing of divers vain and superstitious Opinions of the Popish Mass out of the hearts of the simple, and to bring them to the right use taught by holy Scripture of the Lords Supper, and so appointed he the form of a right Table to be used in his Diocess, and in the Church of Paul brake down the Wall standing then by the high Altars side.

The Wall by the high Altars side in Pauls Church broken down by Nicholas Ridley.

Now we will enter (God willing) into those matters which happened between King Edward and his Sister Mary, as by their Letters here following are to be seen.

To my Lord Protector and the rest of the Kings Majesties Council.

Lady Maries Letters to the Lords of the Council.

MY Lord, I perceive by the Letters which I late received from you, and other of the Kings Majesties Council, that ye be all sorry to find so little Conformity in me touching the Observation of his Majesties Laws; who am well assured, that I have offended no Law, unless it be a late Law of your own making, for the altering of matters in Religion, which in my Conscience is not worthy to have the name of a Law, both for the Kings Honour sake, the wealth of the Realm, and giving an occasion of an evil bruse through all Christendom, besides the partiality used in the same, and (as my said Conscience is very well perswaded) the offending of God, which passeth all the rest: but I am well assured that the King his Fathers Laws were all allowed and consented to without compulsion by the whole Realm, both Spiritual and Temporal, and all ye Executors sworn upon a Book to fulfil the same, so that it was an authorized Law, and that I have obeyed, and will do with the Grace of God, till the Kings Majesty my Brother shall have sufficient years to be a Judge in these matters himself. Wherein, my Lord, I was plain with you at my last being in the Court, declaring unto you at that time whereunto I would stand, and now do assure you all, that the only occasion of my stay from altering mine Opinion, is for two causes:

One principally for my Conscience sake; the other, That the King my Brother shall not hereafter charge me to be one of those that were agreeable to such alterations in his tender years. And what fruits daily grow by such change, since the death of the King my Father, to every indifferent person it well appeareth, both to the displeasure of God, and unquietness of the Realm.

Notwithstanding, I assure you all, I would be as loth to see his Highness take hurt, or that any evil should come to this his Realm, as the best of you all, and none of you have the like cause, considering how I am compelled by nature, being his Majesties poor and humble Sister, most tenderly to love and pray for him, and unto this his Realm (being born within the same) with all wealth and prosperity to Gods Honour.

And if any judge of me the contrary for mine Opinions sake, as I trust none doth, I doubt not in the end, with Gods help, to prove my self as true a natural and humble Sister, as they of the contrary Opinion, with all their devices and altering of Laws, shall prove themselves true Subjects: praying you my Lord, and the rest of the Council, no more to trouble and unquiet me with matters touching my Conscience, wherein I am at a full point, with Gods help, whatsoever shall happen to me, intending, with his Grace, to trouble you little with any worldly Suits, but to bestow the short time I think to live in quietness, and pray for the Kings Majesty and all you, heartily wishing, that your proceedings may be to Gods Honour, the safeguard of the Kings Person, and quietness to the whole Realm.

Moreover, where your desire is, That I should send my Controuler and Doctor Hopton unto you, by whom you would signify your minds more amply, to my contentation and honour: it is not unknown to you all, that the chief charge of my house, resteth only upon the travels of my said Controuler, who hath not been absent from my house three whole days since the setting up of the same, unless it were for my Letters Patents, so that if it were not for his continual diligence, I think my little portion would not have stretched so far. And my Chaplain by occasion of sickness hath been long absent, and is not yet able to ride.

Therefore like as I cannot forbear my Controuler, and my Priest is not able to journey, so shall I desire you my Lord, and all the rest of the Council, that having any thing to be declared to me, except matters of Religion, ye will either write your minds, or send some trusty Person, with whom I shall be contented to talk, and make answer as the case shall require; assuring you that if any Servant of mine, either Man or Woman, or Chaplain, should move me to the contrary of my Conscience, I would not give ear to them, nor suffer the like to be used within my house. And thus my Lord, with my hearty Commendations, I wish unto you and the rest as well to do as my self.

From my house at Kinming-Hall, the two and twentieth of June, 1545.

Your assured friend to my prayer,

Mary.

A remem-

{ KING }
[449.6]

A remembrance of certain matters appointed by the Council to be declared by D. Hopton to the Lady Maries Grace, for answer to her former Letter; which said Hopton was after she came to her Reign Bishop of Norwich.

Her Grace writeth, That the Law made by Parliament is not worthy the name of Law, meaning the Statute for the Communion, &c.

You shall say thereto,

THe fault is great in any Subject to disallow a Law of the King, a Law of a Realm, by long study, free disputation, and uniform determination of the whole Clergy, consulted, debated, and concluded; but the greater fault is in her Grace, being next of any Subject in blood and estate to the Kings Majesty her Brother and good Lord, to give example of disobedience, being a Subject, or of unreasonableness, being his Majesties Sister, or of neglecting the Power of the Crown, she being by limitation of Law next to the same. The example of disobedience is most perilous in this time, as she can well understand; Her unkindness reflecteth in the Kings own acceptance; The neglecting of the Power before God is answerable, and in the World toucheth her honour.

The Executors (she saith) were sworn to King Henry the Eighth his Laws.

You shall say,

It is true, they were sworn to him, his Laws, his Heirs and Successors; which Oath they duly observe, and should offend if they should break any one jot of the Kings Laws now being, without a dispensation by a Law, and herein her Grace shall understand, That it is no Law, which is dissolved by a Law: neither may her Grace do that injury to the Kings Majesty her Brother, to diminish his Authority so far, that he may not, by the free consent of a Parliament, amend and alter unprofitable Laws, for the number of inconveniences which hereof might follow, as her Grace with consideration may well perceive.

Offence taken by the sending for her Officers.

You shall say,

If her Grace consider the first Letters of that purpose, they will declare our good meaning to her, and her gentle usage, requiring the presence of her truly Servant, because she might give more trust to our Message.

Her House is her Flock.

You shall say,

It is well liked her Grace should have her House or Flock, but not exempt from the Kings Orders; neither may there be a Flock of the Kings Subjects, but such as will hear and follow the Voice of the King their Shepherd. God disalloweth it, Law and Reason forbiddeth it, Policy abhorreth it, and her Honour may not require it.

Her Grace deferreth her Obedience to the Kings Laws, until his Majesty be of sufficient years.

You shall say,

She could in no one saying more disallow the Authority of the King, the Majesty of his Crown, and the State of the Realm. For herein she suspendeth his Kingdom, and esteemeth his Authority by his Age, not by his Right and Title. Her Grace must understand he is a King by the Ordinance of God, by descent of Royal Blood, not by the numbering of his years.

As a Creature subject to Mortality, he hath Youth, and by Gods Grace shall have Age; but as a King he hath no difference by days and years. The Scripture plainly declareth it, not only young Children to have been Kings by Gods special Ordinance, but also (which is to be noted) to have had best success in their Reign, and the favour of God in their proceedings. Yea, in their first years have they most purely reformed the Church and state of Religion. Therefore her Grace hath no cause thus to diminish his Majesties Power, and to make him as it were no King until he think him of sufficient years. Wherein how much his Majesty may be justly offended, they be sorry to think.

She saith she is subject to none of the Council.

You shall say,

If her Grace understandeth it of us in that acceptance as we be private men, and not Counsellors sworn to the Kings Majesty, we knowledge us not to be Superiors; but if she understand her writing of us as Counsellors and Magistrates ordained by his Majesty, her Grace must be contented to think us of Authority sufficient by the reason of our Office to challenge a Superiority; not to rule by private affection, but by Gods Providence; not to our estimation, but to the Kings Honour, and finally to increase the Kings estate with our Counsel, our Dignity and Vocation; and we think her Grace will not forget the saying of Solomon in the sixth Chapter of the Book of Wisdom, to move a King to Rule by Counsel and Wisdom, and to build his estate upon them. Wherefore her Grace must be remembered, the Kings Majesties political Body is not made only of his own Royal material body, but of a Council, by whom his Majesty ruleth, directeth and governeth his Realm. In the place of which Council her Grace is not ignorant that we be set and placed. Wherefore the reputation she shall give us, she shall give it to the Kings Honor, and that which she shall take from us, she shall take from his Majesty, whose Majesty we think if it might take increase or honour, as God giveth a daily abundance, it should receive rather increase from her, being his Majesties Sister, than thus any abatement.

She received Master Arundel, and Master Englefield.

You shall say,

All the Council remembreth well her refusal to have her house charged with any more number, alledging the small proportion for her charge, and therefore it was thought to come more for their earnest Suit, meaning to be privileged Subjects from the Law, than of her desire, which refused very often to increase her number. Their caution the King might not suffer, to have his Law disobeyed, their Countries where they should serve by them to be destitute, and having been Servants to his Majesty, the circumstances of their departure might in no wise be liked.

She refused to bear any man to the contrary of her Opinion.

You shall say,

It is an answer more of will than of reason, and therefore her Grace must be admonished neither to trust her own opinion without ground, neither to mislike all others having ground. If hers be good, it is no hurt if she hear the worse. If it be ill, she shall do well to hear the better. She shall not alter by hearings, but by hearing the better. And because she shall not mislike the offer, let her Grace name of learned men whom she will, and further than they by Learning shall prove she shall not be moved. And so far it is thought reason will compel her Grace.

In the end ye shall say,

The good wills and minds of the Lord Protector and the Council is so much toward her Grace, that howsoever she would her self in honour be esteemed, howsoever in conscience quieted, yea howsoever benefited, saving their duties to God and the King, they would as much, and in their doings (if it please her to prove it) will be nothing inferior, assuring her Grace, that they be most sorry that she is thus disquieted: and if necessity of the cause, the honour and surety of the King, and the judgment of their own conscience moved them not, thus far they would not have attempted. But their trust is, her Grace will allow them the more, when she shall perceive the cause, and think no less could be done by them, where she provoked them so far.

Note Dr. Hughton's allusion of the Communion in those days.

These and other of like credit, more amply committed to you in speech, you shall declare to her Grace, and further declare your confidence for the allowing of the manner of the Communion, as ye have plainly professed it before us.

At Richmond the fourteenth of June, 1549.

The Lady Mary to the Lord Protector and the rest of the Council, June 27. 1549.

MY Lord, I perceive by Letters directed from you, and other of the Kings Majesties Council, to my Controulour, my Chaplain, and Master Englefield my Servant, that ye will them upon their Allegiance, to repair immediately to you, wherein you gave me evident cause to change mine accustomed opinion of you all: that is to say, to think you careful of my quietness and well doing, considering how earnestly I writ to you for the stay of two of them, and that not without very just cause. And as for Master Englefield, as soon as he could have prepared himself, having his horses so far off, although ye had not sent at this present, he would have performed your request. But indeed I am much deceived. For I suppose ye would have weighed and taken my Letters in better part, if ye have received them; if not, to have tarried my answer, and I not to have found so little friendship, nor to have been used so ungently at your hands: in sending for him upon whose travel doth rest the whole charge of my whole house, as I writ unto you lately; whose absence therefore shall be to me and my said house no little displeasure, especially being so far off. And beside all this, I do greatly marvel to see your writing for him, and the other two, with such extreme words of peril to issue towards them in case they did not come, and specially for my Controulour, whose charge is so great, that he cannot suddenly be met to take a journey: which words in mine opinion needed not (unless it were in some very just and necessary cause) to any of mine, who taketh my self Subject to none of you all, not doubting but if the Kings Majesty my Brother were of sufficient years to perceive this matter, and knew what lack and incommodity the absence of my said Officer should be to my house, his Grace would have been so good a Lord to me, as to have suffered him to remain where his charge is. Notwithstanding, I have willed him at this time to repair to you, commanding him to return forthwith for my very necessities sake, and I have given the like leave to my poor sick Priest also, whose life I think undoubtedly shall be put to hazard by the wet and cold painful travel of this journey. But for my part I assure you all, that since the King my Father, your late Master, and very good Lord, died, I never took you for other than my Friends; but in this it appeareth contrary. And saving I thought verily that my former Letters should have discharged this matter, I would not have troubled my self with writing the same, not doubting but ye do consider, that none of you all would have been contented to have been thus used at your inferiours hands; I mean, to have had your Officer or any of your Servants sent for by force (as ye make it) knowing no just cause why. Wherefore I do not a little marvel, that ye had not this remembrance towards me, who always have willed and wished you as well to do as my self, and both have and will pray for you all as heartily, as for mine own Soul, to Almighty God, whom I humbly beseech to illuminate you all with his holy Spirit, to whose mercy also I am at a full point to commit my self, whatsoever shall become of my Body. And thus with my Commendations I bid you all farewell. From my house at Kenninghall, the 27th of June.

Your Friend to my power, though you give me contrary cause,
Mary.

A Copy of the Kings Majesties Letter to the Lady Mary the four and twentieth of January, 1550.

Right dear, &c. We have seen by Letters of our Council, sent to you of late, and by your answer thereunto, touching the cause of certain your Chaplains, having offended our Laws in saying of Mass, their good and convenient advices, and your fruitless and indirect mistaking of the same: which thing moveth us to write at this time, that where good counsel from our Council hath not prevailed, yet the like from our self may have due regard. The whole matter we perceive rests in this, that you being our next Sister, in whom above all other our Subjects nature should place the most estimation of us, would wittingly and purposefully, not only break our Laws your self, but also have others maintained to do the same. Truly howsoever the matter may have other terms, other sense it hath not: and although by your Letter it seemeth you challenge a promise made, that so you may do: yet surely we know the promise had no such meaning, neither to maintain, ne to continue your fault. You must know this, Sister, you were at the first time, when the Law was made, born withal, not because you should disobey the Law, but that by our lenity and love shewed you might learn to obey it. We made a difference of you from our other Subjects, not for that all other should follow our Laws, and you only gainstand them, but that you might be brought as far forward by love, as others were by duty. The error wherein you would rest is double, and every part to great, that neither for the love of God we can well suffer it unredressed, neither for the love of you can we but wish it amended. First, you retain a fashion in honouring of God, who indeed thereby is dishonoured, and therein err you in zeal for lack of Science, and having Science offered you, you refuse it, not because it is Science, we trust (for then should we despair of you) but because you think it is none. And surely in this we can best reprehend you, learning daily in our School, that therefore we learn things because we know them not, and are not allowed to say we know not those things, or we think they be not good, and therefore we will not learn them. Sister, you must think nothing can commend you more than reason, according to the which you have been hitherto used; and now for very love we will offer you reason our self. If you are persuaded in conscience to the contrary of our Laws, you or your Perfwaders shall freely be suffered to say what you or they can, so that you will hear what shall be said again.

In this point you see I premit not my estate, and talk with you as your Brother rather than your supreme Lord and King. Thus should you, being as well content to hear of your opinions as you are content to hold them, in the end thank us as much for bringing you to light, as now before you learn you are loth to see it. And if thus much reason with our natural love shall not move you, whereof we would be sorry, then must we consider the other part of your fault, which is the offence of our Laws. For though hitherto it hath been suffered in hope of amendment, yet now, if hope be none, how shall there be surceance? Our charge is to have the same care over every mans estate, that every man ought to have over his own. And in your own house as you would be loth openly to suffer one of your Servants, being next you, most manifestly to break your Orders, so must you think in our state it shall miscontent us to permit you, so great a Subject, not to keep our Laws. Your nearness to us in blood, your greatness in estate, the condition of this time maketh your fault the greater. The example is unnatural that our Sister should do less for us than our other Subjects. The cause is slanderous for so great a Personage to forsake our Majesty.

Finally,

KING
Edw. 6.

Finally, It is too dangerous in a troublesome Commonwealth, to make the people to mistrust a Faction. We be young, you think, in years to consider this. Truly Sister, it troubleth us somewhat the more; for it may be, this evil suffered in you is greater than we can discern, and so we be as much troubled because we doubt whether we fee the whole peril, as we be for that we fee. Indeed we will presume no further than our years giveth us; that is, in doubtful things not to trust our own wits, but in evident things we think there is no difference. If you should not do as other Subjects do, were it not evident that therein you should not be a good Subject? Were it not plain in that case, that you should use us not as your Sovereign Lord? Again, if you should be suffered to break our Laws manifestly, were it not a comfort for others so to do? And if our Law be broken, and contemned, where is our estate? These things be so plain, as we could almost have judged them six years past. And indeed it grieveth us not a little, that you, which should be our most comfort in our young years, should alone give us occasion of discomfort. Think you not but it must needs trouble us, and if you can so think, you ought Sister to amend it. Our natural love towards you without doubt is great, and therefore diminish it not your self. If you will be loved by us, these few tokens of love towards us, that we say not the with the Psalm, Mala pro bonis mihi reddiderunt. If you will be believed when by writings you confess us to be your Sovereign Lord, hear that which in other things is often alleged, Offende mihi fidem tuam ex falsis tuis. In the answer of your Letter to our Council, we remember you stick only upon one reason divided into two parts. The first is, that in matters of Religion your Faith is none other, but as all Christendom doth confess. The next is, you will assent to no alteration, but with things to stand as they did at our Fathers death. If you mean in the first to rule your Faith by that you call Christendom, and not by this Church of England wherein you are a Member, you shall err in many Points, such as our Fathers and yours would not have suffered, whatsoever you say of the standing still of things as they were left by him. The matter is too plain to write, what may be gathered, and too perilous to be concluded against you. For the other part, if you like no alteration by our Authority, of things not altered by our Father, you should do us too great an injury. We take our self, for the administration of this our Commonwealth, to have the same Authority which our Father had, diminished in no part, neither by example of Scripture, nor by universal Laws. The stories of Scripture be so plentiful, as almost the best ordered Church of the Israelites was by Kings younger than we be. Well Sister, we will not in these things interpret your writings to the worst; Love and Charity shall expound them. But yet you must not thereby be bold to offend in that whereunto you see your writings might be wrested. To conclude, we exhort you to do your duty, and if any impediment be thereof, not of purpose, you shall find a brotherly affection in us to remedy the same. To teach and instruct you we will give Order, and so procure you to do your duty willingly, that you shall perceive you are not used merely as a Subject, and only commanded, but as Daughter, a Scholar, and a Sister, taught, instructed and persuaded. For the which cause, when you have considered this our Letter, we pray you that we may shortly hear from you.

To the Kings most excellent Majesty.

My duty most humbly remembered to your Majesty, please it the same to understand that I have received your Letters by Master Throgmorton this bearer. The contents whereof do more trouble me than any bodily sickness, though it were even to the death; and the rather for that your Highness doth charge me to be both as breaker of your Laws, and also an incourager of others to do the like. I most humbly beseech your Majesty to think that I never intended towards you otherwise than my duty compelleth me unto; that is, to wish your Highness all Honour and Prosperity, for the which I do and daily shall pray. And where it pleaseth your Majesty to write, that I make a challenge of a promise made otherwise than it was meant, the truth is, the promise could not be denied before your Majesties presence at my last waiting upon the same. And although, I confess, the ground of Faith (whereunto I take reason to be but an Hand-Maid) and my conscience also hath and do agree with the same: yet touching that promise, for so much as it hath pleased your Majesty (God knoweth by whose persuasion) to write, it was not so meant; I shall most humbly desire your Highness to examine the truth thereof indifferently, and either will your Majesty's Ambassador, now being with the Emperor, to inquire of the same, if it be your pleasure to have him move it, or else to cause it to be demanded of the Emperors Ambassador here, although he were not within this Realm at that time. And thereby it shall appear that in this point I have not offended your Majesty, if it may please you so to accept it. And albeit your Majesty (God be praised) hath at these years as much understanding and more, than is commonly seen in that Age, yet considering you do hear but one part (your Highness not offended) I would be a Suitor to the same, that till you were grown to more perfect years, it might stand with your pleasure to stay in matters touching the Soul. So undoubtedly should your Majesty know more, and hear others, and nevertheless be at your liberty and do your will and pleasure. And whatsoever your Majesty hath conceived of me, either by Letters to your Council, or by their report, I trust in the end to prove my self as true to you, as any Subject within your Realm, and will by no means stand in argument with your Majesty, but in most humble wise beseech you, even for Gods sake, so suffer me, as your Highness hath done hitherto. It is for no worldly respect I desire it, God is my Judge, but rather than to offend my conscience, I would desire of God to lose all that I have and also my life; and nevertheless live and die your humble Sister and true Subject. Thus after pardon craved of your Majesty for my rude and bold writing, I beseech Almighty God to preserve the same in Honour with as long continuance of health and life, as ever had Noble King. From Beaulieu, the third of February.

Your Majesties most humble and unworthy Sister, Mary.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council the fourth of December, 1550.

My Lords, your Letters dated the second of this present were delivered unto me the third of the same. And where you write that two of my Chaplains, Doctor Millet and Barkly, be indicted for certain things committed by them contrary to the Kings Majesties Laws, and Process for them also awarded forth, and delivered to the Sheriff of Essex; I cannot but marvel they should be so used, considering it is done, as I take it, for saying Mass within my house: and although I have been of my self minded always, and yet am so have Mass within my house; yet I have been advertised that the Emperors Majesty hath been promised that I should never be inquieted nor troubled for my so doing, as some of you my Lords can witness. Furthermore, besides the declaration of the said promise made to me by the Emperors Ambassador that dead is from his Majesty, to put my Chaplains more out of fear, when I was the last year with the King's Majesty my Brother, that question was then moved, and could not be denied, but affirmed by some of you before his Majesty to be true, being not so much inquieted for the trouble of my said Chaplains, as I am to think how this matter may be taken, the promise to such a person being no better regarded. And for mine own part, I thought full little to have received such ungentleness at your hands, having always (God is my Judge) wished unto the whole number of you as to my self, and have refused to trouble you, or to crave any thing at your hands, but your good will and friendship, which very slenderly appeareth in this matter. Notwithstanding, to be plain with you, howsoever ye shall use me or mine (with Gods help) I will never vary from mine opinion touching my Faith. And if ye or any of you bear me the less good will for that matter, or fault in your Friendship towards me only for the same, I must and will be contented, trusting that God will in the end show his mercy upon me, assuring you, I would rather refuse the friendship of all the world (whereunto I trust I shall never be driven) than forsake any point of my Faith. I am not without some hope that ye will stay this matter, not enforcing the rigour of the Law against my Chaplains. The one of them was not in my house these four months, and Doctor Mallet, having my licence, is either at Windsor, or at his Benefice, who, as I have heard, was indicted for saying Mals out of my house, which was not true. But indeed the day before my removing from Woodham-water, my whole Household in effect being gone to Newhall, he said Mals there by mine appointment. I see and hear of divers that do not obey your Statutes and Proclamations, and nevertheless escape without punishment. Be ye Judges if I be well used to have mine punished by rigour of a Law, besides all the false bruits that ye have suffered to be spoken of me. Moreover, my Chaplain Doctor Mallet, besides mine own Commandment, was not ignorant of the promise made to the Emperor, which did put him out of fear. I doubt not therefore but ye will consider it, as by that occasion no piece of friendship be taken away, nor I to have cause but to bear you my good will, as I have done heretofore: for albeit I could do you little pleasure, yet of my friendship ye were sure, as if it had been in my power, ye should have well known. Thus with my hearty Commendations to you all, I pray Almighty God to send you as much of his Grace, as I would wish to mine own Soul.

From Boulien, the fourth of December.

Your assured friend to my power,

Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary, the five and twentieth of December.

AFTER our due Commendations to your Grace. By your Letters to us, as an answer to ours, touching certain Process against two of your Chaplains, for saying Mals against the Law and Statute of the Realm, we perceive both the offence of your Chaplains is otherwise excused than the matter may bear, and also our good wills otherwise misconstrued than we looked for. And for the first part, where your greatness reason to excuse the offence of a Law, is a promise made to the Emperors Majesty, whereof you write, that first some of us be witnesses, next that the Embassador for the Emperor declared the same unto you; and lastly, that the same promise was affirmed to you before the Kings Majesty at your last being with him: we have thought convenient to repeat the matter from the beginning, as it hath hitherto proceeded, whereupon it shall appear how evidently your Chaplains have offended the Law, and you also mistaken the promise. The promise is but one in it self, but by times thrice as you say repeated. Of which times, the first is chiefly to be considered, for upon that do the other two depend. It is very true the Emperor made request to the Kings Majesty, that you might have liberty to use the Mals in your house, and to be as it were exempted from the danger of the Statute. To which request divers good reasons were made, containing the discommodities that should follow the grant thereof, and means devised rather to persuade you to obey and receive the general and godly Reformation of the whole Realm, than by a private fancy to prejudice a common Order. But yet, upon earnest desire and entreaty made in the Emperors name, thus much was granted, that for his sake and your own also, it should be suffered and winked at, if you had the private Mals used in your own Closet for a season, until you might be better informed, whereof there was some hope, having only with you a few of your own Chamber, so that for all the rest of your Household the Service of the Realm should be used, and none other; further than this the promise exceeded not. And truly such a matter it then seemed to some of us, as indeed it was, that well might the Emperor have required of the Kings Majesty a matter of more profit, but of more weight or difficulty to be granted his Majesty could not. At this grant in words, there was by the Embassador now dead, ostentatives devised some writings, as a testimony of the same. But that was ever denied; not because we meant to break the promise, as it was made, but because there was daily hope of your Reformation. { KING }

{ Edw. 6 }

Now to the second time, you say the Emperors Embassadors Declaration made mention of a promise to you, it might well so be. But we think no otherwise than as it appeareth before written. If it were, his fault it was to declare more than he heard; ours it may not be, that deny not what we have said. As for the last time when ye were with the Kings Majesty, the same some of us (whom by these words your Letter noteth) do well remember, that no other thing was granted to you in this matter, but as the first promise was made to the Emperor, at which time you had too many arguments made to approve the proceedings of the Kings Majesty, and to condemn the abuse of the Mals, to think that where the private Mals was judged unjustly, there you should have authority and ground to use it. About the same time, the Embassador made means to have some testimony of the promise under the great Seal; and that not being heard, to have it but by a Letter; and that also was not only denied, but divers good reason alleged, that he should think it denied with reasons, and so to be contented with an answer. It was told him, in reducing that which was commonly called the Mals to the Order of the Primitive Church, and the Institution of Christ, the Kings Majesty and his whole Realm had their Consciences well quieted, against the which if any thing should be willingly committed, the same should be taken as an offence to God, and a very sin against a truth known. Wherefore to licence by open act such a deed, in the conscience of the Kings Majesty and his Realm, were even a sin against God. The most that might herein be born, was, that the Kings Majesty might, upon hope of your Graces reconciliation, suspend the execution of his Law, so that you would use the licence as it was first granted. Whatsoever the Embassador hath said to others, he had no other manner of grant from us, nor having it thus granted, could alledge any reason against it. And where in your Letter your Grace noteth us as breakers of the promise made to the Emperor, it shall appear who hath broken the promise; whether we that have suffered more than we licenced, or you that have transgressed that which was granted. Now therefore we pray your Grace confer the doings of your Chaplains with every point of the premises; and if the same cannot be excused, then think also how long the Law hath been feared. If it prick our consciences somewhat, that so much should be used as by the promise you may claim, how much more should it grieve us to licence more than you can claim? And yet could we be content to bear a great burthen to satisfy your Grace, if the burthen pressed not our consciences so much as it doth, whereof we must say as the Apostle said, Gloria in nobis est haec, testimonium conscientiae nostrae. For the other part of your Graces Letter, by the which we see you misconstrue our good wills in writing to you, howsoever the Law had proceeded against your Chaplains, our order in sending to you was to be liked, and therein truly had we special regard of your Graces Degree and Estate. And because the Law it self respecteth not persons, we thought to give respect to you, first signifying to you what the Law required, before it should be executed, that being warned, your Grace might either think no strangeness in the execution, or for an example of obedience cause it to be executed your self. Others we see perplexed with suddenness of matters; your Grace we would not have unwarned, to think any thing done on a sudden. Truly we thought it more commendable for your Grace to help the execution of a Law, than to help the offence of one condemned by Law. And in giving you knowledge what the Kings Laws required, we looked for help in the execution by you the Kings Majesties Sister. The greater Personage your Grace is, the higher to the King, so much more ought your example to further his Laws. For which cause it hath been called a good Commonwealth where the people obeyed the higher Estates, and they obeyed the Laws. As nature hath joynted your Grace to the Kings Majesty to love him most entirely, so hath Reason and Law subdued you to obey him willingly. The one and the other we doubt not but your Grace remembereth: and as they both be joynted together in you his Majesties Sister, so we trust you will not sever them; for indeed your Grace cannot love him as your Brother, but you must obey his Majesty as his Subject.

Example

{ Anno } { 1550 }

(KING
Edward.) Example of your obedience and reverence of his Majesties Laws is instead of a good Preacher to a great number of his Majesties Subjects, who if they may see in you negligence of his Majesty, or his Laws, will not fail, but follow on hardly, and then their fault is not their own but yours, by example; and so may the Kings Majesty, when he shall come to further judgment, impute the fault of divers evil people (which thing God forbid) to the sufferance of your Graces doings. And therefore we most earnestly, from the depth of our hearts desire it, that as nature hath set your Grace nigh his Majesty by blood, so your love and zeal to his Majesty will further his estate by obedience. In the end of your Letter two things be touched, which we cannot premit; the one is, you seem to charge us with permission of men to break Laws and Statutes. We think indeed it is too true, that Laws and Proclamations be broken daily, the more pity it is, but that we permit them, we would be sorry to have it proved. The other is, that we have suffered brutes to be spoken of you, and that also must be answered as the other. It is pity to see men so evil, as whom they may touch with tales and infamies they care not, fo they mis not the best. Such is the boldness of people, that neither we can fully bridle them to raise tales of you, nor of our selves. And yet whenever any certain person may be gotten, to be charged with any such, we never leave them unpunished. Indeed the best way is, both for your Grace, and us also, that when we cannot find and punish the offender, let us say as he said that was evil spoken of, Yet will I so live, as no credit shall be given to my backbiters. Certainly, if we had credited any evil tale of your Grace, we would friendly have admonished you thereof, and so also proceeded, as either the tale-tellers should have been punished, or else to have proved their tales. And therefore we pray your Grace to think no unkindness in us, that any evil brutes have been spread by evil men; but think rather well of us, that howsoever they were spread, we believed them not. Hitherto your Grace seeth we have written somewhat at length, of the promise made to you, and our meanings in our former writings. And now for the latter part of our Letter, we will as briefly as we can remember to you two special matters, whereof the one might suffice to reform your proceedings, and both together, well considered, we trust shall do your Grace much good. The one is, the truth of that you be desired to follow; The other is, the commodity that thereby shall ensue. They both make a just commandment, and because of the first, the later followeth, that first shall be entreated of. We hear say, your Grace refuseth to hear any thing reasoned contrary to your old determination, wherein you may make your opinion suspicious, as that you are afraid to be diffwaded. If your faith in things be of God, it may abide any storm or weather; if it be but of sand, you do best to cliche the weather. That which we profess hath the foundation in Scriptures upon plain Texts and no Glosses, the confirmation thereof by the use in the Primitive Church, not in this later corrupted. And indeed our greatest change is not in the substance of our faith, no not in any one Article of our Creed; only the difference is, that we use the Ceremonies, Observations and Sacraments of our Religion, as the Apostles and first Fathers in the Primitive Church did. You use the same that corruption of time brought in, and very barbarous and ignorance nourished, and seem to hold for Custom against the Truth, and we for Truth against Custom. Your Grace in one or two places of your Letter seemeth to speak earnestly in the maintenance of your faith, and therein (so that your faith be according to the Scriptures) we must have the like opinion; the saying is very good, if the faith be found. But if every opinion your Grace hath (we cannot tell how conceived) shall be your faith, you may be much better instructed. Saint Paul teacheth you, that faith is by the Word of God. And it was a true saying of him that said, Non qui cuius credit fidelis est, sed qui Deo: For where hath your Grace ground for such a faith, to think Common Prayer in the English Church should not be in English; that Images of God should be set up in the Church; or that the Sacrament of Christs body and blood should be offered by the Priests for the dead; yea, or that it should be otherwise used than by the Scripture it was instituted? Though you have no Scripture to maintain them, we have evident Scriptures to forbid them. And although fault may be found, that of late Baptism hath been used in your Graces house, contrary to law, and utterly without licence, yet is it the worse, that contrary to the Primitive Church, it hath been in an unknown Tongue, by the which the best part of the Sacrament is unused, and as it were a blind bargain made by the Godfathers in a matter of illumination; and thus in the rest of the things in which your Grace differeth from the common order of the Realm, where have you ground or reason, but from custom, which oftentimes is mother of many errors? And although in Civil things she may be followed where the cause is quiet, yet not in Religions where the excuse is no error, as in Leviticus it is said, Ye shall not do after the custom of Egypt, wherein ye dwelled, nor after the custom of Canaan; no, ye shall not walk in their laws, for I am your Lord God, keep you my laws and commandments. The points wherein your Grace differeth in your Faith; as you call it, may be shewed where, when, how and by whom they began since the Gospel was preached, the Church was planted, and the Apostles martyred. At which time your faith depended upon the Scripture, and otherwise there was no necessity to believe. For as Hierome saith, Quod de Scripturis non habet authoritatem, eadem facilitate contemnimus qua probatur. And because your Grace, as we hear say, readeth sometimes the Doctors, we may alledge unto you two or three places of other principal Doctors. Augustine saith, Cum Dominus tacerit, quis nostrum dicat, illa vel illa sunt: aut si dicere audeat, unde probat? And Chrysostome's saying is not unlike; Multi, inquit, gaudent spiritum sanctum, sed qui propria loquuntur, falso illum praesentant. And if you will take their meaning plain, read the fifth Chapter of the first Book of Ecclesiastica historia; and where Constantine had these words in the Council. In disputationibus, inquit, rerum divinarum habetur praescripta spiritus sancti doctrina; Evangelici & Apostolici libri cum prophetarum oraculis plene nobis ostendunt sensum numini; proinde discordia posita, sumamus ex verbis spiritus sancti questionum explicationes. What plainer sayings may be than these to answer your fault? Again, too infinite it were to remember your Grace of the great number of particular errors (crept into the Church) whereupon you make your foundation. The fables of false Miracles and lewd Pilgrimages may somewhat teach you. Only this we pray your Grace to remember with your self, the two words that the Father said of his Son Jesus Christ, Ipsum audite. To the second point of the commodity that may follow your obedience, we having by the Kings authority in this behalf, the governance of this Realm, must herein be plain with your Grace. And if our speech offend the same, then must your Grace think it is our charge and office to find fault where it is, and our part to amend it as we may. Most sorry truly we be, that your Grace, whom we should otherwise honour for the Kings Majesties sake, by your own deeds should provoke us to offend you; we do perceive great discommodity to the Realm by your Graces singularity (if it may be so named) in opinion; and in one respect, as you are Sister to our Sovereign Lord and Master, we most humbly beseech your Grace to shew your affection continually towards him, as becometh a Sister. And as your Grace is a Subject, and we Counsellors to his Majesties Estate, we let you know the example of your Graces opinion hindereth the good weal of this Realm, which thing we think is not unknown to you; and if it be, we let your Grace know it is too true. For Gods sake we beseech your Grace, let nature let before your eyes the young age of the King your Brother. Let reason tell you the foolishness of the people; how often can you without a willing heart think that you should be the cause of disturbance? If your Grace see the King, being the ordinary Ruler under God, not only of all others in the Realm, but of you also, call his people by ordinary laws one way, with what heart can your Grace stay your self without following; much worse to stay other that would follow their Sovereign Lord? Can it be a love in you to forsake him, his rule and law, and take a private way by your self? If it be not love, it is much less obedience. If your Grace think the Kings Majesty to be over his people as the head in a mans body is over the rest, not only in place but in dignity and science, how can you being being a principal member in the same body, keep the non-diffidence from the head? We pray your Grace most earnestly, think this thing so much grieveth us, as for our private affection and good wills to you (though we should dissemble) yet for our publick office we cannot but plainly inform your Grace, not doubting but that your wisdom can judge what our office is, and if it were not your own cause, we know your Grace by wisdom could charge us, if we suffered the like in any other. Truly every one of us apart honoureth your Grace for our Masters sake, but when we joyn together in publick service, as in this writing, we do, we judge it not tolerable, to know disorder, to see the cause, and leave it unamended. For though we would be negligent, the World would judge us. And therefore we do altogether effusions require your Grace, in the Kings Majesties name, that if any of your two Chaplains, Mallet or Barkley, be returned, or as soon as any of them shall return to your Graces house, the same may be, by your Graces commandment or order, sent and delivered to the Sheriff of Essex, who hath commandment from the Kings Majesty, by order of the Law and of his Crown, to attach them, or if that condition shall not like your Grace, yet that then he may be warned from your Graces house, and not kept there, to be as it were defended from the power of the Law. Which thing we think surely neither your Grace will mean, nor any of your Council assent thereto. And so to make an end of our Letter, being long for the matter, and hitherto deferred for our great business, we trust your Grace first seeth how the usage of your Chaplains differeth from the manner of our licence, and what good intent moved us to write to you in our former Letters; lastly, that the things wherunto the King and the whole Realm hath consented, be not only lawful and just by the policy of the Realm, but also just and godly by the laws of God. So that if we, which have charge under the King, should willingly consent to the open breach of them, we could neither discharge our selves to the King for our duties, neither to God for our conscience, the consideration of which things we pray Almighty God, by his holy Spirit, to lay in the bottom of your heart, and thereupon to build such a profession in you, as both God may have his true honour, the King his due obedience, the Realm concord, and we most comfort. For all the which we do heartily pray, and therewith for the continuance of your Graces health to your hearts desire.

From Winchester the five and twentieth of December.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council,
the second of May, 1551.

M^R Lords, after my hearty commendations to you, although both I have been and also am loth to trouble you with my Letters, yet nevertheless the news which I have lately heard touching my Chaplain Doctor Mallet, forceth me therunto at this present; for I hear by credible report, that you have committed him to the Tower, which news seems to me very strange. Notwithstanding I thought it good by this to desire you to advertise me what is the cause of his imprisonment, assuring you I would be sorry that any of mine should deserve the like punishment, and there is no creature within the Kings Majesties Realm would more lament, than any belonging to them should give just cause so to be used, than I would do: who would have thought much friendship in you, if you had given me knowledge wherein my said Chaplain had offended, before you had ministered such punishment unto him, especially requiring you to let me know by this bearer the truth of the matter. And thus thanking you for the short dispatch of the poor Merchant of Portugal, I wish to you all no worse than to my self, and so bid you farewell.

From Beaulieu the second of May.

Your Friend to my power,

Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary, the sixth of May, 1551.

After our humble commendations to your Grace, we have received your Letters of the second of this Month, by the which your Grace seemeth to take it strangely that Doctor Mallet is committed to Prison, whereto we have the more marvel, seeing it hath been heretofore signified unto you, that he hath offended the Kings Majesties Laws, and was therefore condemned, and your Grace hath been by our Letters earnestly desired that he might be delivered to the Sheriff of Essex, according to the just process of the Law, to the which all manner of persons of this Realm be subject: Wherefore howsoever it seem strange at this time to your Grace, that he is imprisoned, it may seem more strange to other that he hath escaped it thus long; and if the place, being the Tower, move your Grace not to impute his imprisonment to his former offence, then we pray your Grace to understand that indeed it is for the very same, and the place of the imprisonment to be at the Kings Majesties pleasure, from whom, besides the charge of his Laws, we have express commandment to do that we do. And so we beseech your Grace to think of us, that neither in this case, nor in any other, we mean to do any other than minister, and see, as much as in our power lieth, justice ministered indifferently to all persons. Which doing, then we think your Grace should not think it any lack of friendship that we did not certify you of the offence of your Chaplain, although indeed the cause hath already been certified. And we trust your Grace both of your natural nearness to the Kings Majesty, and your own good wisdom, will not mislike our Ministry in the execution of the Laws of the Realm, and the pleasure of the Kings Majesty. So we wish to your Grace, from the bottom of our heart, the grace of Almighty God, with the riches of his holy gifts.

The Lady Mary to the Council, the eleventh
of May.

M^R Lords, it appeareth by your Letters of the sixth of this present which I have received, that the imprisonment of my Chaplain Doctor Mallet is for saying of Mass, and that he was condemned for the same. Indeed I have heard that he was indicted, but never condemned. Nevertheless I must needs confess and say, that he did it, but by my commandment, and I said unto him, that none of my Chaplains should be in danger of the Law for saying Mass in my house. And thereof to put him out of doubt, the Emperors Ambassador that dead is, declared unto him before that time, how and after what sort the promise was made to his Majesty, whereby it appeareth that the man hath not in that willingly offended. Wherefore I pray you to discharge him of imprisonment, and set him at liberty; if not, ye minister cause not only to him, but to others, to think that I have declared more than was true, which I would not wittingly do, to gain the whole World. And herein, as I have often said, the Emperors Majesty can be best Judge. And to be plain with you according to mine old custom, there is not one amongst the whole number of you all, that would be more loth to be found untrue of their word than I. And well I am assured, that none of you have found it in me. My Lords, I pray you seek not so much my dishonour, as to disprove my word, whereby it shall appear too plain, that you handle me not well. And if you have cause to charge my Chaplain for this matter, say that to me, and I will discharge it again, by your promise made to the Emperors Majesty, which you cannot rightly deny; wishing rather that you had refused it in the beginning, than after such promise made, and to such a person, to turn to go from it; which my Lords, as your very friend I heartily desire you to consider, and to give me no cause to think you otherwise than my friends, considering I have always, and yet do (God is my judge) wish to you all no worse, neither in souls nor bodies, than to my self, and so, with my hearty commendations, I commit you all to God.

From Beaulieu the 11th of May.

Your assured friend to my power; Mary.

The

The Council to the Lady Mary, the seven and twentieth of May 1551.

After our due commendations to your Grace, although the same receiveth not answer so soon, as perchance was looked for upon the return of your Graces servant: Yet we doubt not but your Grace understanding that where we have matters of estate pertaining to the Kings Majesty in hand, as indeed we have had of late, the deferring of the answer, in a matter being no greater, requireth to be born withal. And touching the answer of your Graces Letter for Doctor Mallet, we pray your Grace to understand, that although you write he was indicted, but not condemned, and so seem to take exception at the manner of his imprisonment; yet if they which informed your Grace of that manner of reason in the law, were as well disposed to please your Grace with truth, as the reason indeed is not true, then should they have told your Grace that by the Act of Parliament, if either Mallet hath been convicted by the Oaths of twelve men, or that the fact have been notorious, then the punishment doth follow justly. The truth of the one and the other way of conviction in this case is notorious enough, besides his flying from the process of the law. And where your Grace, to relieve him, would take the fault upon your self, we are sorry to perceive your Grace to ready to be a defence to one that the Kings Law doth condemn. Nevertheless, he is not punished because your Grace bad him, and willed him to do that which was an offence, but he is punished for doing it: And if we should not to see the Kings laws executed without respect, it might appear that we have too much neglected our duty; and for that your Grace taketh it as a discredit to your self, that he should be punished for that you bad him do, alleging to him that you had authority so to do, and that so promise was made to the Emperor, it hath been both written and said to your Grace what is truth in that behalf. And howsoever that your Grace pretendeth your Licence to have Mals said before your self, for a time of your reconciliation, it had been far out of reason to have desired that whosoever was your Chaplain, might say Mals in any house that was yours, when your Graces self was not there; for so is Dr. Mallets offence, for saying Mals at one of your houses where your Grace was not, which thing as it was never granted, so do we not remember that ever it was demanded. The fault that hath been at any time made, either by the Emperors Embassador that dead is, or by him that now is, was never but in respect of your Grace, and not to be taken that the Emperor or his Embassador meant to privilege Master Doctor Mallet, or any other, to say Mals out of your presence. Wherefore as we do plainly write to your Grace, so we do pray you to take it in good part, and think we be as ready to do our due reverence towards your Grace in any thing we may do with our duty to our Master, as any your Grace may command; and of such wisdom we know your Grace to be, that ye should judge the better of us, for that we be diligent to see the Laws of the Realm executed, wherein resteth the strength and safeguard of the Kings Majesty our Sovereign Lord and Master.

The Lady Mary to the Lords of the Council the one and twentieth of June 1551.

My Lords, although I received by my servants this bearer (who lately delivered unto you my Letters, wherein I desired to have my Chaplain Dr. Mallet discharged of his imprisonment) your gentle message in general words, for the which I give you most hearty thanks; yet have I no knowledge whether you will set him at liberty or no; but I think that your weighty affairs at that time was the let and cause ye did not write, for else I doubt not but ye would have answered me. Wherefore not being satisfied, and understanding ye would gladly please me, I thought good sometime to desire you that my said Chaplain may have his liberty, wherein I assure you yeshall much gratifie me, being not a little troubled, that he is so long in Prison without just cause, seeing the matter of his imprisonment is discharged by the promise made to the Emperors Majesty, as in my late Letter I declared unto you. Wherefore, my Lords, I pray yet let me have knowledge by this Bearer, how ye will use me in this matter; wherein if ye do please me accordingly, then shall it well appear that ye regard the foresaid promise, and I will not forget your gentleness therein, God willing, but requite it to my power. And thus with my hearty commendations to you all, I bid you farewell. From Beaulieu the one and twentieth of June.

Your assured friend to my power;
Mary.

The Council to the Lady Mary the twenty fourth of June 1551.

After our humble commendations to your Grace, we have received your Graces Letter of the one and twentieth hereof, wherein is received the same request that in your former Letters hath been made for the release of Doctor Mallet, and therein also your Grace seemeth to have looked for the same answer of your former Letter, the which indeed partly was omitted (as your Grace conjectureth) by the reason of the Kings Majesties affairs, wherewith we be thoroughly occupied: partly for that we had no other thing to answer, than you had heretofore heard in the same matter. And therefore where your Grace desireth a resolute answer, we assure the same we be right sorry for the matter, and that it should be your Graces chance to move it, fith we cannot with our duties to the Kings Majesty accomplish your desire. So necessary a thing it is to see the laws of the Realm executed indifferently in all manner of persons, and in these cases of contempt of the Ecclesiastical Orders of this Church of England, that the same may not, without the great displeasure of God, and the slander of the State, be neglected; and therefore your Grace may please to understand, that we have not only punished your Chaplain, but all such others whom we find in like case to have disobeyed the Laws of the Kings Majesty. And touching the excuse your Grace oftentimes useth, of a promise made, we assure your Grace, none of us all, nor any other of the Council, as your Grace hath been certified, hath ever been privy to any such promise, otherwise than hath been written. And in that matter your Grace had plain answer both by us of the Kings Majesties Council, at your being left in his Majesties presence; and therein also your Grace might perceive his Majesties determination; wherunto we beseech your Grace not only to incline your self, but also to judge well of us that do addict our selves to do our duties. And so also shall we be ready to do, with all our hearts, our due reverence toward your Grace, whose preservation we commend to Almighty God with our prayer.

The Copy of the Lady Maries Letter to the Kings Majesty.

My Duty most humbly remembered to your Majesty; if I may please the same to be advertised, that I have received by my servants your most honourable Letters; the contents whereof do not a little trouble me, and so much the more, for that any of my said servants should move or attempt me in matters touching my soul, which I think the meanest Subject within your Highnesss Realm could ever bear at their servants hands, having for my part utterly refused heretofore to talk with them in such matters, and of all other persons least regarded them therein, to whom I have declared what I think, as the which trusted that your Majesty would have suffered me your poor Sister and Bearerwoman to have used the accustomed Malt, which the King your Father and mine, with all his Predecessors did evermore use. Wherein also I have been brought up from my youth. And therunto my Conscience doth not only bind me, which by no means will suffer me to think one thing, and do another, but also the promise made to the Emperor by your Majesties Council was an assurance to me, that in so doing I should not offend the Laws, although they seem now to qualifie and deny the thing. And at my last waiting upon your Majesty,

I was so bold to declare my mind and Conscience to the same, and desired your Highness, rather than you should constrain me to leave Maf, to take away my life, whereunto your Majesty made me a very gentle answer. And now I most humbly beseech your Highness to give me leave to write what I think touching your Majesties Letters. Indeed, they be signed with your own hand, and nevertheless (in mine opinion) not your Majesties in effect, because it is well known (as heretofore I have declared in the presence of your Highness) that although our Lord be praised your Majesty hath far more knowledge and greater gifts than other of your years, yet it is not possible that your Highness can at these years be a Judge in matters of Religion; and therefore I take it that the matter in your Letters proceedeth from such as do wish those things to take place which be most agreeable to themselves, by whose doings your Majesty not offended, I intend not to rule my Conscience. And thus without molesting your Highness any further, I humbly beseech the same, even for Gods sake, to bear with me as you have done, and not to think that by my doings or example any inconvenience might grow to your Majesty or your Realm; for I use it not after such sort, putting no doubt but in time to come, whether I live or dy, your Majesty shall perceive that mine intent is grounded upon a true love towards you, whose Royal Estate I beseech Almighty God long to continue, which is and shall be my daily prayer according to my duty. And after pardon craved to the Emperor, your Highness will suffer and bear with me as you have done, till your Majesty may be a Judge herein your self, and rightly understand their proceedings; (of which your goodness yet I despair not :) otherwise rather than to offend God and my Conscience, I offer my body at your will, and death shall be more welcome than life with a troubled Conscience; most humbly beseeching your Majesty to pardon my slowness in answering your Letters. For mine old dislike would not suffer me to write any longer. And thus I pray Almighty God to keep your Majesty in all virtue and honour, with good health and long life to his pleasure.

From my poor House at Copped-Hall, the Nineteenth of August.

Your Majesties most humble Sister

Mary.

A Copy of the Kings Majesties Letters to the said Lady Mary.

Right dear and right entirely beloved Sister, we greet you well, and let you know that it grieveth us much to perceive no amendment in you, of that which we for Gods cause, your souls health, our conscience, and the common tranquillity of our Realm, have so long desired; assuring you that our sufferance hath much more demonstration of natural love, than contention of our Conscience, and foresight of our safety. Wherefore although you give us occasion, as much almost as in you is, to diminish our natural love; yet we be loth to feel it decay, and mean not to be so careless of you as we be provoked.

And therefore meaning your weal, and therewith joining a care not to be found guilty in our Conscience to God, having cause to require forgiveness that we have so long, for respect of love toward you, omitted our bounden duty, we send at this present our right truly and right well-beloved Counsellor, the Lord Rich Chancellor of England, and our truly and right well-beloved Counsellors, Sir A. W. Knight, Controllor of our Household, and Sir W. P. Knight, one of our Principal Secretaries in message to you, touching the order of your house, willing you to give them firm credit in those things they shall say to you from us, and do therein in our name.

Given under our Signet at our Castle of Windsor, the 24th of August, in the first year of our Reign.

A Copy of the Kings Majesties instructions, given to the said Lord Chancellor, Sir A. W. and W. P. Knights, &c. the four and twentieth of August 1551.

Edm. 6 }

First you the said Lord Chancellor and your Colleagues shall make your immediate repair to the said Lady Mary, giving to her his Majesties hearty commendations, and shew the cause of your coming to be as followeth.

Although his Majesty hath long time, as well by his Majesties own mouth and writing, as by his Council, travelled that the said Lady being his Sister, and a principal Subject and Member of his Realm, should both be indeed, and also shew her self conformable to the Laws and Ordinances of the Realm, in the Profession and Rites of Religion, using all the gentle means of exhortation and advice that could be devised, to the intent that the Reformation of the fault might willingly come of her self, as the expectation and desire of his Majesty, and all good wise men was; yet notwithstanding his Majesty (seeth that hitherto no manner of amendment hath followed, but by the continuance of the error, and manifest breach of his laws no small peril consequently may hap to the state of his Realm, especially the sufferance of such a fault being directly to the dishonour of God, and the great offence of his Majesties Conscience, and all other good men; and therefore of late, even with the consent and advice of the whole state of his Privy Council, and divers others of the Nobility of his Realm, whose names ye may repeat, if you think convenient, his Majesty did resolutely determine it just, necessary and expedient, that her Grace should not in any wise use or maintain the private Maf, or any other manner of Service, than such as by the Law of the Realm is authorized and allowed: And to participate this his Majesties determination to her Grace, it was thought in respect of a favourable proceeding with her self, to have the same not only to be manifested by her own Officers and Servants, being most esteemed with her, but also to be executed with them in her house, as well for the quiet proceeding in the very matter, as for the less molesting of her Grace with any message by strangers, in that time of her solitariness, wherein her Grace was then by reason of the late sickness. For which purpose her three servants, Rochester, Englefield and Walgrave were sent in message in this manner. First to deliver his Majesties Letter to her, next to discharge the complaints of saying Maf, and prohibiting all the Household from hearing any. Wherein the Kings Majesty perceiveth upon their own report, being returned to the Court, how negligently, and indeed how fallily they have executed their commandment and charge, contrary to the duty of good Subjects, and to the manifest contempt of his Majesty. Inasmuch as manifestly they have before his Majesties Council refused to do that which pertaineth to every true faithful Subject, to the offence so far of his Majesty, and derogation of his authority, that in no wise the punishment of them could be forbore; and yet in the manner of the punishment of them, his Majesty and his Council hath such consideration and respect of her person being his Sister, that without doubt his Majesty could not with honour have had the like consideration or favour in the punishment of the dearest Counsellor he hath, if any of them had so offended; and therefore his Majesty hath sent you three not only to declare to her Grace the causes of their sending thither of late his Officers in message, but also the causes of their absence now presently. And further, in the default of the said Officers, to take order, as well with her Chaplains, as with the whole Household, that his Majesties laws may be there observed. And in the communication with her, you shall take occasion to answer in his Majesties name certain points of her Letter, sent now lately to his Majesty. The Copy of which Letter is now also sent to you to peruse, for your better instruction how to proceed therein. First, her allegation of the promise made to the Emperor, must be so answered, as the truth of the matter serveth, whereof every of you have heard sufficient testimony divers times in the Council. For her offering of her body at the Kings will, rather than to change her

KING her Confidence, it grieveth his Majesty much, that her Confidence is so settled in error, and yet no such thing is meant of his Majesty, nor of any one of his Council, once to hurt, or will evil to her body, but even from the bottom of their heart they with to her Mentem sanam in corpore sano. And therefore ye shall do very well to persuade her Grace, that this proceeding cometh only of the Confidence the King hath to avoid the offence of God, and of necessary counsel and wisdom to see his laws in so weighty causes executed. Item, because it is thought that Rochester had the care and consideration of her Graces provision of household, and by his absence the same might be disordered or disurnished; his Majesty hath sent a trusty skilful man of his own household, to serve her Grace for the time. Who also is sufficiently instructed of Rochester of the state of her things of household. And if there shall be any thing lacking in the same, his Majesties pleasure is, that his servant shall advertise his own chief Officers of household, to the intent if the same may be supplied of any store here, or elsewhere helped conveniently, her Grace shall not lack.

Item, Having thus proceeded with her Grace, as for the declarations of the causes of your coming, ye shall then cause to be called before you the Chaplains, and all the rest of the household there present, and in the Kings Majesties name most straightly forbid the Chaplains either to say or use any Mass or kind of Service, other than by the law is authorized; and likewise ye shall forbid all the rest of the company to be present at any such prohibited service, upon pain to be most straightly punished, as worthily falling into the danger of the Kings indignation, and alike charge to them all, that if any such offence shall be openly or secretly committed, they shall advertise some of His Majesties Council. In the which clause ye shall use the reasons of their natural duty and allegiance that they owe as Subjects to their Sovereign Lord, which derogate all other earthly duties.

Item, If you shall find either any of the Priests, or any other person disobedient to this order, ye shall commit them forthwith to Prison, as ye shall think convenient.

Ann. Item, Forasmuch as ye were privy to the determination at Richmond, and there understood how necessary it was to have reformation herein; his Majesty upon the great confidence he hath in your wisdom and uprightness, re-mitted to your discretion the manner of the proceeding herein, if any thing shall chance to arise there that in your opinions might, otherwise than according to these Instructions, conduce you to the execution of your charge, which in one summe is to avoid the use of the private Mass, and other unlawful service in the house of the said Lady Mary.

The Story of Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester briefly collected, the residue whereof concerning his acts and doings may further appear in the Book of Acts and Monuments, in the first Edition, Page, 728.

The Story of Stephen Gardiner. Although the first imprisonment of Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, in order of time was before the deprivation of Bishop Bonner; yet forasmuch as he was not deposed from his Bishoprick till the next or second year after, which was 1551. I have therefore driven off the History of the said Bishop of Winchester to this present place, intending nevertheless here not to extend and prolept the explication of that busie matter, with all circumstances and particularities thereof, so amply and full as I might, partly for that being done in my first Volume of Acts and Monuments, it may here suffice and content the Reader, being disposed there to search and further to read touching the same, partly also considering how this present Volume is grown already very large and great, I thought not to pester the same with any more superfluous than needs must; and therefore leaving out his idle Letters, his long procees of Articles and Examinations, his tedious talk, with the multitude of Depositions brought in against him, and other his acts and interludiculous superfluous, I mind here (the Lord willing) briefly and summarily to excerpt only the principal effects, as to the Story may seem most appertinent, referring the residue to be searched (if any Reader so list to do) to the Book of Monuments aforesaid, beginning in the Page 728.

Briefly therefore, as touching the acts, doings, defencings and misdemeanors of this stout Prelat and Bishop of Winchester; first we will set before the Reader the Copy of a certain Write or Evidence against the said Bishop, wherein as in a brief summe generally is described the whole order and manner of his misordered demeanor, copied out of the publick Records in manner as followeth.

The Copy of a Writ or Evidence touching the order and manner of the misdemeanour of Winchester, with declaration of the faults wherewith he was justly charged.

WHereas the Kings Majesty, by the advice of the Lord Protector and the rest of his Highnes Privy Council, thinking requisite for sundry urgent considerations to have a general visitation throughout the whole Realm, did about ten Months past address forth Commissions, and by the advice of sundry Bishops, and other the best learned men of the Realm, appointed certain Orders or Injunctions to be generally observed; which being such as in some part touched the Reformation of many abuses, and in other parts concerned the good governance and quiet of the Realm, were (as reason would) of all men of all sorts obediently received, and reverently observed and executed, saving only of the Bishop of Winchester, who as well by conference with others as by open Protestation and Letters also, shewed such a wilful disobedience therein, as if it had not been quickly espied, might have bred much quietness and trouble: Upon the knowledge thereof he being sent for, and his lewd proceedings laid to his charge, in the presence of the whole Council so used himself, (as well in denying to receive the said Orders and Injunctions, as otherwise) as he was thought worthy most sharp punishment; and yet considering the place he had been in, he was only sequestered to the Fleet, where after he had remained a certain time, as much at his ease as if he had been at his own house, upon his promise of conformity he was both let at liberty again, and also licensed to repair to and remain in his Diocels at his pleasure. Where when he was, forgetting his duty, and what promise he had made, he began forthwith to set forth such matters as bred again more strife, variance and contention in that one small City and Shire, than was almost in the whole Realm after. Besides that, the Lord Protector's Grace and the Council were informed, that to withstand such as he thought to have been sent from their Grace and Lordships into those parts, he had caused all his servants to be secretly armed and hamessed; and moreover when such Preachers, as being men of godly life and learning were sent into that Diocels by his Grace and Lordships to preach the Word of God, had appointed to preach, the Bishop, to disappoint and disgrace them, and to hinder his Majesties proceedings, did occupy the Pulpit himself, not fearing in his Sermon to warn the people to beware of such new Preachers, and to embrace none other Doctrine but that which he had taught them (than the which words none could have been spoken more perilous and seditious. Whereupon being citations sent for, and their Grace and Lordships objecting to him many particular matters wherewith they had just cause to charge him, they did in the end upon his second promise leave him at liberty, only willing him to remain at his house at London, because they thought it most meet to sequester him from his Diocels for a time; and being come to his house, he began afresh to rustle and meddle in matters wherein he had neither commiſſion nor authority; part whereof touched the Kings Maſteſty. Whereof being yet once again admoniſhed by his Grace and their Lordſhips, he did not only promiſe to conform himſelf in all things like a good Subject, but alſo becauſe he underſtood that he was diversly reported of, and many were alſo offended with him, he offered to declare to the World his conformity, and promiſed in an open Sermon ſo to open his mind in ſundry Articles agreed upon, that ſuch as had been offended ſhould have no more cauſe to be offended, but well ſatisfied in all things. Declaring further, that as his own Conſcience was well ſatisfied, and liked well the Kings proceedings within this Realm, ſo would he utter his Conſcience abroad, to the ſatisfaction and good quiet of others. And yet all this notwithstanding, at the day appointed, he did not only moſt arrogantly and diſobediently, and that in the preſence of his Maſteſty, their Grace and Lordſhips, and of ſuch an audience as the like whereof hath not lightly been ſeen, ſpeak of certain matters contrary to an expreſs commandment given to him on his Maſteſties behalf both by mouth and by Letters, but alſo in the reſt of the Articles whereunto he had agreed before, uſed ſuch a manner of utterance as was very like, even there preſently, to have ſtirred a great tumult; and in certain great matters touching the policy of the Realm, handled himſelf ſo colourably, as therein he threw himſelf an open great offender, and a very ſeditious man; ſo much as theſe his proceedings were of ſuch fort, as being ſuffered to eſcape unpunished, might breed innumerable inconveniences, and that the clemencies ſhewed to him afore, by their Grace and Lordſhips, did work in him no good effect, but rather a pride and boldneſs to demean himſelf more and more diſobediently againſt his Maſteſties and his Graces proceedings; it was determined by their Grace and Lordſhips, that he ſhould be committed to the Tower, and be conveyed thither by Sir Anthony Wingfield, and that at the time of his committing, Sir Ralph Sadler, and William Hamming, Clerk of the Council, ſhould ſeal up the Doors of ſuch places in his houſe as they ſhould think meet; all which was done accordingly.

By this Evidence above mentioned, firſt here is of the Reader to be noted how lowly and diſobediently the ſaid Stephen Gardiner miſuſed himſelf in the Kings general Vilitation, in denying to receive ſuch Orders and Injunctions, as for the which he juſtly deſerved much more ſevere puniſhment, albeit the King with his Uncle the Lord Protector, more gently proceeding with him, were contented only to make him take the Fleet. In the which houſe, as his durance was not long, fo his intreating and ordering was very eaſie. Out of the which Fleet divers and ſundry Letters he wrote to the Lord Protector and other of the Council, certain alſo to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſome to Maſter Ridley Biſhop of London; the particulars were too long here to rehearſe, conſidering how this Book is overcharged as ye ſee already; and eſpecially ſeeing the fame to be notified in our firſt Edition ſufficiently, as is aforeſaid. Wherefore omitting the rehearsal of theſe ſaid Letters, and referring the Reader to the Book aforeſaid, I will only repeat one Letter of the ſaid Biſhop, with the answers of the Lord Protector unto the ſame; the contents whereof are theſe as follow.

Vaughan.

MAſter Vaughan, after my right hearty commendations: In my laſt Letters to my Lord Protector, ſignifying, according to the general commandment by Letters given to all Juſtices of Peace, the ſtate of this Shire, I declared (as I ſuppoſed true) the Shire to be in good order, quiet and conformity, for I had not then heard of any alteration in this Shire, which the ſaid Letters of commandment diſſidit. Now of late within theſe two days I have heard of a great and detestable (if it be true that is told me) innovation in the Town of Portsmouth, where the Images of Chriſt and his Saints have been moſt contemptuouſly pulled down, and ſpitefully handled. Herein I thought good both to write to you and the Mayor, the Kings Maſteſties chief Miniſters, as well to know the truth, as to conſult with you for the Reformation of it, to the intent I may be ſeen to diſcharge my duty, and diſcharging it indeed both to God, and to the Kings Maſteſty, under whom I am here appointed to have Cure, and care to relieve ſuch as be by any ways fallen, and preſerve the reſt that ſtand from like danger.

Ye are a Gentleman with whom I have had acquaintance, and whom I know to be wiſe, and eſteem to have more knowledge, wiſdom and diſcretion than to allow any ſuch enormities, and therefore I do the more willingly conſult with you herein, with requeſt friendly to know of you the very truth in the matter, who be the doers, and the circumſtances of it, and whether ye think the matter ſo far gone with the multitude, and whether the reproof and diſproving of the deed, might without a further danger be enterpriſed in the Pulpit or not, minding, if it may ſo be, to ſend one thither for that purpoſe upon Sunday next coming. I would uſe preaching as it ſhould not be occaſion of any further folly where a folly is begun, and to a multitude, perſuaded in the opinion of deſtruction of Images, I ſhould never preach. For (as Scripture writeth us) we ſhould caſt no precious ſtones before Hogs. Such as be infected with that opinion, they be Hogs and worſe than Hogs; there be any groſſer Beasts than Hogs be, and have been ever ſo taken, and in England they are called Lollards, who denying Images, thought thereunto the Crafts of painting and graving to be generally ſuperfluous and naught, and againſt Gods Law.

In Germany ſuch as maintained that opinion of deſtroying of Images were accounted the dogs caſt out by Luther after he had turned all his brewings in Chriſts Religion, and ſo taken a Hogs meat. For the reproof of whom Luther wrote a Book ſpecially, and I have with mine eyes ſeen the Images ſtanding in all Churches, where Luther was had in eſtimation. For the deſtruction of Images containeth an enterpriſe to ſubvert Religion, and the ſtate of the World with it, and eſpecially the Nobility, who by Images ſet forth and ſpread abroad to be read of all people, their Lineage, Parentage, with remembrance of their ſtate and acts; and the Purſevant carrieth not on his breaſt the Kings name written with ſuch Letters as a few can ſpell, but ſuch as all can read be they never ſo rude, being great known Letters in Images of three Lions, and three flowers de luce, and other beaſts holding robes Arms. And be that cannot read the Scripture written about the Kings Great Seal, yet be can read St. George on Horſeback on the one ſide, and the King ſitting in his Maſteſty on the other ſide, and readeth ſo much written in theſe Images, as if he be an honeſt man, he will put off his Cap, and although if the Seal were broken by chance, he would and might make a Candle of it, yet he would not be rodded to have broken the Seal for that purpoſe, or to call it a piece of wax only whiſt it continueth whole. And if by reviling of ſtocks and ſtones, in which matter Images be graven, the ſetting of the truth to be read of all men, ſhall be contemned, how ſhall ſuch writing continue in honour as is compriſed in clout and pitch, whereof and whereupon our Books be made, ſuch as few can ſkill of, and not the hundredth part of the Realm? And if we a few that can read, becauſe we read in one ſort of Letters, ſo priviledged as they have many reliſts, ſhall pull away the Books of the reſt, and would have our letters only in eſtimation, and blind all them, ſhall not they have juſt cauſe to miſtruſt what is meant? And if the Croſſe be a truth, and if it be true that Chriſt ſuffered, why may we not have a writing thereof, ſuch as all can read, that is to ſay an Image? If this opinion ſhould proceed, when the Kings Maſteſty hereafter ſhould ſhow his perſon, his lively Image, the honour due by Gods Law among ſuch might continue, but as for the Kings Standards, his Banners, his Arms ſhould hardly continue in their due reverence for fear of Lollards Idolatry, which they gather upon Scripture beaſtly, not only untruly. The Scripture reproverh falſe Images made of ſtocks and ſtones, and ſo it doth falſe men made of fleſh and bones.

When the Emperors money was ſhewed to Chriſt where-in was the Image of the Emperor, Chriſt contemned not that Image calling it an Idol, nor noted that money to be againſt Gods Law, becauſe it had an Image in it, as though it were againſt the precept of God, Thou ſhalt have no graven Image; but taught them good civility, in calling it the Emperors Image, and bad them uſe the money as it was ordered to be uſed in his right uſe.

(KING)

There is no Scripture that reproveth truth, and all Scripture reproveth fallhood. False writings, false books, false images, and false men, all be naught, to be contemned and despised, as for paper, ink, parchment, bones, wood, bones, A.B. of the Chancery hand, and A. B. of the Secretary hand, a Letter of Germany fashion, or of any other form, they be all of one estimation, and may be, of man inclining to the Devil, used for fallhood, or applying to Gods gracious calling, used to set forth truth. It is a terrible matter to think, that this false opinion conceived against Images should trouble any mans head: and such as I have known vexed with that Devil (as I have known some) be nevertheles wondrously obstinate in it; and if they can find one that can sell Latine to help forth their madness, they be more obstinate than ever were the Jews, and slander whatsover is said to them for their relief. Of this sort I know them to be, and therefore if I wist there were many of that sort with you, I would not irritate them by preaching without fruit, but labour for reformation to my Lord Protector. But if you thought there might be other ways used first to a good effect, I would follow your advice, and proceeding with you and the Mayor, with both your helps to do that may ly in me to the redress of the matter, which I take to be such an enterprise against Christ Religion, as there cannot be a greater by man excogitate with the Devils insigation, and at this time much hurtful to the common estate, as ye can of your wisdom consider. Whom I heartily desire and pray to send me answer by this Bearer to these my Letters, to the intent I may use my self in sending of a Preacher thither, or writing to the Lord Protector, as the case shall require accordingly. And thus fare you heartily well.

From my house at Wolvelay, the 3d of May, 1547.
Steph. Wint.

A Letter of the Lord Protector, answering to the Letter above.

After hearty commendations, I received of late two Letters from your Lordship, the one inclosed in a Letter of Master Vaughan's to us, and directed to him, the other directed straight unto us, very wittily and learnedly written, whereby we do perceive how earnest you are that no Innovations should be had. The which mind of yours, as we do highly esteem and allow, proceeding from one that would quietly, so we would likewise wish, that you should take good heed that too much fear of Innovation or disturbance doth not cause both of them to be. Many times in an Host, he that crieth Enemies, Enemies, when there be none, causeth not only disturbance, but sometimes a Mutiny or Rebellion to be made; and he that for fear of a sickness to come, taketh unadvisedly a purgation, sometimes maketh himself sick indeed. We perceive by the said your Letters, that heinous facts and words have been brought to your ears, than there was cause why; and those facts which were punishable, be already by him redress.

For Images.

For the matter of Images, an order was taken in the late King of famous memory, our Sovereign Lords days. When the abused Images (yet lurking in some places by negligence of them who should ere this time have looked unto the same) be now abolished, let not that be a matter of the abolishing of all Images. Though Felons and Adulterers be punished, all men be not slain. Though the Images which did adulterate Gods glory be taken away, we may not think by and by all manner of Images to be destroyed. Yet after our advice, better it were for a time to abolish them all, than for that the dead Images, the Kings loving Subjects, being faithful and true to the Kings Majesty, should be put to variance and disturbance. With quietness the Magistrates and Rulers shall keep them well in order, whom contentious Preachers might irritate and provoke to disorder and strife. So it must be provided that the Kings Majesties Images, Arms and Ensigns, should be honoured and worshipped after the decent order and invention of human laws and ceremonies; and nevertheless that other Images, contrary to Gods Ordinances and Laws, should not be made partakers of that reverence, adoration and invocation, (which forbidden by God) should derogate his honour, and be occasion to accumulate Gods wrath upon us. Where they be taken for a remembrance, it maketh no great matter though they stand still in the Church or Marketstead, following the late King of famous memory his counsel and order; yet more gentleness was shewed to those Books of Images, than to the true and unfeigned Books of Gods Word, both being abused, the one with idolatry, the other with contention. The Scripture was removed for a time from certain persons, and almost from all: The Images were left still to them who most did abuse them, the thing being yet closed from them which should teach the use. Wherefore it may appear unto us meet, more diligent heed to be taken that the abused before be not abused again, the advantage of some Priests, simplicity of Laymen, and great inclination of mans nature to Idolatry, giving cause thereto.

They that condemn Images, because the matter that they are made of is but vile, as stocks and stones, may likewise despise printing in Paper because the ink hath Pich in it, and the Paper is made of old Rags. And if they be both alike, it might be reasoned why a man should be more aggrieved, that an Image of Wood, though it were of Saint Ann, or St. Margaret should be burned, than he will that the Bible, wherein the undoubted Word of God is comprised, should be torn in pieces, burned or made paste of. Nor do we now speak of false Bibles, not false Gospels, but of the very true Gospel, either in Latine, Greek or English, which we see every day done, and sometime commanded, because the Translator displease us; and yet herein no man exclaimeth of a terrible and detestable fact done. But let one Image either for age, and because it is worn-eaten, or because it hath been foolishly abused, be burnt or abolished, by and by some men are in exceeding rage, as though not a stock or a stone, but a true Saint of flesh and bone should be cast into the fire, which were a detestable and a terrible sight. We cannot see but that Images may be counted marvellous Books to whom we have kneeled, whom we have kissed, upon whom we have rubbed our Beads and Fingertchiefs, unto whom we have lighted Candles, of whom we have asked pardon and help, which thing hath seldom been seen done to the Gospel of God, or the very true Bible. For who kisseth that but the Priest or the Mats, at a painted Picture, or in such a ceremony? Or who kneeleth unto it, or setteth a Candle before it? And yet it seeth or heareth, as well as the Images or Pictures either of S. John, or our Lady, or Christ.

Indeed Images be great Letters; yet as big as they be, we have seen many which have read them amiss. And belike they be so likely to be read amiss, that God himself, fearing the Jews to become evil Readers of them, generally did forbid them. Nor is it any great marvel though in reading of them the lay-people are many times deceived, when your Lordship (as appeareth) hath not truly read a most true and a most common Image. Your Lordship hath found out, in the Kings Highness Great Seal, St. George on Horseback, which the Graver never made in it, nor the Sealer ever sealed with it; and this Inscription is not very little, and if it were, it could not escape your Lordships eyes. As the Inscription testifieth, the Kings Image is on both the sides; on the one side as in War the chief Captain; on the other side as in Peace the liege Sovereign; in harness with his Sword drawn to defend his Subjects; in his Robes in the Seat of Justice with his Scepter rightfully to rule and govern them, as he whom both in Peace and War we acknowledge our most natural and chiefest Head, Ruler, and Governour. If it were St. George (my Lord) where is his Spear and Dragon? And why should the Inscription round about tell an untruth, and not agree to the Image? Yet it is called sometimes so of the rude and ignorant people; but not by and by, that that is commonly called so, is always true. And some have thought that by like deceiving, as your Lordship herein appeareth to have been deceived, the Image of Bellerophon or Perseus was turned first and appointed to be St. George, and of Poliphemus, of Hercules, or of some other Colossus, to be St. Christopher, because authenticall Histories have not fully proved their two lives. But those be indifferent to be true or not true, either thus invented upon some device, or rising of a true fact or History, and whether it were true or not, it maketh no great matter.

Dislike of
of Images.

It were hardly done indeed my Lord, if that you, and a few which can read, should take away from the unlearned multitude their Books of their Images: but it were more hardly done, if that you or a few which can read in one or two Languages, (as Greek and Latin) the word of God, and have had thereby many reliefs and privileges, should pull away the English Books from the rest which only understand English; and would have only your Letters of Greek and Latin in estimation, and bind all them which understand not these languages, from the knowledge of Gods Word. And indeed, my Lord, by your saying they have just occasion to suspect what is meant.

What you mean by true Images and false Images, it is not so easy to perceive. If they be only false Images, which have nothing that they represent, as Saint Paul writeth, An Idol is nothing, (because there is no such god) and therefore the Crois can be no false Image, because it is true that Christ suffered upon it: then the Image of the Sun and the Moon were no Idols, for such things there be as the Sun and the Moon, and they were in the Image then so represented, as Painting and Carving doth represent them. And the Image of Nimrod and Cesar, and (as some write) the Images of all the twelve chosen gods (as they called them) were the Images of once living men. And it might be said that the Image of God the Father hath no such eyes, nose, lips, and a long gray beard, with a furred robe, nor ever had, as they carve and paint him to have. But if that be a false Image and an Idol which is otherwise worshipped and accepted than it ought to be, as the Brazen Serpent, being a true Image and representation of Christ, by abuse was made an Idol; it may be thought in times past, and peradventure now at this time, in some places, the Images not only of St. John, or St. Anne, but of our Lady and Christ be false Images and Idols, representing to foolish, blind and ignorant mens hearts and thoughts, that which was not in them, and they ought not to be made for. The which were by you (my Lord) to have been removed sooner, and before that the Captain there should have need to have done it. But if your Lordship be slack in such matters, he that removeth false Images and Idols abused, doth not a thing worthy of blame.

Christ called not the money, having Cesars Image in it, an Idol, when it was used to lawful uses, and to pay the due tribute wital. But when a man doth not use those Images graven in money to do his neighbour good, and the Commonwealth service, St. Paul Christ's Disciple called that covetousness, and the serving and bondage to Idols. So that even in money may be Idolatry, if we make too much of those Images which Christ here doth not reprehend. There be some so ticklish, and so fearful one ways, and so tender stomached, that they can abide no old abuses to be reformed, but think every reformation to be a capital enterprise against all Religion and good order; as there be on the contrary side some too rash, who having no consideration what is to be done, headlong will set upon every thing. The Magistrates duty is betwixt these, so in a mean to see and provide that old dotting should not take further or deeper root in the Commonwealth, neither ancient error overcome the seen and tried truth, nor long abuse, for the age and space of time only, still be suffered; and yet all these with quietness and gentleness, and without all contention, if it were possible to be reformed. To the which your Lordship, as a man to whom God hath given great qualities of wit, learning, and persuasion, could bring great help and furtherance, if it were your pleasure, with great thanks of men and reward of God. The which thing is our full desire and purpose, and our hearty and daily prayer to God, that in the Kings Majesties time, whose Majesties Reign God preserve, all abuses with wisdom reformed, Christs Religion with good and politic order of the Commonwealth, without any contention and strife among the Kings subjects, might flourish and daily increase. And this to your Lordships Letter sent to Matter Vaughan of Portsmouth.

The Image of the Father is false, and therefore by Winchester's reason to be abolished.

1 Cor. 8. Winchester's distinction between true and false Images asured.

If it be against reason, that learned men should take from the unlearned the books of their Images, much more is it against reason, to take from them the books of Gods word.

Winchester to the Lord Protector.

MAY it please your Grace to understand, that I have noted some points in your Lord of St. Davids Sermon, which I send unto you herewith, whereby to declare unto you some part what I think, for the whole I cannot express: somewhat I shall incurber you with my babbling, but he hath incumbered some friends more with his rattling. And alas, my Lord, this is a piteous case, that having so much business as ye have, these inward disorders should be added unto them, to the courage of such as would this Realm any ways evil. For this is the thing they would desire, with hope thereby to disorder this Realm, being now a time rather to repair that which needeth reparation, than to make any new buildings which they pretend. Quiet, tranquillity, unity, and concord shall maintain estimation. The contrary may animate the enemy to attempt that which was never thought on, which God forbid. There was never attempt of alteration made in England, but upon comfort of discord at home, and we be to them that mind it. If my Lord of St. Davids, or such others have their head cumbered with any new Platform, I would wish they were commanded, between this and the Kings Majesties full age, to draw the Plat, diligently to hew the stones, dig the sand, and chop the Chalk in the unreasonable time of building, and when the Kings Majesty cometh to full age, to prevent their labours to him, and in the mean time not to disturb the State of the Realm, whereof your Grace is Protector, but that you may in every part of Religion, Laws, Lands, and Decrees (which four contain the State) deliver the same unto our Sovereign Lord, according unto the trust you be put in, which shall be much to your honour, and as all honest men wish and desire. To which desired effect there can be nothing so noisome and contrarious, as trouble and disquiet. Wherein your Grace shall be specially troubled, as on whose shoulders all the weight lyeth, and whatsoever shall happen amiss by the faults of other, shall be imputed to your Grace, as doer thereof, or wanting foresight in time to withstand the same. And albeit that you mind not to be faulty in either, yet if the effect be not to the Realm as it were to be withheld, the Prince though he were of age should be excused, and the Governors bear the blame. And this is the infelicity of preeminence and authority, and specially in this Realm, as stories make mention, which should not discourage you, for you need fear nothing without, if quiet be reserved at home; and at home if the beginning be refuted, the intended folly may easily be interrupted. But if my Brother of St. Davids, may like a Champion with his sword in his hand, make entry for the rest, the door of licence opened, there shall more by folly thrust in with him than your Grace would wish. Thus, as I think, I write homely to your Grace, because you were content I should write wherein I consider only to have all things well. And because your Grace is the Protector, and the chief Director of the Realm, to prevent unto your wisdom what my folly is, I have been oftentimes blamed for fearing over much, and yet I have had an hiding that they that so blamed me, feared even as much as I. Being in the state that you be in, it shall be ever commendable to foresee the worst. In quiet ye be strong, in trouble ye be greatly weak, and bring your self in danger of one part, when parties be, therewith one to scourge the other. Whereas in concord they be both yours, in an honest, reverent, lovely fear to do their duty, which I doubt not your wisdom can consider. And consider also how noisome any other outward incurber might be in the time of the minority of our Sovereign Lord. I told the Emperors Council, That our late Sovereign Lord did much for the Emperor, to enter War with him, and to put his Realm in his old days in the adventure of fortune, whether he should enjoy it or no, for that is the nature of War. And sometime the contemned and abject have had the upper hand. And when ye administer the Realm for another, it were a marvelous question of him that shall enjoy the Realm to say, What meant you in the time of administration to adventure my Realm? Why took ye not rather for the time of my minority any Peace, whatsoever it were, which is better than the best War, as some men have written? I know you have au-

Mr. Barlow.

Where quiet and tranquillity goeth with right form, and religion, by all means it is to be maintained, but contrary, where Gods religion is lacketh, there the second Table must give place to the first. This Bishop's reason is as one having more respect to worldly tranquillity than to Gods glory.

Why Winchester's unpertinence of giving false counsel, and fit the Lord Protector to choose all good men, and all goodly counsel.

Edw. 6.
thority sufficient, and wisdom plenty, and yet being entered to write, I forget for the time what ye be, and commune with you as I were talking at Brussels with you, devising of the world at large. And if I were sworn to say what I think of the state of the world I would for a time let Scots be Scots, with disdain to have them, unless it were by conquest, which shall be a goodly enterprise for our young Malier when he cometh to age. And in the mean time prepare him money for it, and let the Realm in an order which it hath need of. And for a stay, if the Emperor would offer the King of Romans Daughter, as he did; do with him in our Maiers minority, as he did with us in his, whereby all this hath chanced unto him. And by this alliance your estimation shall encrease, and our Sovereign Lords surely not a little encrease and be augmented. For of France it must be taken for a rule, They be so wanton, they cannot do well longer than they see how they may be scourged if they do not. Here is all the wit that I have, which I offer unto you upon this occasion of writing, and shall pray God to put into your mind that which shall be for the best, as I trust he will; and in the mean time to extinguish this barbarous contention at home, which can serve only to do hurt, and no good. I had fished a Letter to Malier Ridley, which I send unto your Grace, and encounter you with these melancholly writings, ingendered of this fondness, which be not worth the reading. And so it may like you to use them, for having heard that which ye have laid unto me, and otherwise heard and seen what you do, I shall go occupy my wit in other matters, and now such as have fond enterprises shall see that I letted not their follies, which they called Gods Word. But for his time the King our Sovereign Lord that dead is, and after his time you have done much to your honour and reputation; howsoever all shall be here not contented; which miscontentation hath been so fond in some, as they have burst out and wished, that they might without breach of his Laws kill me; which is to me a token of a marvellous fury, which hath been cause why I am glad both to depart hence, and to depart the sooner, and pray to God to order all things for the best, With preservation of our Sovereign Lord, and increase of your Graces honour. At my House in Southwark, the last of February.

Your Graces humble Beadman, S. W.

Another Letter of S. W.

After my humble commendations to your Grace, it may like the same to understand, I have seen of late two Books set forth in English by Bale, very pernicious, seditious, and slanderous. And albeit that your Grace needeth not mine advertisement in that matter, yet I am so bold to trouble your Grace with my Letters for mine own commodity, wherewith to fastidie mine own conscience, to write and say as becometh me in such matters, which I desire your Grace to take in good part. For it grieveth me not a little to see, so soon after my late Sovereign Lord and Maiers death, a Book spread abroad more to his dishonour (if a Prince honour may be by vile inferior subjects impeached) than professed enemies have imagined, to note a woman to have suffered under him as a Martyr, and the woman therewith to be by Bales own elucidation (as he calleth it) so set forth and painted as the appeareth to be, and is boasted to be a Sacramentary, and by the Laws worthy (as the suffered) the pains of death; such like things have by stealth in our late Sovereign Lords days gone abroad as they do now. And as I am wont in such cases to speak, I keep my wont to write to your Grace now, in whose hands I know the state of the Realm to be for the time in Government, and to whom for respects of old acquaintance I wish all felicity. In these matters of Religion I have been long exercised, and have (thanks be to God) lived so long as I have seen them thoroughly tried, and besides that I have learned in written Books of authority, I have perceived by Books written without authority, as by Malier Bale, Joy, and other, and especially as Bale useth now, that Scripture doth by abuse, service to the right hand and the left at once, in so much as at one time Bale praileth Luther, and setteth his death forth in English, with commendation as of a Saint, which Luther (whatsoever he was otherwise) stoutly affirmed the Presence really of Christs natural Body in the Sacrament of the Altar. And yet Bale the noble Clerk would have Anne Aiskew, blasphemously denying the Presence of Christs natural Body, to be taken for a Saint also. So as Bales Saints may vary in Heaven, if they chance not by the way; which might suffice to disprove the mans credit, if thwarting talk were more desired of many than the truth indeed, which truth was supposed to have been both in writing and exercise well established, long before our late Lords death; and Bale and his adherents in their madnes plainly repoved and condemned. I cannot forget, your Grace told me you would suffer no innovation: and indeed if you deliver this Realm to the King at eighteen years of age, as the King his Father, whose soul God awhile left it, as I trust you shall, the act is so honourable and good, as it were pety to trouble it with any innovation, which were a charge to your Grace more than needed, being already burdened heavily. And albeit in the Commonwealth every man hath his part, yet as God hath placed you, the matter is (under the Kings Majesty) chiefly yours, and as it were yours alone. Every man hath his eye directed unto you both here and abroad, you shall shadow mens doings if they be done, which is one incommodity of high rule. And for my part besides my duty to the Kings Majesty and the Realm, I would that your Grace in whom since your Government I have found much gentleness and humanity, had as much honour with good success as ever any had, and pray to God that men would let your Grace alone and suffer the Realm in the time of your Government in quiet among our selves, whereby we may be the more able to resist foreign trouble, which your Grace doth prudently foresee. Certain Printers, Players, and Preachers make a wonderment, as though we knew not yet how to be justified, nor what Sacraments we should have. And if the agreement in Religion made in the time of our late Sovereign Lord be of no force in their judgment, what establishment could any new agreement have? And every uncertainty is noisome to any Realm. And where every man will be Maler, there must needs be uncertainty. And one thing is marvellous that at the same time it is taught that all men be liars, at the self same time almost every man would be believed; and amongst them Bale, when his untruth appeareth evidently in setting forth the Examination of Anne Aiskew, which is utterly misreported. I beseech your Grace to pardon my babling with you. But I see my late Sovereign Lord and Maler slandered by such simple persons, Religion assaulted, the Realm troubled, and peaceable men disquieted, with occasion given to enemies to point and say, that after *Wickliff*s strange teaching in the Sacraments of Christs Church hath vexed other, it is finally turned unto us to molest and scourge us, for other fruit cannot Bales teaching have, ne the teaching of such other as go about to trouble the agreement established here. In which matter I dare not desire your Grace specially to look earnestly unto it, lest I should seem to note in you that which becometh me not. And I know that your Grace being otherwise occupied, these things may creep in as it hath been heretofore; sometime it may be hard for your Grace to find out or pull out the root of this naughtiness: but yet I am so bold to write of these, of mine own stomach, which have ever used, for discharge of my self, to say and write in time and place as I thought might do good for relief of the matter, remitting the right to the disposition of God, who hath wrought wonders in these matters, since they were first moved, and given me such knowledge and experience in them, as I ought to take them (as they be) for corruption and untruth, I mean knowledge and experience of them that be chief stirres, to infect with untruth, as they cannot speak or report truly in common matters. The pretence is of the spirit, and all is for the flesh, women, and meat, with liberty of hand and tongue, a dissolution and dissipation of all estates, clean contrarious to the place God hath called your Grace unto. For it tendeth all to confusion and disorder, which is the effect of untruth.

Bale hath set forth a prayer for the Duke John of Salisbury, wherein the Duke remitteth to Gods judgment to be shewed here in this world the justness of his cause concerning Religion, and desireth God, if his cause be not good, to order him to be taken, and to be spoiled of his honour and possessions, with many such gay words whereby to tempt God: since which prayer the Duke is indeed taken as all the world faith, and at the time of his taking, as the account is made, such strangeness in the Sun, as we saw it here, as hath not been seen. They happened both together, this we know, and be both marvellous; but whether the one were a token ordered to concur with the other, God knoweth, and man cannot define. Many Commonwealths have continued without the Bishop of Rome's Jurisdiction, but without true Religion, and with such opinions as Germany maintained, no estate hath continued in the circuit of the world to us known since Christ came.

For the Turks and Tartars Government is as it were a continual war, and they uphold their rule with subduing of Nobility by fire and sword. Germany with their new Religion could never have stood, though the Emperor had let them alone: for if it be perverted the understanding of Gods Law to be at large in women and children, whereby they may have the rule of that, and then Gods Law must be the rule of all, is not hereby the rule of all brought into their hands? These of some will be called witty reasons, but they be indeed truths children, and so is all the eloquence, which some (to dispraise me) say I have, whatsoever they say of me. For truth is of it self, in a right meaning mans mouth, more eloquent than forged matters can with study bring forth. What Richmes be set forth to deprave the Lent, and how fond (saying your Graces honour) and foolish? and yet the people pay money for them, and they can serve for nothing, but to learn the people to rail, and to cause such as used to make provision for fish against Lent, fearing now in Lent to be so sick as the Rime purporteth and like to die indeed, to forbear to make their accustomed provision for the next year.

And thereto shall it come if the common diet be not certain. For the Fishmonger will never hope to have good sale, when the Butcher may with Flesh out-face him. And Fish is that great treasure of this Realm, and food inestimable. And these good words I give, although I love it not my self: for such as love not Fish should nevertheless commend it to other, to the intent the Flesh by them forborn might be to such as love it only the more plenty. The publick defamation and trifling with Lent is a marvellous matter to them that would say evil of this Realm; for there is nothing more commended unto us Christian men in both the Churches of the Greeks and Latins, than Lent is, if all men be not liars. In the King our late Sovereign Lords days this matter was not thus spoken of. And I think our enemies would with we had no Lent. Every Country hath its peculiar inclination to naughtiness: England and Germany unto the Belly, the one in Liquor, the other in Meat; France a little beneath the Belly; Italy to amities and pleasures devised; and let an English Belly have a further advancement, and nothing can stay it. When I was Purveyor for the Seas, what an exclamation was there (as your Grace shewed me) of the Bishops fasting-day, as they called Wednesday, and Winchester, Winchester, grand mercy for your Wine, I beseech your heart for your water? Was not that Song, although it was in sport, a signification how both men be to have their license restrained? or their accustomed fare abated? unless it were in extremum necessity, I hear say that the Lent is thus spoken of by Joseph and Tongue, with other new (whom I know not) as being one of Christs Miracles, which God ordained not man to imitate and follow, at which teaching all the world will laugh. For Christian men have Christ for an example in all things, both to use the world as he did only for necessity, and to contemn the world as he did, and in case to refuse it, and chuse the vile death, as he did the death of the Crois, which things he did like a Master most perfect, for he was very God, and we must endeavour our selves in the use of his gifts to follow that he did, not to fast forty days without meat as Christ did, for we be but prentices, and carry about a ruinous carcass, that must have some daily reparation with food: but yet was there never any that said, how therefore we should do nothing, because we cannot do all, and take Christs Fast for a miracle only. And yet all that follow Christ truly, they work daily Miracles, in subduing and conforming by Gods grace their sensual appetites, and humble obeying to the will of God, which no man can of himself do. And Christ promised that his true servants should work the works that he did, and greater works also. Wherefore it is a slender matter to say, Lent was one of Christs Miracles, for so it was to love his enemies, and specially those that scourged and bobbed him; which may not be (if that a legation hath place) taught Christian men to follow, because it was a Miracle, as they might say: it were more tolerable to forget Lent (as Poggio telleth) of a Priest in the Mountains, that knew not how the year went about, and when the Weather opened, and he went abroad, and perceived his neighbours were towards Palm Sunday, he devised an excuse to his Parish, and bad them prepare therefore, for indeed the year had somewhat slipped him, but he would fashion the matter so, as they should be as soon at Easter as the rest; and thus did he pass over Lent with much less slander, than to teach it for a Doctrine, that Lent was one of Christs Miracles, and therefore not to be imitated of us. For although it was indeed a great Miracle, (as all Christs doings were) yet was it not a greater Miracle, nor more against mans nature, than to love them that laboured and were hostile to take away the natural life of his Manhood. For as the nature of man desireth relief, so doth he abhor destruction or hurt. In will and desire men follow Christ in all things; in execution they cannot: for we have brittle Vessels, and God giveth his gifts to men, as he seeth expedient for his Church; so as men cannot heat the lame when they will, as Christ did when he would, but as God shall think profitable for the edification of the Flock assembled.

Gregory Nazianzen speaketh of some that enterprised to imitate Christs Fast above their power, whose immoderate zeal he doth not disallow, nor requiring of all men to do, for that is an extremity, ne yet assailing the matter, as our new Schoolmen do, that Christian men should let Christs Fast alone as a Miracle; which manner of solution I heard a good Fellow make, when it was told him he might not revenge himself, And when he was stricken on the one ear, he should put forth the other. I am, quoth he, a man, I am not God, if Christ being God did so, he might (quoth he) if it had pleased him, have done otherwise. And so when it hath been alledged, that Christ fasted forty days, he might (quoth he) have eaten if he had list; these triflings in sport might be drawn to grave speech, if Christian men shall refuse to follow Christ in Miracles.

For all his life was Miracles, and his love that is our Badge most miraculous of all, to die for his enemies. I beseech your Grace to pardon me, for I am like one of the Common-house, that when I am in my tale, think I should have liberty to make an end, and specially writing to your Grace, with whom I account I may be bold, assuring you it proceedeth of a zeal towards you to whom I wish well, whose intent although it be such as it ought to be, and as it pleased you to shew me it was, yet are such things spread abroad whereof the evil willers of the Realm will take courage, and make account (although it be wrong) that all goeth on Wheels. If any man had either fondly or indifferently spoken of Lent to engrave it to be an importable burthen, I would wish his reformation; for I have not learned that all men are bound to keep the Lent in the form received, but this I reckon, that no Christian man may contemn the form received, being such a devout and profitable imitation of Christ to celebrate his Fast, and in that time such as have been in the rest of the year, worldly to prepare themselves to come, as they should come, to the Feast of Easter, whereof St. Chrysostome speaketh expressly. And for avoiding contempt, a licence truly obtained of the superior serveth. And so I heard the Kings Majesty our Sovereign Lord declare when your Grace was present. And therefore he himself was very scrupulous in granting of Licences; and to declare that himself contemned not the Fast, he was at charge to have (as your Grace knoweth) the Lent daily prepared, as if it had been for himself, and the like hereof I hear say your Grace hath ordered for the Kings Majesty that now is, which agreeth not with certain preaching in this matter, ne the Rimes set abroad. Lent is among Christian men a godly Fast to exercise men to forbear, and in England both godly and politick, such as without confusion we cannot forbear, as the experience shall shew, if it be ever attempted, which God forbid. And yet Lent is buried in Rime, and Stephen

KING Stockfish bequeathed, not to me, though my name be noted, wherewith for mine own part I cannot be angry, for that is mitigated by their fondness. But I would desire of God to have the strength of this Realm increased with report of concord, which doth quench many vain devices and imaginations.

And if all men be liars, as it is now to my understanding strangely published, methink Bale and such new men, as be new liars, should be most abhorred and detested, and so much the more dangerous as they be new. That which in Italy and France is a matter of combat, is now found to be improprie to all men. God grant the truth to be desired of all men truly. But as one asked, when he saw an old Philosopher dispute with another, what they talked on; and it was answered how the old man was disputing what was virtue: it was replied, If the old man yet dispute of virtue, when will he use it? So it may be said in our Religion, If we be yet searching for it, when shall we begin to put it in execution? I would make an end of my Letters, and cannot, wherein I account my self faulty. And though I may err, as every man may, yet I lie not, for I say as I think, forasmuch as I have said, and further think your Grace hath no trouble trouble-some, but this matter of Religion unseasonably brought into the defamation of our late Sovereign Lords acts, doings, and Laws. I beseech your Grace take my meaning and words in good part, and pardon my boldness, which growth of the familiarity I have heretofore had with your Grace, which I cannot forget. And thus inforcing my self to an end, I shall pray to Almighty God to preserve your Grace in much felicity, with increase of honour and achieving of your hearts desire.

At Winchester the one and twentieth of March.

Your Graces Humble Beadman,
S. W.

The Letter of the Lord Protector, answering to Winchester.

YOUR Letters dated the one and twentieth day of May, as concerning two Books new set forth by one Bale, and certain Sermons preached here, were with convenient speed delivered unto us. And like as in your Letters to Edward Vaughan of Portsmouth, so in those to us we perceive that you have a vigilant and diligent eye, and very fearful of innovation: which as it cannot be blamed, proceeding of one which is desirous of quiet, good order and continuance of the godly state of this Realm; so we do marvel that so soon, so far off, and so plainly, you can hear tell and say of so many things done here, which indeed we being here and attendant upon the same cannot yet be advertised of. The world never was so quiet or so unite, but that privily or openly those three which you write of, Printers, Players, and Preachers, would set forth somewhat of their own heads, which the Magistrates were unawares of. And they which already be banished and have forsaken the Realm, as suffering the last punishment, be boldest to set forth their mind; and dare use their extreme license or liberty of speaking, as out of the hands or rule of correction, either because they be gone, or because they be hid. There have foolish and naughty Rimes and Books been made and set forth, of the which as it appeareth you have seen more than we and yet to our knowledge too many be bought; but yet after our mind it is too fore and too cruelly done to lay all those to our charge, and to ask as it were account of us of them all. In the most exact cruelty and tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, yet Pesquill (as we hear say) writeth his mind, and many times against the Bishops tyranny, and sometime toucheth other great Princes, which thing for the most part he doth falsely, not that the Bishop alloweth Pesquill's Rimes and Verses, specially against himself, but because he cannot punish the Author, whom either he knoweth not, or hath not. In the late Kings days of famous memory, who was both a learned, wise, and politic Prince, and a diligent executor of his Laws; and when your Lordship was most diligent in the same, yet as your Lordship it self writeth, and it is too manifest to be unknown, there were that wrote such lewd Rimes and Plays as you speak of, and some against the Kings proceedings, who were yet unpunished, because they were unknown or forgotten. And when we do weigh the matter, we do very much marvel, why that about Jack of Lents lewd Ballad, and certain, as it was reported unto us, godly Sermons (which be evil in your Letters joyned together) you be so earnest, when against Dr. Smith's Book, being a man learned in the Doctors and Scripture, which made so plain against the Kings Highness authority, and for the furtherance of the Bishop of Rome's usurped power, your Lordship neither wrote nor said any thing. And as it appeared you be so angry with his retraction (which frankly without fear, dread, compulsion, or imprisonment, only with learning and truth overcome, he came unto) that you cannot abide his beginning, although having the very words of Scripture. Except peradventure you think that the saying of David, Omnis homo mendax, cannot be interpreted, Every man as a liar, which howsoever your Lordship taketh it at pleasure, it appeareth unto us them of him taken but godly, to declare the infirmity of a man, and the truth of God and his word. And we are not able to reason so Clerkly with you, and yet we have heard of the subtil difference of lying and telling of a lie, or as it is in Latin called, mentiri and mendacium dicere: but if your Lordship be loth to be counted mendax, which belike he hath interpreted a liar, or a lying man, and think it a matter of combat, he was deceived in the interpretation, and it is a matter for Clerks to dispute of; we would have wished your Lordship to have written against his Book before, or now with it, if you think that to be defended which the Author himself refuseth to aver: your Lordship writeth earnestly for Lent which we go not about to put away, no more than when Dr. Smith wrote so earnestly that every man should be obedient to the Bishops; The Magistrates by and by went not about to bring Kings and Princes and other under their subjection. Writers write their fantasie, my Lord, and Preachers preach what either liketh them, or what God putteth in their heads. It is not by and by done that is spoken. The people buyeth those foolish Ballads of Jack-a-Lent. So bought they in times past Pardons, and Carols, and Robin Hood's Tales. All be not wise men, and the foolisher a thing is, to some (although not to the more part) it is the more pleasant and meet; and peradventure of the Sermons there is, and indeed there is (if it be true that we have heard) otherwise spoken and reported to you, than it was of the Preachers there and then spoken or meant. Lent remaineth still my Lord, and shall God willing till the Kings Highness, with our advice and the residue of his Graces Council, take another order, although some light and lewd men do bury it in writing; even as the Kings Majesty remaineth Head of the Church, although through sinister ways, and by subtil means some Traytors have gone about, and daily do, to abuse the Kings Majesties Supremacy, and bring in the Bishop of Rome's Tyranny, with other Superstition and Idolatry. On both sides great heed is to be taken, and as your Lordship writeth, we are set in a painful room to reform all lightness and lewdness, to the which we do endeavour our self to the best of our power, although not so cruelly and fiercely as some peradventure would wish, yet not so loosely that there needeth such exclamations or great fear to be. We do study to do all things temperately, and with quiet and good order. And we would with nothing more than your Lordship to be as ready to the reformation of the one as of the other, that neither Superstition, Idolatry, or Papacy, should be brought in, nor lightness, nor contempt of good order to be maintained. They both take beginning at small things, and increase by little and little at unawares. And quiet may as well be broken with jealousie as negligence, with too much fear or too much patience. No ways worse than when one is over light eared the one way, and deaf on the other side. Rumours by space and times increase naturally, and by that time they come at you, as it appeareth, they be doubled and trebled. We do perceive your diligent eye towards us, and we will with (and trust you have) your heart faithful to us: our most hearty and continual prayer to God is, to leave this Realm to the Kings Highness, at his Graces age by you written, rather more flourishing in men, possessions, wealth, learning, wisdom, and Gods Religion and Doctrine, if it were possible,

Quiet may be as well broken by jealousie as by negligence.

ble and Gods will, than we found it. And that is our whole intent and eſperance, to the which we reſuſe no mans help, as knoweth God, in whom we bid you heartily Farewell.

Another Letter of Winchester to the Lord Protector.

AFter my moſt humble commendations to your good Grace: upon the return of my ſervant Meſſie with your Graces Letters, anſwering to ſuch my Letters, wherein I ſignified the robbing of my Secretary, I read the ſame gladly, as by the contents of the matter I had cauſe ſo to do, which was ſuch a comfortable as I digeſted eaſily the reſt of the great Packet, having been accuſtomed thereunto in the Kings my late Sovereign Lords days, which faſhion of writing his Highneſſe (God pardon his ſoul) called whetting, which was not all the moſt pleaſant unto me at all times, yet when I ſaw in my doings was no hurt, and ſometimes by the occaſion thereof the matter amended, I was not ſo coy as always to reverſe my argument, nor ſo that his affairs went well, did I ever trouble my ſelf, whether he made me a wanton or not. And when ſuch as were privy to his Letters directed unto me, were afraid I had been in high diſpleaſure (for the terms of the Letters founded ſo) yet I my ſelf feared it nothing at all, I eſteemed him, as he was, a wife Prince; and whatever he wrote or ſaid for the preſent, he would after conſider the matter as wiſely as any man, and neither hurt nor inwardly diſfavour him that had been bold with him. Whereof I ſerve for a proof, for no man could do me hurt during his life. And when he gave me the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, he ſaid he had often ſquared with me, but he loved me never the worſe; and for a token thereof gave me the Biſhoprick. And once when he had been vehement with me, in the preſence of the Earl of Wiltſhire, and ſaw me diſſinail with it, he took me apart into his Bed-chamber, and comforted me and ſaid, that his diſpleaſure was not ſo much to me as I did take it, but he miſliked the matter, and he durſt more boldly direct his ſpeech to me, than to the Earl of Wiltſhire, and from that day forward he could not put me out of courage, but if any diſpleaſant words paſſed from him, as they did ſometimes, I ſold them up in the matter; which hindred me a little: for I was reported unto him that I ſhooked not and was ſtubborn, and he had commended unto me certain mens gentle nature (as he called it) that wept at every of his words, and me thought that my nature was as gentle as theirs, for I was ſorry when he was moved; but elſe I know when the diſpleaſure was not juſtly grounded in me, I had no cauſe to take thought, nor was I at any time in all my life miſcontent or grudging at any thing done by him, I thank God for it.

And therefore being thus brought up, and having firſt read your Graces moſt gentle Letters, ſignifying the device of a Proclamation to ſtay theſe rumors, and reading the ſame Proclamation, which my ſervant brought with him; I read with the more quiet your Graces great Letters, and would have layed them up without further answer, were it not that percaſe my ſo doing might be miſtaken. For ghum ſilence may have another conſtruction than frank ſpeech, where a man may ſpeak, as I reckon I may with your Grace, upon confidence whereof I am bold to write thus much for my Declaration touching your Graces Letters of the 27 of May, that how earneſt ſoever my Letters be taken in fearing any innovation, I neither inwardly fear it, neither ſhew any demonstration in mine outward deeds to the world here, or in communication, that I do fear it to be done by authority, but in my ſelf reſiſt the rumors and vain enterpriſes, with confidence in the Truth and your Graces wiſdom; for if I feared it indeed, with perſwaſion it ſhould come to paſſe, I ſhould have ſmall luſt to write in it; but I fear more indeed the trouble that might ariſe by light boldneſſe of other, and the cumber of ſuch matters whiles other outward affairs occupy your Graces mind, than the effect by your direction that hath been talked of abroad; and yet in the writing I do ſpeak as the matter leads, continuing mine old manner to be earneſt, which as ſome men have diſpleaſed, ſo ſome have commended it; and therefore in a good honeſt matter I follow rather mine own inclination, than to take the pains to ſpeak as butter would not melt in my mouth: wherewith I perceive your Grace is not miſcontent, for the which I moſt humbly thank you. And firſt as concerning Perſmouth, I wrote to the Captain and Mayor in the thing as I had information, and by men of credence. And yet I ſuſpended my credit till I had heard from thence, as by my Letters appeareth: and as I was loth to have it ſo, ſo was I loth to believe it. And to ſhew that I feared no innovation by authority, ne regarded any ſuch danger, I went thither my ſelf, and in conſequence was in ſuch familiarity with the Captain, that after he had ſhewed me all the gentle entertainment that he could, he deſired me to make an exhortation to his men as they ſtood handſomely with their weapons, wherewith they had ſhewed warlike feats: which I did, and departed in amity with the Captain and Soldiers, and all the Town; the Captain telling me plainly, he was nothing offended with any thing I had ſaid in my Sermon, ne was there cauſe why he ſhould. But the very act indeed in deſiding the Images had no ſuch ground as Maſter Captain pretended: For I aſked ſpecially for ſuch as had abuſed thoſe Images, and no ſuch could be ſhewed, for that I enquired for openly. And the Image of Saint John the Evangelist ſtanding in the Chancel by the high Altar was pulled down, and a Table of Alabaſter broken: and in it an Image of Chriſt crucified ſo contemptuouſly handled, as was in my heart terrible, to have the one eye boſed out, and the ſide pierced; wherewith men were wonderouſly offended, for it is a very perfection beyond the Sea, uſed in that form where the perſon cannot be apprehended. And I take ſuch an act to be very ſlanderous, and eſteeming the opinion of breaking Images, as unlawful to be had, very dangerous, void of all learning and truth, wrote after my falſhion to the Captain, which Letters I perceive to have come to your Graces hands. I was not very curious in the writing of them, for with me Truth goeth out plainly and roundly, and ſpeaking of the Kings Seal, I uttered the common language I was brought up in, after the old fort. When as I conſider of a good will, the people taking Saint George for a Patron of the Realm under God, and having ſome confidence of ſuccour by Gods ſtrength * derived by him, to encreaſe the eſtimation of their Prince and Sovereign Lord, I called their King on Horſeback in the feat of arms, Saint George on Horſeback; my knowledge was not corrupt, I know it repreſenteth the King, and yet my ſpeech came forth after the common language, wherein I truſt is none offence. For beſides learning, I by experience have known the preheminnence of a King both in war and peace, and yet if I had wiſt my Letter ſhould have comen to your Graces hands to be answered, then I would have been more preſiſe in my ſpeech, than to give occaſion of ſo long an argument therein. As for Saint George himſelf, I have ſuch opinion of him as becometh me. And have read alſo of Bellerophon in Flamer, as they call him, the Father of Tales, but I will leave that matter. And as for Books, let Latin and Greek continue as long as it ſhall pleaſe God, I am almoſt paſt the uſe of them, what ſervice thoſe Letters have done, experience hath ſhewed, and Religion hath continued in them fifteen hundred years; but as for the Engliſh Tongue, it ſelf hath not continued in one form of underſtanding two hundred years, and without Gods work and ſpecial miracles it ſhall hardly continue Religion long, when it cannot laſt it ſelf; and whatever your Graces mind is now in the matter, I know well, that having the Government of the Realm, your Grace will uſe the gift of policy, which is the gift of God.

And even as now at this time Biſhops be refrained by a ſpecial policy to preach only in their Cathedral Churches, (the like whereof hath not been known in my time) ſo upon another occaſion your Grace may percaſe think expedient to reſtrain (further than the Parliament hath already done) the common reading of the Scripture, as is now refrained the Biſhops liberty of preaching, As for the Brazen Serpent, it did not in all mens language repreſent Chriſt, and if I had written to another than your Grace, I might have had the like matter of argument that was taken againſt me of Saint George on Horſeback. For Gregory Nazianzen, chief Divine in the Greek Church, calleth the Serpents death the figure of the death of Chriſt, but not the Serpent to be the figure of Chriſt; and yet when I had done all my argument, I would reſolve

Edw. 6 } as is resolved with me in the speech of S. George on horseback, that the common speech is otherwise, and so it is in saying the Serpent to be a true figure of Christ, and yet Gregory Nazianzen called the Serpent it self Avitruov of Christ in these words Οὗτος ὁ Χρῆς in his Sermon de Paschate:
and yet in Almechorus Domini, we read Arius, Leo, Yermis, spoken of Christ, and some expound the Scripture sicut Moses, &c. after that sort. And as your Grace laid when I was last at your house with the French Ambassador, ye wished him and me together disputing, to see when we would make an end, even so it is in these matters, when they come in an argument, for a by thing (as S. George on Horseback) when it escaped me, or speaking of the Brazen Serpent following a speech not thoroughly discussed, shall be occasion of a digression all out of purpose. And therefore was it a great gift of God, that our late Sovereign Lord (God rest his soul) set these matters in quiet: Who had heard all these reasons touching Images which be now rehearsed in your Graces Letters, and having once My Lord of Canterbury and me present with him alone in his Palace, that they all otherwise
New-Hall, handled that matter at length, and discussed with My Lord of Canterbury the understanding of Gods Commandment to the Jews, so as all the Clerks in Christendom could not attend it. And where as one had denied the Image of the Trinity to be had, by reasons as be touched in your Graces Letters, I heard his Highness answer to them at another time.
And when he had himself specially commanded divers Images to be abolished, yet (as your Grace knoweth) he both ordered, and himself put in execution the kneeling and creeping before the Image of the Crois, and established agreement in that truth through all this Realm, whereby all arguments to the contrary be assailed at once. I would with Images used as the Book of his Highness set forth doth prescribe, and no otherwise. I know your Grace only tempereth me with such reasons as other make unto you, and I am not fully at liberty, although I am bold enough (and some will think too bold) to answer some things as I would to another man mine equal, being so much inferior to your Grace as I am: But me thinketh S. Pauls solution during the Kings Majesties minority should serve instead of all.
Not talem consuetudinem non habemus. We have no such custom in the Church.

When our Sovereign Lord cometh to his perfect age (which God grant) I doubt not but God will reveal that which shall be necessary for the governing of his people in Religion. And if any thing shall be done in the mean time (as I think there shall not) by your Graces direction, he may when he cometh to age say in the rest, as I hear say, he said now of late concerning procession, that in his Fathers time men were wont to follow procession;
upon which the Kings Majesties saying, the procession (as I heard) was well furnished afterwards by your Graces commandment; which speech hath put me in remembrance, that if the Bishops and other of the Clergy should agree to any alteration in Religion to the condemnation of any thing set forth by his Father, whereby his Father might be noted to have wanted knowledge or favour to the truth, what he would say I cannot tell, but he might use a marvelous speech, and for the excellency of his spirit, it were like he would, and having so just a cause against Bishops as he might have, it were to be feared he would. And when he had spoken, then he might by his Laws do more than any of our sort would gladly suffer at these days: For as the allegation of his authority represented by your Grace shall be then answered (as your Grace now writeth unto me) that your Grace only desireth truth according to Gods Scripture, and it may be then said, we Bishops, when we have our Sovereign Lord and head in minority, we fashion the matter as we list, and then some young man that would have a piece of the Bishops Lands shall say: the beauly Bishops have always done so, and when they can no longer maintain one of their pleasures of rule and superiority, then they take another way and let that go, and for the time they be here spend up that they have, which eat you and drink you what he list and we together, with Edamus Civibamus, cras moriemur. And if we shall alledge for our defence the strength of Gods truth, and the plainness of Scripture, with the word of the Lord, and many gay terms, and say we were convinced by Scriptures, such an excellent judgement, as the Kings Majesties like to have, will never credit us in it, nor be abused by such a vain answer. And this is a worldly politick consideration, and at home: For the noise abroad in the world will be more slanderous than this is dangerous. And touching the Bishop of Rome, the doings in this Realm heretohath never done him so much displeasure, as the alteration in Religion, during the Kings Majesties minority, should serve for his purpose: for he wanted not wits to beat into other Princes ears, that where his authority is abolished, there at every change of Gover-nours shall be change in Religion, and that which hath been amongst us by a whole consent established, shall by the presence of another understanding in Scripture straight be brought in question; for they will give it no other name but a pretence, how stiffly soever we will affirm otherwise, and call it Gods word. And here it should be much noted that My Lord of Canterbury, being the high Bishop of the Realm, highly in favour with his late Sovereign Lord, and My Lord of Duresme a man of renowned fame in learning and gravity, both put by him in trust for their Council in the order of the Realm, should so soon forget their old knowledge in Scripture set forth by the Kings Majesties Book, and advise to inveigh such matter of alteration. All which things be (I know well) by your Grace and them considered. And therefore it is to me incredible that ever any such thing should be indeed with effect, whatsoever the lightness of talk shall spread abroad which your Grace hath by Proclamation well stayed.

But if you had not, and the world talked so fast as ever they did, I assure your Grace I would never fear it, as men fear things they like not, unless I saw it in execution; for of this sort I am that in all things I think should not be done in reason, I fear them not, wherewith to trouble me otherwise than to take heed if I can, and to the head Governours (as now to your Grace) shew my mind, and such experience hath every man of me that hath communed with me in any such matters. And therefore albeit your Grace writeth wisely, That over much fear doth hurt, and accelerateth sometime that which was not intended, yet it needs not to me, for I have learned that lesson already, and would a great many more had, which indeed should be great stay. And thus I talk with your Grace homely, with multiplication of speech, impertinent and not necessary, as though I meant to send you as great a packet as I received from you.

One thing necessary to answer your Grace in, is touching your marvel; how I know sooner things from thence than your Grace doth there; which ariseth not upon any desire of knowledge on my behalf, for evil things be over soon known, nor upon any slackness of your Graces behalf there, who is and is noted very vigilant, as your Graces charge requireth. But thus it is, even as it was when I was in some little authority, they that were the evil doers in such matters would hide them from me. So now they have handled it otherwise; for as for Jacks of Lems English Testament, it was openly sold in Winchester Market, before I wrote unto your Grace of it. And as for Bales Book, called Elucidation of Ann Askewys Martyrdom, they were in these parts common, some with leaves unglewed, where Master Pagers was spoken of, and some with leaves glewed
ed. And I call them common, because I saw at the least four of them. As for Bales Book, touching the death of Luther, wherein was the Duke of Saxoniens prayer (whereof I wrote) it was brought down into this coun-tre by an honest Gentleman, to whom it was (as I remember he told me) given at London for news, and he had it a great while ere I wrote to your Grace. I had not then received the inhibition for preaching, whereof men spake otherwise than they knew. And in the mean time Doctor Smith recanted, which a Priest of this Town (who to mine own mouth boasted himself to be your Graces Chaplain, but I believed it not) brought down with speed, and made by means to have it brought to my knowledge, which I knew besides, for they had by and by filled all the country hereabouts, of tales of me. And when I saw Doctor Smiths recantation begin with, Omnis homo mens dax, so Englished, and such a new homily, as he would make all the Doctors of the Church Liar with himself, knowing what opinions were abroad, it enforced me to write unto your Grace for the sake of my conscience; giving this judgment of Smith, that I neither liked his tractation of unwritten verities, nor yet his retractation, and was glad of my former judgment, that I never had familiarity with him. I saw him not, that I wrote, these three years, nor talked with him these seven years, as curious as I am noted in the Commonwealth. And whereas in his unwritten verities he was so mad to say, Bishops in this Realm may make Laws; I have witness, that I said at that word, we should be then Daws, and was by and by sorry that ever he had written of the Sacrament of the Altar, which was not, as it was noised, untouched with that word, All men are liars, which is a marvellous word, as it foundeth in our tongue, when we say a man were better to have a thief in his house than a liar. And the depraving of mans nature in that fort is not the setting out of the authority of the Scripture. For albeit the authority of the Scripture dependeth not upon man, yet the ministration of the letter, which is writing and speaking, is exercised, and hath been from the beginning delivered through mans hand, and taught by mans mouth; which men the Scripture calleth holy men, and that is contrary to liars. And therefore St. Augustin in his Book de Mendacio, saying, Omnis homo mendax, signifieth, Omnis homo peccans. If Smith had only written of Bishops Laws, and then said he had, saving your honour lied loudly, or to mitigate the matter, said he had erred by ignorance, that had been done truly and humbly; for he that seeketh for much company in lying as he did, hath small humility; for he would hide himself by the number. And thus much as touching Smith, of whom, or his Book, till he was in trouble, I never heard talking. But to the matter I wrote of, I have told your Grace how I came to knowledge of them, very scarcely in time, but in the thing over quickly, and never had any such thought in my life, as I denied to your Grace, to be worthily charged with them, by them I mean that may hereafter charge; for I know no such yet in this world, and I never was in mine opinion so mad, as to write to your Grace in that fort. When all things be well, I have many causes to rejoyce; but where things were otherwise (as I trust they shall not) I have nothing to do to ask any account, I trust I shall never forget my self so much. I thank God, I am even as well learned to live in the place of obedience, as I was in the place of direction in our late Sovereign Lords life. And for my quietness in this estate I account my self to have a great treasure of your Graces rule and authority, and therefore will worship and honour it otherwise than to use such manner of presumption to ask any account. And I know your Grace cannot stay these matters so suddenly, and I esteem it a great matter, that things be staid hitherto thus; but if things had encreased as the rumors purposed, your Grace might have been incumbered more in the execution of your good determination. Now, thanks be to God, your Grace goeth well about to stay it. As for my self, I know mine inward determination to do, as I may, my duty to God and the world, and have no cause to complain of the universal disposition of them in my Diocess. I know but one way of quiet, to keep and follow such Laws and Orders in Religion as our late Sovereign Lord left with us; which, by his life, as the Bishops and Clergy said was the very truth, so I never read yet or heard any thing why to swerve from it, nor think it expedient to call any one thing in doubt, during the Kings Majesties minority, whereby to impair the strength of the accord established. Which I write not mistrusting your Grace in the contrary, but declaring my self, and wishing the same mind to other about you, as I trust they have, for which I shall pray to God, who prospered our late Sovereign Lord in that rebellion, as we have seen experience, and by your Graces foresight and politic government shall find the like prosperity to our Sovereign Lord that now is; wherein I shall do my part, as a Subject most bounden many ways thereunto. I send unto your Grace herewith my disquisition of My Lord of St. Davids Purgation, wherein I walk somewhat more at liberty than writing to your Grace, and yet I take my self liberty enough, with a reverend mind nevertheless to keep me within my bounds; which if I at any time exceed, I trust your Grace will bear with me after your accustomed goodness, for whose prosperity I shall continually pray, with encrease of honour.

At Winchester the sixth of June.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After most humble commendations to your Grace, I have received this day Letters from My Lord of Canterbury, touching certain Homilies, which the Bishops in the Convocation holden Anno Dom. M. v. xliij agreed to make for stay of such errors as were then by ignorant preachers sparkled among the people, for other agreement there had not then passed among us. Since that time God gave our late Sovereign Lord the gift of pacification in those matters, which established by his Highness authority in the convocation extinguished our devices, and remaineth of force with your Grace, wherein to avoid many encumbrous arguments which wit can devise against the truth, I send to your Grace the Copy of mine answer to My Lord of Canterbury, to whom I write and offer my self more largely, than I ever did in any matter of the Realm, to any man besides my Sovereign Lord, or the chief Governour as your Grace, for I am not factious, and use only to say as I am bound to say as occasion serveth, for that is my duty, having no other thing purposed but truth and honesty, whatsoever any man shall otherwise say of me, I am bulwer with your Grace than needeth but; such commendations as it pleased your Grace to send me by Master Coke (for the which I most humbly thank your Grace) hath engendered thus much more boldness, that ever me thinketh I should desire your Grace, not to suffer the Kings Majesty our late Sovereign Lords determination to slip the Anker-hold of authority, and come to a disputation, for eviſion whereof, afterward the burden must rest on your Grace, unto whom I desire all prosperous success, and the increase and continuance of such honour as God hath granted to your virtue, not to fall in encumber of any by-matter that need not to be stirred. If your Grace think not your self encumbered with my babbling, and inculcating that needeth not unto you, I would answer your Graces Letters of 6. of April, so as your Grace will by other Letters withdraw your name, that I may be seen to dispute with one not so far above me in authority, as your Grace is, which I have thought requisite to advertise, lest by my silence your Grace should deem I thought my self overcome in those matters, where indeed I am of a contrary mind, and can shew whereupon to ground me, why I should so think; And thus desiring your Grace to take in good part my doings, I shall continually pray for the preservation of your Grace long in felicity. At Westminster the 10th of June 1547.

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your Grace, since my Letters unto your Grace wherewith I sent unto you such Letters as I had writtan to My Lord of Canterbury for answer to his Letters touching Homilies, I have since received other Letters from My said Lord of Canterbury, requiring the said Homilies by virtue of a Convocation holden 5 years past, wherein we communed of that which took none effect then, and much less needeth to be put in execution now, nor in judgement cannot without a new authority from the Kings Majesty that now is, commanding such a matter to be entered, I wrote at length to My Lord of Canterbury, and sent the Copy of those Letters to your Grace, not to the intent your Grace should lose so much time to read them, for they be tedious in length, but only for my discharge, who never meddled, yet by private Letters with any man in the Realm to perswade or dissuade matters of Religion,

UNG-^{ed}ligion, but with the Prince himself, or him that had the managing of the great matters under him. And following this determination am I bold to send your Grace the Copy of such Letters as I write to My Lord of Canterbury, whose Letters to me, I could not of congruence forbear to answer, nor answering forbear to speak freely as I think. And sorry I am to hear the matter of Homilies spoken of in this time, your Grace hath done prudently to stop the vain rumours by Proclamation, and it hath wrought good effect, and me thinketh is not best to enterprise any thing to tempt the people with occasion of tales, whereby to break the Proclamation and offend: And to this effect I wrote to My Lord of Canterbury: For like as in a natural body, rest without trouble doth confirm and strengthen it, so is it in a Commonwealth, trouble travel-eth and bringeth the things to looseness: And My Lord of Canterbury is not fitter of his life when the old order is broken, and a new brought in by Homilies, that he shall continue to see his new device executed, for it is not done in a day, I would there were nothing else to do now, I have known business to occupy such as were put in trull, when Religion hath been untouched, a new order engendereth a new cause of punishment against them that offend: And punishments be not pleasant to them that have the execution, and yet they must be, for nothing may be contented. And thus I travel in the matter with My Lord of Canterbury, because he would I should weigh things, and so do I as indifferently as ever did man for the preservation of the Ship wherein I sail my self, and so many other whose prosperity I am bound to wish, I can admit no innovations.

S. W.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace with thanks, that it hath pleased you to be content to hear from me, wherein now I have from your Grace liberty to write at large, I cannot find the like gentleness in my body to spend so much time as I would: And therefore shall now desire your Grace to take in good part, though I gather my matter into brief sentences.

The Injunctions in this visitation contain a commandment to be taught and learned, two Books, one of the Homilies that must be taught other by Priest. Another of Erasmus Paraphrases, that the Priest must learn himself, these Books strive one with another directly, &c. Thus I have signified to your Grace some special faults that be Erasmus own faults; and in my judgment great faults, but I have not written all: And your Grace shall further understand that he who it is, I know not who hath taken the labours to translate Erasmus into English, hath for his part offended sometime, as appeareth plainly by ignorance, and sometime evidently of purpose, to put in, leave out, and change as he thought best, never to the better but to the worse, with the specialties whereof, I will not now encumber your Grace, but assure you it is so. And here I will grant to your Grace, that for every lie I make unto you, let one c. pound fine upon mine head, and let me live here like a Beggar, whilst my revenues pay it: My words you have in writing, and be against me matter of record; and so I yield to have me charged, as the Bishop of London was with offering the form of his Bishoprick, which matter came to my remembrance in the writing herof; and now I have written unto your Grace upon what foundation my Conscience is grounded, I shall truly declare unto you the manner of my proceeding from the beginning I never heard of the execution of the visitation, till your Grace was departed from London Northward; and as the Books flowed abroad by liberty of the Printers they came to my hands, I never slept while I had perused them, as soon as I had found certain faults I wrote to the Council, trusting upon such earnest advertisement as I made, they would incontinently have sent for me, and upon knowledge of so evident matter as me thought I had to shew, have stayed till your Graces return, I saw a determination to do all things suddenly at one time, whereunto although your Grace agreed, yet of your wisdom I conjectured ye had rather have had it tarry whiles your return, if you had not been pressed: And that word pressed I noted in your Graces Letters to me, wherein you wrote you were pressed on both sides: me thought if by bringing my self to most extrem danger in your absence, I could have stayed this matter, besides my duty to God, and to my Sovereign Lord I had done also your Graces pleasure, of whom I have this firm opinion, that willingly and wittingly your Grace will neither break the Act of Parliament, nor command Books to be bought with authority, that contain such doctrine as these Books do: Thus I adventured in your Graces absence, wherein although I had remembrance of your Grace; yet I made not your Grace my foundation, but God chiefly as God knoweth with the preservation of our late Sovereign Lords honour that dead is, and the security of our late Sovereign Lord that now is.

Let no man be offended with the vehemency of my writing, for I wrote with a whole heart, and if I could have written it with the blood of my heart I would have done it, to have done good, in staying the thing till it had been more maturely digested, and till your Graces safe return, I touched the Act of Parliament lively, but as truly as ever was any thing spoken of. And I never wept more bitterly then I did for a conceit that troubled my head which never passed my lips, nor shall never come out of my Pen, I will tell it your Grace, and you require it. Now whether the King may command against an Act of Parliament, and what danger they may fall in, that break a Law? with the Kings content I dare say no man alive at this time hath had more experience, what the Judges and Lawyers have said then I: First I had experience in mine old Matter the Lord Cardinal, who obtained his Legacy by our late Sovereign Lords request at Rome: And in his light and knowledge occupied the same with his two Crosses, and Maces born before him many years; yet because it was against the laws of the Realm, the Judges concluded the offence of the Proclamation: Which conclusion I bear away, and take it for a Law of the Realm, because the Lawyers so said, but ray reason digested it not. The Lawyers for confirmation of their doings, brought in a case of the Lord Tiptoft as I remember, a jolly Civilian, he was Chancellor to the King, who because in execution of the Kings Commission he had offended the Laws of the Realm he suffered on Tower-hill, they brought in examples of many Judges that had fines let on their heads in like case for doing against the Law of the Realm by the Kings commandment. And then was brought in the Judges Oath, not to stay any Process or judgment for any commandment from the Kings Majesty. And one Article against My Lord Cardinal, was that he had granted Injunctions to stay the Common Laws, and upon that occasion, Magna Charta was spoken of, and it was made a great matter the stay of the Common Law, and this I learned in that case, sithence that time being of the Council, when many Proclamations were devised against the Carriers out of Com, at such time as the transgressors should be punished, the Judges would answer it might not be by the Laws, whereupon ensued the Act of Proclamations, in the passing of which Act many liberal words were spoken, and a plain promise, that by authority of the Act for Proclamations, nothing should be made contrary to an Act of Parliament, or Common Law, when the Bishop of Exeter, and his Chancellor were by one body brought in a Pamunire, which matter my Lord Privy Seal cannot forget, I reasoned with the Lord Audley then Chancellor, so far as he bade me hold my peace for fear of entering into a Pamunire my self, whereupon I stayed, but concluded, it seemed to me strange that a man authorized by the King (as since the Kings Majesty hath taken upon him the supremacy every Bishop is such a one) could fall in a Pamunire. After I had reasoned the matter once in the Parliament House, where was free speech without danger, and there the Lord Audley then Chancellor, to falsifie me familiarly; because I was in some secret estimation as he then knew, thou art a good fellow Bishop, quoth he, which was the manner of his familiar speech, look the Act of Supremacy, and there the Kings doings be restrained to spiritual jurisdiction; and in another Act it is provided, that no spiritual Law shall have place contrary to Crossed by last time.

And why you and your break the Act of Parliament of King Edward for the Commission by a Proclamation, or setting up the stile in Q. Marias days. Like bladed like man.

Which I have never heard of the visitation, till your Grace was departed from London Northward; and as the Books flowed abroad by liberty of the Printers they came to my hands, I never slept while I had perused them, as soon as I had found certain faults I wrote to the Council, trusting upon such earnest advertisement as I made, they would incontinently have sent for me, and upon knowledge of so evident matter as me thought I had to shew, have stayed till your Graces return, I saw a determination to do all things suddenly at one time, whereunto although your Grace agreed, yet of your wisdom I conjectured ye had rather have had it tarry

Which I have never heard of the visitation, till your Grace was departed from London Northward; and as the Books flowed abroad by liberty of the Printers they came to my hands, I never slept while I had perused them, as soon as I had found certain faults I wrote to the Council, trusting upon such earnest advertisement as I made, they would incontinently have sent for me, and upon knowledge of so evident matter as me thought I had to shew, have stayed till your Graces return, I saw a determination to do all things suddenly at one time, whereunto although your Grace agreed, yet of your wisdom I conjectured ye had rather have had it tarry

a Common Law or Act of Parliament. And this were not (quoth he) you Bishops would enter in with the King, and by means of his Supremacy order the Laity as ye listed; but we will provide quoth he, that the Premunire shall ever hang over your heads, and so we Lay men shall be sure to enjoy our inheritance by the Common Laws, and Acts of Parliament. It is not yet full two years ago, since in a case of Jewels I was fain with the Emperors Embassador, and after in the Emperors Court, to defend and maintain by commandment, That the Kings of this Realm were not above the order of their Laws. And therefore the Jeweller, although he had the Kings Bill signed, yet it would not be allowed in the Kings Court, because it was not obtained according to the Laws, in which matter I was very much troubled, even this time twelve months, when I was in Commission with My Lord great Master, and the Earl of Southampton for altering the Court of Augmentations. There was My Lord Mountague, and other of the Kings Learned Council, of whom by occasion of that matter I learned what the King might do contrary to an Act of Parliament, and what danger it was to them that meddled against the Act it is fresh in memory, and they can tell whether I said true or no; and therefore being learned in so notable cases, I wrote in your Graces absence to the Council therein, as I had learned by hearing the Commons speak, whose judgments rule those matters, howsoever my reason can digest them, and so wrote to the Council; which my writings I fashioned so as I trusted My Lord would have stayed till your Graces return. And thus I have declared to your Grace the purpose of my writing to the Council so vehement, which nevertheless I continued with all humility to abide the order of authority, and learn all other obedience; for therunto I have ever had as great regard as any man in this Realm. And as my word is Vana salus hominis, so I assure your Grace I practise it thoroughly in my deeds.

When My Lords sent last for me, I came to them with as much speed as I might, with my sleeves and bosome full of Books to furnish my former Allegations: I was heard very well and gently, and me thought I shewed matter that should have moved, for I shewed the two Books to be contrary, as I have written before, wherewith they said they were not moved, adding how their Conscience agreed not with mine, using many good words to bring me to such conformity, as they would have had me at; whereupon knowing that I know, I could not relent, but after I had been a little beside from them, and was returned, they entered a precise order with me, either to receive precisely the Injunctions, or to refuse; in which case they had further to say to me, adding that your Grace was privy to that was done there that day: My answer was, that I would receive the Injunctions as far as Gods Law and the Kings would bind me; and because I saw they grew to such preciseness, and remembering how after a good sort they had caused me to be accompanied before with Master Wingfield, making innovations, what would be the end if I would not yield? I would not therefore leave unpoken, that I thought might avoid that followed: I told them there were 3 weeks of delay to the coming of the Visitors to me: In the mean time, I offered to go to Oxford to abide the discussion there, which offer was not allowed. I desired them to go to my house at London, and to have Learned men speak with me there, which was not accepted. I entered then the allegation of the Gospel of the Servant that said he would not do a thing, and yet did it, and so I said it might be that although I then said nay, as my Conscience served me, yet I might perchance change, and was a man that might be tempted. But as my Conscience was then, me thought Gods Law and the Kings letted me, and upon knowledge of their pleasures, that I must to the Fleet, I told My Lords I thought it hard, unless there were a greater matter than to send me to Prison; for declaring before hand what I minded to do before any thing had been by me actually done to resist the visitation, who had all the mean time to think on the matter, and repent me. Whereunto the answer was such as displeased me not inwardly so much, but I have well digested it, and (so all may be well) care not what becometh of my body; I departed as quietly from them, as ever man did, and have endured with as little grudge here, and have learned this lesson in the world, never to look backward, as S. Paul saith, nor remember that is past, I will never grudge or complain of nothing for my self.

As for the matter to have such Books recommended to the Realm in the Kings name by your Graces direction, me seemeth very weighty, and your Grace not to have been well handled in it. All the world knoweth the Kings Highness himself knew not these Books, and therefore nothing can be ascribed unto him; your Grace hath been to your increase of honour so occupied, as all men know, your Grace had no leisure your self to peruse these Books, and yet be the Books as I have written. I leave the rest to your Grace. If I that tell the Council my mind of them that have done so far amiss, because when I know so much, I will not yet allow them, I shall from henceforth the more regard the lesson of an old Embassador, that bade me, let evil tydings go home to my Master a Foot, and send only good tydings by Post. A shift with the word, which agreeth not with my nature, as Master Wallop saith. Upon Friday last past, My Lord of Canterbury sent for me to the Dean of Pauls house, whether I went with some gazing of the World. There I found My Lord of Canterbury accompanied with the Bishop of Rocheſter, Master Doctor Cox, and Master Aire, and I was brought thither by the Bishop of Lincoln; what report My Lord of Canterbury hath made thereof I cannot tell, my Lord of Canterbury was in hand with his Homily of Salvation, but nothing heard, or saw I to save my Conscience in agreeing to him, but heard that I should justly confirm me in mine own Conscience; I made offer to yield to them in that Homily, if they could shew me any old Writer that wrote how faith excluded charity in the office of justification, it is against Scriptures plain words, and to swerve from Scripture without any one Doctor to lean to it, were fore: Where Scriptures and Doctors want, My Lord of Canterbury would fall to arguing, and overcome me that am called the Sophister, by philosophy. When I heard My Lords argument I denied it, and would enter none other declaration, for I kept that answer till some other than were there, be present, my solution whereunto, when I declare it, shall make all the rest of the matter very weak, and My Lord not to like his argument at all. One argument I could not assent to come again to the Fleet: My Lord of Canterbury charged me, that I like nothing unless I do it my self, wherof I am not guilty, I was never Author of any one thing either Spiritual or Temporal, I thank God for it. I am also charged that all the Realm hath received these Homilies without contradiction save I: Whereunto I answer, I think they have not read that I have read in these Books; what hath been done I cannot tell, now I am kept as I cannot know, though I would when I was abroad, I never sought to know more than was brought by common fame; for this shall be found true, I never adviced any man to object any thing against these Books, no one man, not my Chaplains: A kinsman of mine beneficed in my Diocess, and not unlearned, came to me, and told me how he heard a lewd Fellow say that I would not receive the Injunctions. And Sir (quoth I) I rebuked him, and reviled him, and said you would as readily receive as any man: I told him that in so saying he did very well; upon my coming up a Chaplain of mine a Doctor of Divinity told me, he would receive the Injunctions quietly, and say nothing. I told him it should be well done, if I had tarried in my Diocess; if any man had spoken but my self I would have lost my life for it, nor I think there hath not now. This matter was to try a Bishop, whether he careth more for the truth, or his own rest. What examples have I seen in this Realm, how freely men have laid their Conscience against our late Sovereign Lords determination, and against the Act of Parliament? D. Crow a mean man preached against our late Sovereign Lords determinations, and how daintily he was handled to relieve his Conscience: If your Grace would have this for a precedent, that whatsoever the Kings Council for the time of a Princes minority shall send to be preached must needs be received without allegation; of what strength is the Act of Parliament against the Bishop of Rome? The Kings Majesty, when he cometh to his age will look to be bold to do as much with his Subjects as his Council did in his minority, wherof the Counsellors may be then weary, Princes be dangerous. For I have seen it almost for a rule, That whatsoever hath been once done, may then without question be done

LEAND

{KING
Edw. 3} done again, in our late Sovereign Lords time. I have seen the Council much aforesaid, when the King would have done somewhat against an Act of Parliament, it was made then a great matter. The Lord Cromwell had once put in the Kings our late Sovereign Lords head to take upon him to have his will and pleasure regarded for a Law, for that he said was to be a very King, and thereupon was called for at Hampton Court. And as the Lord Cromwell was very stout, come on my Lord of Winchester (quoth he) for that conceit he had whatsoever he talked with me, he knew ever as much as I, Greek or Latine, and all. Answer the King here (quoth he) but speak plainly and directly, and shrink not man. Is not that (quoth he) that pleaseth the King a Law? Have ye not therein the Civil Laws (quoth he) quod principi placuit, and so forth (quoth he) I have somewhat forgotten it now, I stood till and wondered in my mind to what conclusion this should tend: The King saw me musing, and with earnest gentleness said: Answer him whether it be so or no, I would not answer my Lord Cromwell, but delivered my speech to the King, and told him: I had read indeed of Kings that had their will always received for a Law, but I told him the form of his Reign, to make the Laws his will was more free and quiet, and by this form of Government ye be established; quoth I and it is agreeable with the nature of your people: If ye begin a new manner of policy, how it will frame no man can tell, and how this frameth ye can tell, and would never advise you Grace to leave a certain for an uncertain: The King turned his back, and left the matter after till the Lord Cromwell turned the Cat in the Pan afore company, when he was angry with me, and charged me as though I had played his part: This tale is true, and not without purpose to be remembered, how I have been toiled to and fro in this kind of matter. Thus I have shewed your Grace the whole matter with many more words than I intended in the entry of my Letter, and make now an end, enforced by weariness of my body, fed with close air, rather then meat, which my stomach deliveth not, yet I must lay somewhat in the matter of only Faith, wherein my Lord of Canterbury, so much travelleth.

First it is sure, he shall never prove that he would lay in that matter, but to make an end of it, either I am a very fool in mine own conceit, which may easily be, or I see an occasion given to your Grace to make such a true determination in it, as may be honourable to your Grace, the contentation of all the world, the prelevation of the Kings honour that dead is, without prejudice of the Act of Parliament, without derogation to My Lord of Canterburies honour, without diminution of the reputation of the Council, and without any glory to the Bishop of Winchester. Which is in some respects conceiteth the greatest matter of all that can be yet reafared, and in good faith I would I were not, for all were well. Your Graces doing in Scotland, is not to my judgment more to your Graces honour than this would be, which God grant and your Grace much honour and felicity.

At the Fleet the xiv of October.

Your Graces humble Beadman, S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace, since the writing of my last long Letters to your good Grace, which as they wearied me in writing, they have I think wearied your Grace in reading, I have been in great expectation to hear somewhat from your Grace, of whole gente and favourable mind towards me. I cannot doubt, howsoever the Declaration thereof at this time be hindered by other by-persuasions, wherewith although your Grace may be somewhat moved, I marvel not, and therefore whilst all things may be tried, do well satisfy my self, not minding by any lute, I have or shall make; otherwise to preys your Grace than may be conveniently obtained of you in the state you now present. And yet for I must of congruence, for declaration of my humility, and also importunately lute, I left I should be seen to contemn, and to be entered into a melancholly, proudly to disdain the world, which I assure your Grace I do not, not neither

And any fish fantastic: Whereof they can be witnes, that have continually seen my behaviour, since the death of my late Sovereign Lord, and since my coming to this Prison. And yet my Lord of Canterbury, when I came for the last time of the Fleet, handled me with fair words, saying he had met me in his opinion to be called to the Court, and again, adding how (he said) did daily chafe in, others again, that were not appointed by our late Sovereign Lord. For I was worldly comfortable words, and as far contrarious or false as the Fleet is on the other side: But I have not I thank God, been so deceit which my Lord of Canterbury thought to be true, or would seem to think for, whereby to induce others to think the same, as though I were not moved to say as I do, for any zeal to the truth, but of perverse forwardness, as one that like not his estate, and therefore cared not what became of him: The truth whereof to be otherwise God knoweth: And I am able to make to the world sufficient proof and Testimony of the contrary if it be required: Firstas touching the Book of Paraphrases, whereof I wrote to your Grace special Faults, and other I have to shew as great as they I trust: And doubt not, the matter itself shall sufficiently declare, that I have done well to speake against that Book, assuring your Grace, that since my coming to Prison, many days together when I looked on it, I have every day, fore new thing in it, both of fault, as ought worthily to condemn the writer, I have found ought wurtully to condemn the work. I have raivoured

* Erasmus name as much as any other, but I never studied over this Book till now, and now I agree with them that said, Erasmus laid the Eggs, and Luther hatched them : adding further, that of all the monstrous opinions that have arisen, evil men had a wondrous' occasion mislnted to them of that Book ; and therefore I trult the matter of that Book will purge the evil opinion as might be gathered of me, wherein I offer to prove that I laid with any learned man, pain of shame and rebuke, and to be taken for a licolick Bead. As for the Book of Homilies, in that power wherey my Lord of Canterbury would have taught how faith excluded charity in the office of justifying, besides that my Confidence is otherwise perwaded, and truly perwaded, it doth so touch me outwardly in the world, as if I would for any intercession or request upon offer to be a Counsellor, or have as much more Land as all the Bishops my spend. I was worthy for so agreeing for me on the one side, or dread on the other side ; first, to be whipped in every Market Town in the Realm, and then hanged for example, as the verieit Vagab that ever was Bilhop in any Realm chnitted, unless my Lord of Canterbury could shew me either Scripture that so said, or some ancient * Writer, wherein I desire only to fee but one where commonly two be required in every matter. But because it is in the matter of only Faith, I require but one ancient * Writer, whereby I cared not for my Confidence as some would have it, perwaded if I might excuse my self at to the world that I were not worthy to be whipped, and hangd in all good mens judgements, and mine own also.
And this matter I write unto your Grace, to declare unto you in what frairs I am *tyed inwardly in my Confidence by very truth, so I am tyed outwardly in the world with shame, whereby appeareth that I refut not this matter of a wilful purpose, or that I like it not because I was not a Counsellor, which words my Lord of Canterbury used to me, for I am even driven to do as I do of necessity or both kinds in my Confidence before * God and the world abroad, whereof if I shew not your Grace such a proof cannot be denyed, let me be out of all credit in every thing, and be accounted a byer, which I abhor above all faults. Whereupon ne seemeth my case is miserable to be encumbered as I am, and yet to be used as I were without cause oblitrate, notwithstanding all such considerations as I have used to humble my self to learn and abide ; yf myself to be oppoed at Oxford, that I might say, if I yielded, learning had overcome me : When that was refused, I offered myself to go to School at home, which offer to yield to the truth. And although I have to maintain me, both the plain Scriptures, the Doctors plain and the plain A^ct of Parliament : Yet for conformity of feared to my Lord of Canterbury, to yield if he could shew me one Scripture affirming faith to exclude charity in justification, or Scripture failing as it doth indeed to shew me but one ancient Writer that writeth so, with offer to yield and give place, which offer excludeth

Erasmus if he had been alive, he could as well have answered for this matter, as he answered to Albertus Pius objecting against him the same.

stubbornness, and all evil opinion that might be conceived of wilfulness in me; it is now twenty days ago since I spake with my Lord of Canterbury, when the strongest arguments he made me, were to agree, with hope to be a Counsellor again, or go to the Fleet from whence I came, for when I made request to the contrary, he said he had no such Commiſſion from the Council, and so here I remain without Bail or Mainprize, without comfort of any of my Friends or Servants, as one divided from the world, no Chaplain to accompany me in prayer, no Barber nor Taylor for bodily necessities, nor liberty to use Physician for relief of Disease, whereof I have need: And your Grace who I think would shew me relief: for I will never think want of good will in you, is perswaded, by means that I resist the truth wilfully, and that your Grace may not in any wise shew me the least comfort in the world, for then no man shall rule me. And then your Grace that shewed so much favour to the Earl of Southampton late Chancellor, wherein all the world commended your gentleness, if your Grace should now any ways comfort me in Prison with the least token of gentleness, ye might be noted to favour Wincheſters factions, as some term it, whereas I take God to record I never joyed my self with any man, nor have secretly encouraged any man to be of my opinion. And yet as I have none other opinion, but such as the Parliament hath established. The Earl of Southampton did many things whilst he was Chancellor, touching Religion, which misliked me not, but did never advise him so to do: nor made on him the more for it when he had done, he was one of whom by reason I might have been bold, but I left him to his Conscience, therein I never said so much secretly to any Noble man of the Realm, as I have to your Grace, at which time I advised your Grace to be noted neither on the one side, nor on the other. And your Grace hath for your self as good a name as can be. And I shall say this without flattery, that like as chance very notably hath advanced your Estate many degrees, since the time of my first acquaintance with you, so have you had occasion to shew your virtue, whereby to be thought worthy your Estate, by means whereof you cannot with a more felicity than you have to be the beginning of such an Estate as ye shall leave by Gods grace to your Posterity. This is not altogether out of my matter, for whatsoever become of me, I would your Grace did well, men be mortal, and deeds revive, and me think My Lord of Canterbury doth well to entangle this your Grace with this matter of Religion, and to borrow of your authority the Fleet, the Marshalsea, and the Kings-Bench, with imprisonment in his house, wherewith to cause men to agree to that it please him to call truth in Religion, leaving that he setteth forth not established, by any Law in the Realm, but contrary to a Law in the Realm: At the least a Law it is not yet, and before a Law made, I have not seen such a kind of imprisonment, as I sustain, humbly offering my self ready to learn: Our late Sovereign Lord, whose soul God pardon, suffered every man to say his mind without imprisonment, till the matter were established by Law. If My Lord of Canterbury hath the strength of Gods spirit, with such a learning in his Laws, as be able to overthrow with that breath all untruths, and establish truths; I would not desire the let of it by your Grace, nor the work of Gods truth any way hindered: In which case if all the Realm be perswaded besides my self in this matter, it shall be ease for to reprove me in the face of all the World, and drive me to the ground with the Sword of Gods Scripture, which he should rather desire to do, than to borrow the Sword your Grace hath the rule of, wherewith to fear men, which is a mean to slander all that is done or shall be done, if men be prisoned before a Law made. And I cannot believe but there be more than I, or else I should not be kept so secret. For all my folks referred to me, and told me there was no reason to stand alone against all men, to undo them and my self also in this world. It were a greater temptation than My Lord of Canterbury made to put me in hope to be a Counsellor again. Be your Grace assured, the foundation of my ground is a zeal to the truth, although I have many worldly considerations to alledge for me, which serve to purge me of wilfulness, which I assure your Grace is not my fault, I will not trouble your Grace with all I could say of my knowledge: (KING Edw. 6.) whatsoever my words be of My Lord of Canterbury, which the matter enforce me to speak. I am in none enmity with his person, and that I am able to prove, but My Lord hath in the Homily of salvation taken such matter in hand, and so handled it, as if I were his extreme enemy, I would have wished him to have taken that piece in hand, and so handled it as he hath done. For that asseveration how Faith excluded Charity, can neither be proved by Scripture, nor confirmed by any ancient Writer, or perswaded by any effectual argument. And one argument My Lord hath devised, which he frameth thus: We be justified by Faith without all works of the Law: Charity is a work of the Law. Ergo we are justified without Charity. The answering of which argument, which I can do plainly by authority, shall declare that either My Lord is deceived himself if he take it for a strong argument, when the opinion of his learning shall be hindered, or if he use it wilfully knowing the fault in it, the lack is greater another way. But the answer to that argument doth touch all the matter, whereunto I have an answer made 1200 years by-past, which I will of my peril shew, if My Lord will avow it for his argument. And if my Lord will send me the argument of his hand, I will send him the answer of my hand, whereby shall shortly appear, whether I trifle or no. In the later end of my last Letter to your Grace I spake of a determination, whereof I wished your Grace were Author. For weariness of writing I did not open what I meant in speciality, intending now to begin in the middle of this sorrow, with a merry tale: But a very true tale, and not unmeet to be rehearsed: Thus it happened, certain Doctors of Divinity at Paris, minding with utterance of some learning, whereof they had store to requite a Gentleman that had bidden them to Dinner, using a Preface, that as he had fed them with bodily meat, they would feed him with spiritual food, proponed this question to be disputed amongst them: Whether the Ads that carried our Lady and Christ, when Joseph fled with them into Egypt, when it carried our Lady only with Christ, in her lap, carried then as perfect a burthen, as when it carried our Lady with Christ on her lap, and a Flea sitting on her head? Herein the Doctors were in great earnest, and many hot arguments were between them in the matter, with much spence of language. Whether our Lady alone, with Christ in her lap, were as perfect a burthen, as our Lady and Christ with a Flea upon our Ladies head? The audience which was learned, was well cheered with laughing, but other edification the matter had not. And it may be laughed at, whensoever it is told to be in what trifles many men spend their time: And now I shall say that which is strange at the first reading, but it is true.

The matter of Justification with only Faith justified, and whether Faith excluded Charity in justification, pertaineth no more to the use and practise of our Church of England, although in knowledge it be a grave matter, than the trifling question I rehearsed pertained to the heavens edification in good living: I beseech your Grace to know how I put a difference between use and knowledge. The knowledge of justification as I have said is in learning of more weight, and such as for the entreating of it, many have wept even here at home, besides those that have wept in Germany, but the use and practice of it is no more necessary in the state of the Church of England, than is the handling of the other question, and for any use in the Church, the one may be forborn as well as the other, considering the Baptism of Infants, is so duly observed. In which Sacrament of Baptism all we be justified before we can talk of the Justification we strive for. And unless the Church leave the use to Christian Infants, which shall not be, there cannot be a time, in which the knowledge of the Justification we strive for, can be practised: But all men shall as we already have, receive their Justification in Baptism in their Infancy. So as the Doctrine of only Faith justified, if it were true as the Homily declareth, it is no more necessary for the present state of the Church, than to know whether the burthen of our Lady and Christ only were as perfect as the burthen of our Lady and Christ with a Flea sitting upon our Ladies head, which the solemn Doctors of Paris so earnestly entreated.

KING Some will say I am waxed mad in Prison to compare these two together: But as I compare them for use and practise, the one is as necessary as the other. And as I was bold to use the merry example to imprint the matter the better in your Graces memory. For it is as I say, when we have all talked, for we all are justified in Baptism, younglings and falling after Baptism, we must arise by the Sacrament of Penance, which must be confessed of all Men, unless they be such as deny all Sacraments as some have done indeed, wading so far in the fitting of only Faith, that they have left nothing but Faith alone, and yet spent a great deal of their Faith in the handling of it, or rather all. And that is a general fault I find, that such as write in that matter do not handle it Faithfully in alledging the Doctors and Scriptures right as they be. Now if this be true that I have written, which is true indeed, were it not an horrible part of you to say, Why trouble ye the World for a thing not necessary, and so put it from the Country, and make it as it were a Checker Chamber-case, and so to beset to the Universities, for whom it is meet soberly to talk, and not for Homilies, wherein the People shall hear that they shall never practise, because they learn it too late, being justified before in their infancy in Baptism. My Lord of Canterbury told me his intent is only to set out the freedom of Gods mercy, which may be done much more plainly, with putting the People in remembrance of the constant received Faith of the Church in the Baptism of Infants, whereby such as be justified and saved in the virtue of Christs Passion, as after Baptism by malice fall not to sin, and those must return to Christ by Penance; but such as die (before that actual sin, hath defiled their Soul again) if they die in the innocency received in Baptism, be saved.

And yet those Children, when they were Christened did nothing, but cry for cold, or when they were over-hard gripped for fear of falling. And when this is believed, is not Gods mercy believed to be ministered after a most free liberal sort? If my Lord of Canterbury mind only that the matter shall appear without Argument, as we practise Justification in receiving the Sacrament of Baptism. And if for Justification by only Faith, is all out of use, howsoever we expound it, as the state of the Church is now.

And it is a terrible matter to think on, to see such a contention to rise upon a matter not necessary to be spoken of, wherein if my Lord of Canterbury will needs travel, my judgment is, That he shall never persuade that Faith excludeth Charity in Justification, unless he borrow of your Graces Authority Prisons, and then he shall perceive have some agree unto it, as poor Men kneel at Rome, when the Bishop there goeth by; that is to say, knocketh on the head with a Halberd, if he kneel not, for that is one piece of the office of the Bishop of Romes Guard. Finally there hath been nothing done, but your Grace may use it to the augmentation of your honour. I have things more to say, but this matter is over-long already, and me thinks I have been over-long here, and shewing my self so humble a Scholar, as I have done, it is much to be beaten, because I do not learn where no Man teacheth me, and so willing to learn as I ask but one Scripture, or Scripture failing, as it doth for my Lord of Canterbury purpose, I ask but one ancient Doctor: This is my case, for as touching any act of disobedience, my Lords of the Council did foresee, that I should not fall in that danger, and therefore would not trust my frailty to be in the Country, when the Visitors should be there: But made me sure here, lest I might have offended, if I had been there, though I had but a few words to speak; that is to say, saving Gods Laws and the Kings, yet they might have been misinterpreted, and so engendered me more trouble; and this good I have of my being here, which I suffer patiently, and make it to serve for my purpose in my conceit, as I thank God I have no displeasure of mind, and only feel such as the Body engendereth for want of some necessities, whereof if I may have relief at your Graces hand, I will accept it as thankfully, as any Man hath any benefit at your hand, and as instantly require it of you. And yet if I have no other comfort from your Grace than I have hitherto had, I will think nevertheless as well of your Grace as ever I did, and be only sorry, that in the state you be in the liberty of doing that your heart would persuade you, should be firailly enclosed with respects, as my Body is with wakes. Thus desiring your Grace to take in good part my bold writing to you, I shall make and pray Almighty God for the preservation of your Person. With increase of honour and felicity. At the Fleet, or rather in the Fleet.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace, upon trust that your Grace would take my Letters in good part, and not otherwise than I wrote them. I wrote to your Grace out of this Prison, as I was wont to write to our late Sovereign Lord, whose Soul God pardon; when I was Ambassador, refreshing my self sometime with a merry tale in a sad matter, which his Highness ever passed over without displeasure, as I trust your Grace will do the semblable. For though some account me a Papist, yet I cannot play the Pope holy, as the old term was, I dare not use that severity in writing, which my cause requireth to speak of God, and his Truth in very second sentence, and become suddenly a Prophet to your Grace, with a new Phrase of speech, with whom I have been heretofore so familiarly conversant, as I think honour hath not altered your Graces nature, even so adversity hath not changed mine. Of your high Place in the Common-wealth, no Man is more glad than I, nor no Man shall do his duty further than I, to acknowledge you as your Grace is now, Protector and Governor of the Realm. But I have been so traded to speak boldly, that I cannot change my manner now, when perchance it doth me no good. And although there be an Italian in Prison with me, in whom I see a like folly, who living with a little miserably, will not for his honour take Alms, saying, to be still in the state he was sometime, which manner I condemn in him, yet I follow him thus far, rather to write after my old manner, which cometh plainly to mind, than to take Alms and aid of Eloquence, whereof I have this state need. For your Graces Letters return every word of my Letters in my Neck, and take my Fly as it were a Bee, which I thought should have stung no Man, which matter in mirth, declareth the necessity of the other matter, as aptly as may be, neither to be necessary. And when I wrote I forgot as my fellow Prisoner, the Italian doth the state I am in now. And wrote as I had written from Antwerp in the state of Ambassador. The Italian my companion hath his folly of nature, I have it of custom in bringing up, which hath the effect of nature: And is called of learned Men, Another nature. And then the Proverb of gentleness hath place, when Men say to him that is offended, You must bear with the Mans nature, and so I trust you will do with me. Two things there be in your Graces Letter, which I trust I may touch without contention. One is, That if your Grace will in a plain similitude see the issue of Faith only, and whether Faith may exclude Charity in the office of Justifying, or not, it may be well resembled in the making of Laws in this Parliament, where the AGs be passed by three Estates, which be all three present, and do somewhat together, and concur to the perfecting of the Law, wherein we may not say, That any one Estate only made the Law, or that any one Estate excludeth the other in the office of making the Law. This may be said, That these three Estates only in respect of the rest of the Realm, make the Law, and there need no more of the Realm be present but they. But if we speak of these three Estates within themselves, there is none Estate only, that maketh the Law.

But where the Law hath as it were a Body and a Soul. The high House and the low House of the Parliament make as it were the Body of the Law, which lieth as it were a dead matter, such as is not apt to take life till the Kings Majesty hath by the breath of his mouth, saying, Le Roy le veut, breathed a full life into it; in the conclusion

besides the life the Assembly of the other Estates had by his Authority to Assemble, which had else been a dead Assembly, even as Faith and Hope be dead without Charity: And as the Kings Majesty in this similitude of making Laws excludeth not in office of the whole the other two Estates, no more do the Estates, because they devise and frame Laws, exclude the Kings Majesty in the Office of making Laws, for without his Authority they be nothing, as Faith and Hope be without Charity not effectual. And look what absurdity and untruth this saying hath in this Realm to say, The higher House, and the lower House, exclude the King in the Office of making of Laws, the same absurdity is yet in Religion to say, That Faith excludeth Charity in the Office of Justification. And therefore it was never written of ancient writers. And therefore I desired my Lord of Canterbury to shew me but one, and yet cannot. In our time this Dream hath been dreamed without Scripture, without Authority, against Scripture, and against Authority, as I can shew. And further can shew how this imagination extendeth so far by them, that open their mind in it throughly, as your Grace would not at the first believe if I did express it. But I can shew that I am not evidently as clearly for my discharge as I could wish. An other matter of your Graces Letter is, Where your Grace reasoneth with me that I am over precise in finding of faults in the Paraphrasis, seeing every Book hath some faults. And then your Grace taketh not Erasmus for a Gospel, but as one in whom somewhat may be reprehended or amended. After which manner of sort, if your Grace take the Homilies: as for like reason in my judgment they must, for they be Mens compositions, as the Paraphrasis is, and not the very Gospel it self, why should I be kept in Prison, who offered to receive the Homilies and Erasmus both, so far as they were not without fault, either of Gods Law or of the Kings? Because I saw the Errors before, and spake of them, I have made more speed to Prison than other have done, who persevere for troubling of their Conscience have received the Books close with such reverence, as becometh Men to receive that is sent from their Prince, wherein I would have done as they did, if I had not seen the Books before. But I did as I have seen divers Noble Men do. And among them as I remember your Grace, when they have being sent in service to have used such diligence, as to see their Commission and Instructions made, or they went and finding something doubtful or amiss, after the Commission was Sealed, and Injunctions Signed worthy to be mended, have upon declaration of their mind therein obtained amendment with commendation. Now I have a charge in the Bishoprick of Winchester to see the People fed with wholesome Doctrine, wherein if I be so diligent as to look upon the Commission, and considering what I shall be charged with to do, take this or that for a fault in my judgment, and labour to have it amended, wherein differ I from other Mens diligence? And how can it be taken for a fault to say reverently to the Council? My Lords, me seemeth, this and this cannot stand together, either instruct me in them, or amend them; In what nature of crime should this Humility be? Am I worthy for so saying to be condemned to a perpetual Prison? And to be a close Prisoner, to speak with no Man, to hear from no Man, to talk with no Man, for my Household which is a great number, wandering and lamenting for me? My Case should be in the nature of praise, in the nature of commendation, in the nature of thanks, if none other have said that I can say: if one only Man in a Realm faith, He knoweth Treason to subvert the whole Realm, and can shew evident proof of his so saying, shall he be Prisoned because of good will he offereth to say and prove that no Man else uttereth but he? And therewith offereth to prove that he faith to be true: it is incredible, that a King should set forth a Book tending to the subversion of his own Estate, and therefore that I shall say cannot touch his Majesty, who knoweth not what is done, as reason judgeth in his tender age: it is also incredible, That your Grace being Uncle to him, should be content, that any Book should be set forth that might tend to the subversion of his Estate. And I dare say for your Grace, you would not if the Book be like the Horse that the Trojans received into their City, wherein the Trojans knew not what was in it, let me be heard that know what is in it, and so know it, as I can shew it as evidently, as I can the Sun and the Moon in bright Days, and bright Nights, when both shine: I do not trifle with my wit to undo my self, but travel with my honesty to preserve my Country, to preserve my Prince, to preserve Religion: And this your Grace shall find to be true, which knowing my Letters to be contrived to the extremity, I would not write unless I were furnished with matter to discharge my writing. Your Grace I doubt not remembreth Singleton's Conspiracy. And Erasmus hath framed his Doctrine, as though Singleton had required him thereunto. I have such matter to shew, as though I had my self devised it for my justification. And yet I am reasoned with, as though one given to let good Doctrine, to find a knot in a Ruhl, to trouble good enterprises; after which fort your Grace is moved to write unto me, and thereupon I remain here still without hearing, having such matter to utter as shall confound them all; which I would not write if I were not assured: For it were a small pleasure to me writing thus extremely, to be confounded when I had been heard, and then worthily sent hither again for lying so manifestly, which I would think a worthy punishment, as this is unworthy to be handled as I am for virtue, that I dare say the truth, can declare the abomination of this Paraphrasis, and of the Homilies also, in both which matters I have shewed all I can shew, I shall declare I am not worthy to be kept here, and yet here I have remained these seven weeks, without speaking with any Man saving my Physician, who I thank your Grace hath done me good: And yet when Men see I am thus banished from the World, so as no Man may speak with me, it is not pleasant for any Man to resort unto me, and that I perceive if my Lord of Canterbury think I will wax mad he is deceived, for I wax every day better learned than other, and find every day somewhat to impugn the Paraphrasis and Homilies, not by wit or device, or other subtilty, but plain sensible matter if I may be heard: And if I be not heard my Conscience telleth me I have done my duty, and therewith from travel shall apply my self to prayer, wherein I shall remember the prosperous estate of your Grace whom God preserve.

Winchester

To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace, whatsoever your Graces considerations be not to hear me yet, nor answer me, and howsoever I determine and do bear patiently the state I am now in, Reason nevertheless bindeth me to continue my fate, That if your Grace seeth at any time occasion to change your determination, there shall nothing want on my behalf to provoke your Grace so to do: He that is refused at one time may be heard at another, and importunity speedeth when none other mean can prevail. Being also a fault in the Inferior to despair of the Superior in so reasonable a request as mine is; which I cannot do of your Grace for other respects: I have remained here long unheard of your Grace, inclosed up more closely, now close Religions be begun, than ever were any whilst they were here, no stranger may speak with me, I cannot have the company of my Chaplain, which is necessary for me after so long time. And if your Grace hath no leisure to hear me shortly, I trust you will without delay suffer my Chaplain to resort unto me, as well as of your gentleness ye have suffered the Physician for my Body to come to me, for the which I most humbly thank your Grace: herein I desire your Grace to answer me by this bearer, that I may have some comfort from you, for whose preservation I shall pay to Almighty God.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

To

{KING
Edm. 6}

S. W. To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace, I am very loath, knowing your Graces busyness to trouble you with many Letters, and yet not bearing from your Grace any thing for answer to mine own Letters before written, I am so bold to write these, wherewith to put your Grace in remembrance of mine estate in Prison, as one differred from the use of his Servants and Friends, and as it were buried quick without knowledge of any just cause wherefore, and with knowledge, by course of time that now the Parliament is begun, whereof I am a member, unless my fault had cut me off, and whereunto I was called by Writ, which I received before my coming hither, where I would also gladly do my duty, as I am bounden if I were not detained and bounden in Prison from my liberty, that I might so do, which allegation I make the rather to your Grace, to the intent with the opening of a necessary suite worthy to be regarded, I might minister comfort to your Grace, whereupon to these such gentleness to me, as of your own gentle heart, I am persuaded your Grace gladly would, for whose preservation with increase of honour I shall pray to Almighty God, who have your Grace in his tuition.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace, I cannot discuss by conjecture, why evidence is thus put off in my case, that hath been wont commonly to be granted to all Men: if it should be of any Man through policy, to keep me from the Parliament, it were good to be remembered, whether mine absence from the upper House, with the absence of those I have used to name in the neither House, will not engender more cause of objection, if opportunity serve hereafter, then any presence with such as I should appoint were these, the signification whereof is the chief cause of these Letters, for as I am now encumbered with being here, so might some be encumbered therewith hereafter, which should do me pleasure: My matter that I have to say toucheth the highest, and is worthy to be heard, whereunto my Lord of Canterbury can only answer that he would never have thought it, or that he hath been otherwise informed of them he put in trust, for it would touch him over-much to grant he had so much knowledge in the Paraphrasis, as I now have, and knowing the same to have advised your Grace to set it forth to the People, I can say much, which is expedient for your Grace to hear and consider, desiring only this credit of your Grace to think me worthy to be heard, and thereupon give me audience, I cannot enchant Men, ne look not to be believed in the matter, unless it be so plain, as no Man can gain-say it, and therein the Book to be Judge. The nature of my cause should move your Grace, the present Assembly of learned Men should move your Grace to celebrate mine audience: And if your Grace knew what I could say of the Long Letters your Grace sent, good faith, your Grace would make so much the more speed. For whereas the purpose of your Grace in these Letters is, to alter my Judgment, the handling of the matters is such, as I am able to shew good cause why they should as they do, work a contrary effect, as I am able to declare, if ever I come to your presence. My Lord of Canterbury will needs maintain that our late Sovereign Lord was seduced, and then it is possible that your Grace may be seduced also, and therefore it is good for your Grace to hear and to hear in time: whatsoever I have written to your Grace is true, and I have not written all the specialties I know in the greatest matters, which your Grace shall perceive to be true, I see evidently, that unless my matter be very notable, and also plain, it shall not boot me to allege it thus much, I am learned by your Graces Letters, and therefore if I had any cause to mistrust it, I would use another mean whereof in your Graces Letters I see some comfort; but my matter is so plain and so expedient to be understood, that I must needs desire your Grace to be heard in it, wherein it may like you to send me knowledge of your pleasure, and that my suite to your Grace may stand in some stead, for whose preservation in honour I shall daily pray to Almighty God, who preserve your Grace.

In the Fleet.

Your Graces humble Bead-man,

S. W.

To the Lord Protector.

After my most humble commendations to your good Grace: In my third Letter I signified unto your Grace my need of the counsel of Physician, as the state of my Body then required: whereunto because I had no answer, I have used all other means of relief, that I could to avoid that need, as one loth to trouble your Grace with requests not necessary. Master Warden of the Fleet, and my servants know that I faint not, and I have cause to fear, the effect will shew I faint not indeed. In this case I may not desperately forbear to write to your Grace, and think that because I have had no answer to all mine other Letters, among which I made mention of this necessity, that I should likewise have none answer to this: As I have determined my self to a truth in the chief matters, so I chuse to use simulation in by-matters: My mind I thank God was never so quiet, as hath been since my coming hither, which hath relieved my Body much, but the Body hath need of other relief, which cannot be had as I am kept by commandment. These seven weeks saving one day I have been here under such strait keeping, as I have spoken with no Man. And thus me seemeth I see my matter perplexed, your Grace will meddle with nothing done before your come home. And those of the Council that sent me hither, can by themselves do nothing, now your Grace is coming home: upon which consideration I sue to none of them, and perceive that your Grace to whom I sue, for some respect forbearth to make me answer, for such a Paraphrasis I make of your Graces silence, wherein I go near as think the truth, then Erasmus in his Paraphrasis some time, wherein he taketh upon him to get the causes of Chrills doings. I thank God my mind can take no hurt, how vehement soever their temptations be. But when a certain Sect of Philosophers called Stoicks, contemned in their learning stoutly the grief and disease of the Body, they were fain a little to shrink, when the Gout or any Disease nipped them, and now my stomach nippeth me, which I have favoured as much as any Man in England, and have laden it as light either with Meat or Drink of many years, and specially since my coming as any other. And after I saw I could get no answer from your Grace for a Physician, I have left off such study as I used, and given my self to continual walking for exercise, and with hope of relief, have delayed any further suite in that matter till now. And now I sue enforced, which I do most humbly with request, that Imprisonment, being to me, that was never in Prison before, of it self tedious, be not with special commandment made more grievous, unless I were charged with other offence than I am yet charged with, or in my Conscience can be: For me seemeth I have deserved thanks of your Grace, and the Realm, for the disclosing of the faults of the Paraphrasis, wherein I have written some specialties, but not all; and have such to shew as I may term that Book at one word, Abomination, both for the malice and untruth of much matter out of Erasmus Pen, and also the arrogant ignorance of the Translator into English, considering the Book should be Authorized by a King, and by the Injunctions charge the Realm for buying rather above twenty Thousand pound than under, whereof I have made account by estimate of the number of Buyers, and the Price of the whole Books: This Translator sheweth himself ignorant norant, both in Latin and English, a Man far unmeet to meddle with such a matter, and not without malice on his part, whereby your Grace may take an Argument, what moved them that counselled your Grace to Authorise such a Book in the Realm. As for my Lord of Canterburie Homily of Salvation, hath as many faults, as I have been weeks in Prison, which be seven, besides the general that the matter maketh a trouble without necessity, and is handled contrary to the teaching of the Parliament.

Finally, In the two Books the matter I have to shew is some part so dangerous, as after I knew it as I know it, the concealment thereof were a great fault, if I did not utter it. As for the manner of mine enterprise to utter it, I know not how to have fashioned it better, than to write to the Council in your absence, and on my Knees to declare some part of it, when I came to them receiving their determination of Imprisonment, I humbly departed from them hither without grudge, and remain here without grudge to any one of them, for they shewed no fashion of any evil mind towards me. And I have learned in the Civil Law that the deed of a number, is no one Mans act, with this also, the Authority is to be honoured; which rule I observe in thought, Word, and Deed. After which sort I remain with such suits as I have made to your Grace hitherto, and with this also that I add, enforced for the relief of my Body, how little soever I do, and have cause to set by it, which I most humbly desire your Grace to consider, and to send me some answer by this bearer: And I shall pray Almighty God for the preservation of your Graces felicity.

Your Graces humble Bead-man.

Certain additions after these Letters above-specified, with Notes and Solutions answering to the same.

THUS have we set out to thee (gentle and studious Reader) an extract of certain Letters of Bishop Gardiner; not of all that he wrote, but of such as could come to our hands. Neither of these also that we have, for any good stuff, or any great profit therein contained, or that they did clear him or his cause any thing, for the which he was most worthily condemned. For if there did or might appear any such thing in all his writings, that might clear the ill-favoured doings of that Man, be thou sure such were then secret about him, and yet his well-willers (their names I leave untouched) having his writings, and being able to shew them, as I am privy they are, would not so conceal them in covert as they do, being thereto both provoked and occasioned by us, if they had seen any thing in them meet to relieve the person, or to remedy this matter. Wherefore think not for any such effect these his vain-glorious Letters to be brought in here of us; but only that thou might hereby collect and understand by those his forefald Epistles, and Articles following, not only the whole course and story almost of all his proceedings from time to time, but also might see the nature and inward condition of the Man, how vain-glorious, full stuff and puffed up with arrogancy, and drowned in his own conceit he was, much like to the person, or rather he himself, described in the Latin Comedy, Miles Thraso gloriosus, having nothing in his mouth, but Emperors, Kings, Counsellors, Protectors, Adviseiments, Direction; as though all direction of Realm and Princes did flow out of his Brain, like as it is in the Poets Fables, that Minerva did spring out of the head of Jupiter. And yet if this vain-glorious conceit had been alone in him, less matter had been against him. Now his subtil practises, and pretended purposes; and dissimulating conveyance did not only augment, but also exceed all his other evils; as in the Letters above-specified is notorious and evident to be seen; wherein though he durst not apertly gainfay that which he inwardly misliked, yet how covertly doth he insinuate himself to the Lord Protector, under pretence of giving counsel, to bring that to pass which was for his purpose; that is, That no innovation or alteration might be made of Religion, during all the Kings minority, but that all things might stand as King Henry left them, and that is the chiefest butt in all Letters, whereto he driveth; using commonly this argument, which as it is easie to recite, so neither is it hard to answer to; although in the Notes before we have answered already sufficiently.

The sum and conclusion of all Winchester's drift in his Epistles before.

That is chiefly to be feared and avoided of the Lord Protector, and now specially in the Kings minority, that may both bring danger to him, and trouble to the Realm.

Innovation of Religion from that state, in which King Henry left it, may be and is like to be dangerous to himself, and cause trouble to the Realm.

Ergo, Innovation of Religion, from the state that the King left it in, is in no wise to be attempted.

The Answer.

TO answer first to the vocable Innovation, which he stumbleth so greatly upon, this I say, that Innovation is properly used, where a thing is brought in anew which was not before. Forasmuch therefore as in this alteration there is no new Religion brought in, but only the old Religion of the Primitive Church revived; therefore here is to be thought not so much an Innovation, as a Renovation or Reformation rather of Religion, which Reformation is oft times so necessary in Common-wealths, that without the same all runneth to confusion.

Secondly, I answer to the argument, which I do deny as a Fallax, for there is Fallacia accidentis. Where it is said, That Reformation of Religion gendeth danger to the Protector, and trouble to the Realm; first, what will come that is uncertain: and God be hallowed, yet no danger hath come to England for the reformation of Religion. And though there did, yet the cause thereof is not to be imputed to Religion Reformed: For sincere and true Doctrine of his own nature worketh quiet, peace, and tranquillity, with all good order. And if the contrary happen, that is incident by other causes, as by the malice of Satan, and wicked adversaries, not by reason of the Doctrine of True Religion. So, after the preaching of Christ and his Apostles, dissension followed in Common-wealths betwixt Father and Son, Brother and Brother, &c. but that is not to be ascribed to them, but to other.

As concerning the faults found in the Paraphrase of The Paraphrase of Erasmus, this I answer and say, That this Bishop belike had over-watched himself in this matter. For if it be true which he himself affirmeth, That he never read that Book before, and now he never slept till he himself read it; it happened peradventure, that in the overmuch watching of himself, and swift reading of the Book, his Judgment was asleep, whilst his Eyes were open in reading the same.

Likewise touching the Book of Homilies, especially the Homilie of Salvation, wherewith he findeth himself so much grieved with the Archbishop, seeing he bringeth forth no proofs, I have nothing to answer. In the mean season, this I have to think, That if he had been so cunning in the knowledge of his own Salvation, as he was in the destruction and vexation of Christs members, he would never so rage against that Homily.

Touching the examination of Ann Askew, if it be misreported by Mr. Bale, why doth not he note the places which they be, and wherein? And if he had, or were able so to do; yet seeing the examination was of her own Penning, which Mr. Bale did follow, let every Christian Reader judge, whether is more to be credited of these two, the that was persecuted, or he that was the persecuter.

And where he speaketh so much of quiet and tranquillity; this I answer, That quiet and tranquillity in Weals publick, so long as they are joynd with right reformed Religion, be much to be embraced. But when it is otherwise; that is, where True Religion lacketh his right, there let the second Table give place to the first.

KING He thwarteth also and wrangleth much against Players, Printers, Preachers. And no marvel why. For he seeth these three things to be set up of God, as a triple Bulwark against the triple Crown of the Pope, to bring him down, as God be praised they have done meety well already.

The Art. of Just. cation. As touching the Article of free justification by Faith, which he cannot abide, so far as we have sufficiently declared it in the Notes before, we shall refer the Reader now also unto the same.

And moreover, because in one of his Letters mention is made of a certain Letter sent unto Master Ridley, because we will defraud thee (gentle Reader) of nothing that cometh to our hands, here hath thou the Copy thereof, in effect as followeth:

Here followeth the Copy of the Letter of Stephen Gardiner sent to Mr. Ridley, in the Letters above-mentioned, containing matter and objections against a certain Sermon of the said Mr. Ridley, made at the Court.

The Letter of Winch. sent to Mr. Ridley. After Ridley, after right hearty commendations, it chanced me upon Wednesday last past to be present at your Sermon in the Court, wherein I heard you confirm the Doctrine in Religion, set forth by our late Sovereign Lord and Master, whose Soul God pardon, admonishing your audience that ye would specially labour in the confutation of the Bishop of Rome's pretended Authority in Government and usurped Power, and in Pardons, whereby he hath abused himself in Heaven and Earth.

Which two matters I note to be plain, and here without controversy. In the other two ye spoke of, touching Images and Ceremonies, and as ye touched it, specially for Holy Water to drive away Devils, for that you declared your self always desirous to set forth the meet truth, with great desire of unity as ye professed, not extending any your asseveration, beyond your knowledge, but always adding such like words (as far as ye had read) and if any Man could shew you further, ye would hear him (wherein you were much to be commended.) Upon these considerations, and for the desire I have to unity, I have thought my self bound to communicate to you that which I have read in the matter of Images and Holy Water, to the intent you may by your self consider it, and so weigh, before that I will speak in those two points, as ye may (retaining your own principles) affirm still that ye would affirm, and may indeed be affirmed and maintained, wherein I have seen other forget themselves. First, I send unto you herewith (which I am sure ye have read) That (a) Eusebius writeth of Images, whereby appeareth that Images have been of (b) great Antiquity in Christs Church: and to say we may have Images, or to call on them when they represent Christ or his Saints, be over gross opinions to enter into your learned head, whatsoever the unlearned would tattle. For you know the Text of the Old Law, (c) Non facies tibi sculptile, forbiddeth no more Images now, than another Text forbiddeth to us Pundings. And if omnia be munda mundi to the Belly, there can be no cause why they should be of themselves impura to the Eye, wherein ye can say much more. And then when we have Images, to call them Idols, is a like fault in sona folly, as if a Man would call (Regem) a Tyrant, and then bring in old Writers to prove that Tyrannus signified once a King, like as (Idolum) signified once an Image: but like as Tyrannus was by consent of Men appropriate to signifye an Usurper of that dignity, and an untrue King; so hath Idolum been likewise appropriate to signifye a false representation, and a false Image: inasmuch as there was a solemn Anathematization of all those that would call an Image an Idol; as he were worthy to be hanged that would call the King our Master (God save him) our true just King, a Tyrant; and yet in talk he might shew, that a Tyrant signified sometimes a King; but speech is regarded in his present signification; which I doubt not ye can consider right well.

I verily think, that for the having of Images ye will say enough, and that also, when we have them, we should not despite them in speech, to call them (d) Idols, ne despite them with deeds, to mangle them or cut them, but at the least suffer them to stand untorn. Wherein Luther (that pulled away all other regard to them) strove stoutly and obtained (as I have seen in divers of the Churches in Germany of his reformation) that they should (as they do) stand still.

All the matter to be feared is excess in worshipping, wherein the Church of Rome hath been very precise: and specially Gregory, writing Episcopo Massilien. Which is contained, De consecratio. Distinct. 3, as followeth:

Perlatum ad nos fuerat, quod inconf. Das hic videtur sunt, primum; devoto zelo succensus sanctorum imaginum cultu, sub hac quasi excusatione ne adorari eas, sed tantum ad gloriam debuisse, confregisse; & quidem eas ad adorandum vetuisse omnino laudamus, fregisse vero pictura illa Christi & maris; ambrosius tangens, cuius meminit Eusebius in hist. Petrus & ceteri beati Gregorius; est, quod scilicet? Aliud est enim picturam adorare, aliud per picturam huiusmodi adorandum, addiscere. Nemo pictura excolit illa & ad ipsam picturam quam affert, praestat pictura cernentibus, quia in ipsa praeterquam quod ipsa ratione ignorantes vident quid cogi debeant, in eam, pugnat etiam manifestum cum Synodo E. lib. Artic. 36, ubi prohibetur in templis picturas, et in cultu si verum. Fugnat etiam cum exemplo E. in Sexta Synodo was declared what manner of adoration is forbidden, that is to say, godly adoration to it being a creature, as is contained in the Chapter Venerabiles imagines, in the same distinction, in this wise.

Venerabiles imagines Christiani non Deos appellant, neque servitium eis ut Diis, neque spem salutis ponunt in eis, neque ab eis expectant futurum iudicium sed ad memoriam & recordationem primitivorum venerantur eas & adorant, sed non servitium eis cultu divino, nec alicui creature.

By which Doctrine all Idolatry is plainly excluded in evident words. So as we cannot say that the worshipping of Images had his beginning by Popery; for Gregory forbid it, unless we shall call that Synod Popery, because there were so many Bishops. And yet there is forbidden cultus Divinus, and agreeeth with our aforesaid Doctrine, by which we may creep before the Cross on Good Friday, wherein we have the Image of the Crucifix in honour, and use it in a worshipful place and to earnestly look on it, and conceive that it signifieth, as we kneel (e) and creep before it, whilst it lieth there, and whilst that remembrance is in exercise: with which Cross nevertheless the Sexton when he goeth for a Cross, will not be afraid to be homely, and hold it under his Gown whilst he drinketh a Pot of Ale, a point of homeliness that might be left, but yet it declareth that he esteemed no Divinity in the Image. But ever since I was born, a poor Parishioner, a Lay-man, durst be so bold, at a shift (if we have also Church-warden) to set the use of the Church at length, and his own in the mean time, the Silver-Cross on Easter-day,

(d) Betwixt Images and Idols there is but little difference, but betwixt Images set up in Churches and Idols, there is none at all. Or, It is, do you know, that Idols are gods, Idols are men.

(e) Euseb. Caes. faith, That he saw the Pictures of Paul and Peter kept with a certain Christian-man, but yet he said not that those Pictures were set up in any Church.

(b) What antiquity Images had in the Church, is declared by the doing and writing of Eusebius, in his Epistle ad Epist. Hierosol. translated by Hieron. In the Council, called Nicaenorum, Artic. 36, it is to be seen how Pictures were forbid in Church-walls. Item, in concilio Constantino, sub Leone Imp. Images were condemned. Item, Carol. Magnus, with the whole Council of Frankfort decreed against Images, abrogating the vain and frivolous acts of Rome in his Council a little before. Briefly, concerning the antiquity of Images, when Bishops began to cease from preaching in Churches, then Images began to be set up. (c) It is not like, for Non facies sculptile, that is, Moral; De immundis; is but Ceremonial.

(e) What work winchilles maketh to creep to dead Crosses, and to worship blockish Images. But the lively Images of Christ, then he brought to the Crucifix in honour, and use it in a worshipful place and to earnestly look on it, and conceive that it signifieth, as we kneel (e) and creep before it, whilst it lieth there, and whilst that remembrance is in exercise: with which Cross nevertheless the Sexton when he goeth for a Cross, will not be afraid to be homely, and hold it under his Gown whilst he drinketh a Pot of Ale, a point of homeliness that might be left, but yet it declareth that he esteemed no Divinity in the Image. But ever since I was born, a poor Parishioner, a Lay-man, durst be so bold, at a shift (if we have also Church-warden) to set the use of the Church at length, and his own in the mean time, the Silver-Cross on Easter-day,

But winchilles was so bigoted in his Lay mens Books, that he had no leisure to understand learned Books.

KING? And as our young Sovereign Lord hath received them reverently, so I trust he shall be advertised, ne negligat gratiam Dei in domo carationum, but follow his Father therein; also not doubting but God will hear him as he hath heard his Father, and other his Progenitors Kings of this Realm, to whose Dignity God addeth this Prerogative, as he doth also to inferior Ministers of his Church, in the effect of their Prayer, when it pleaseth him. A man might find some youngling pecaſe that would ſay, How worldly, wily, witty Bilhops, have inveigled ſimple Kings heretofore, and, to confirm their Bleſſings, have alſo deviſed how Kings ſhould Bleſs alſo, and ſo Authority to maintain where truth failed; and I have had it objected to me, that I uſed to prove one piece of mine Argument ever by a King, as when I reaſoned thus: If ye allow nothing but Scripture, What ſay you to the Kings Rings? but they be allowed, Ergo, ſomewhat is to be allowed beſides Scripture. And another, if Images be forbidden,

(b) Why doth the King wear S. Georges on his brett? he wearth S. Georges on his brett: Ergo, Images be not forbidden. If Saints be not to be worſhipped; why keep (c) we Saint Georges Feaſt? But we keep S. Georges Feaſt, Ergo, &c. And in this matter of Holy Water, if the ſtrength of the Invocation of the name of God, to drive away the Devils, cannot be diſtributed by Water: why can it be diſtributed in Silver to drive away Diſeales, and the dangerous Diſeaſe of the Falling Evil? But the Rings hallowed by the Holy Church may do ſo. Ergo, the Water hallowed by the Church may do like ſervice. Theſe were Arguments in his time, and I truſt be alſo yet, and may be conveniently uſed, to ſuch as would never make an end of talk, but rake up every thing that their dull ſight cannot penetrate, wherein me thought ye ſpake effectually, when ye ſaid, Men muſt receive the determination of the particular Church, and obey where Gods Law reſpugneth not expreſly. And in this effect to drive away Devils, that Prayer and Invocation of the Church may do it, Scripture maintaineth evidently, and the ſame Scripture doth authorize uſe to pray, and encourage uſe to it. So as if, in diſcuſſion of Holy Water, we attribute all the effect of the Holineſs which proceedeth from God by Invocation of the Church, and take Water only for a Servant to carry abroad Holineſs; there can be no Superſtition, where men regard only Prayer, which Scripture authorizeſ: and if we ſhall ſay that the Water cannot do ſuch ſervice, we ſhall be convinced, in that it doth a greater ſervice in our Baptiſm by Gods ſpecial (d) Ordinance. So as we cannot ſay, that Water cannot, or is not apt to do this Service; only the ſtay is, to have a preſide place in the New Teſtament, to ſay, Uſe Water thus in this ſervice, as we do in Holy water, which me thinketh needeth not, where all is ordered to be well uſed by us: and when the whole Church agreed upon ſuch an uſe, or any particular Church, or the common Miniſter of it, and by the Exorcism ordered for it, the thing to be uſed, purged,

(c) S. Georges Feaſt is kept, Ergo, Saints are to be worſhipped.

Adp. A like Argument: Lambes Feaſt is kept, Ergo, Lambes are to be worſhipped.

(d) The Water of Baptiſm hath an exorcism ordinance, whence Holy water hath none.

(e) Chriſt ſaith not move in ſil Church dumb Creatures of Gold and Silver, &c. but Miniſters by the ſtrength of his Word to carry abroad his Grace.

(f) Cramp-rings and Holy-water both together in like caſe as ſeipſis, in quo ejusdem be uſed and ſhould be enforced to ſay, that our (f) Cramp-rings be ſuperſtitious (where Truth inſbreath us not ſo to do) it were a marvellous puniſhment. Si ceci eſſemus (as Chriſt ſaith) peccatum non haberemus, ſed videmus, and this Realm hath Learning in it, and you a good portion thereof, according whereunto I doubt not but you will weigh this matter, non ad popularem ruinam, ſed artiſicis ſtueram. I mean, that Artiſter which teacheth the Church our Mother (as ye fully declared it) and ordered our Mother to give nourishment unto us. In which point ſpeaking of the Church, although ye touched an unknown Church to us, and known to God only, yet you declared the union of that Church in the permiſt Church, which God ordereth men to complain unto, and to hear again, wherein the abſurdity is taken away of them that would have no Church known, but every man believe as he were inwardly taught himſelf, whereupon followeth the old Proverb, zad idu mura dnuſur ſei quid dicit nſe. Which is far from the unity ye ſo carneſtly wiſhed for, whereof (as me thought) ye ſaid Pride is the let, as it is undoubtedly, which fault God amend, and give you Grace to ſalſion your words, as ye may agree with them in ſpeech, with whom ye be inclined to agree in opinion. For that is the way to relieve the World. And alſo there hath been between you and me no familiarity, but contrariwiſe a little diſagreement (which I did not hide from you) yet conſidering the fervent zeal ye profeſſed to teach (g) Peters true Doctrine, that is to ſay, Chriſts true Doctrine, whereunto ye thought the Doctrine of Images and Holy-water, to put away Devils, agreed not, I have willingly ſpent this time to communicate unto you my folly (if it be folly) (b) plainly as it is, whereupon ye may have occaſion the more ſubſtantially, fully and plainly to open theſe matters for the relief of ſuch as be ſlain from the Truth, and confirmation of thoſe that receive and follow it, wherein it hath been ever much commended to have ſuch regard to Hiſtories of credit, and the continual uſe of the Church (i) rather to ſhow how a thing continued from the beginning, as Holy-water and Images have done, may be well uſed, than to follow the light raſh Eloquence, which is ever ad manum, to mock and improve that is eſtabliſhed. And yet again, I come to Marcellus that made a Croſs in the water, and bad his Deacon caſt it abroad (k) cum ſide & zelo; after which fort if our Holy-water were uſed, I doubt not but there be many Marcellus, and many Elizeus, and many at whole prayer God forgiveſt ſin, if ſuch as will enjoy that Prayer have Faith and Zeal, as Equitius, and were as deſirous to drive the Devil out of the Temple of their Body and Soul, as Equitius out of the Temple of Jupiter. So as if holy uſe were coupled with holy water, there ſhould be more plenty of Holineſs than there is; but as men be prophane in their living, ſo they cannot abide to have any thing effectually holy, nor ſo much as Bread and Water, fearing leſt they ſhould take away ſin from us, which we love ſo dearly well. Solus Chriſtus peccata diluit, who ſprinkleth his Blood by his Miniſters, as he hath taught his Spouſe the Church, in which thoſe Miniſters be ordered, wherein many ways maketh not many Saviours, as Ignorants do jeſt, whereof I need not ſpeak further unto you; no more I need not in the reſt in reſpect of you; but, me thought, ye conjured all Men in your Sermon to ſay what they thought to you, Id quod hanc mihi expreſſit epiſtola, quam boni conſuler, Et vale.

Your loving Friend,

Stephen Wincheſter.

AS I have ſet forth here (gentle Reader) the cavilling Letter of Wincheſter againſt M. Ridley Sermon; ſo am I right ſorry, that I have not likewiſe the Answer of the ſaid Ridley again to joyn withal. For I underſtand, that not only Maſter Ridley, but alſo Maſter Barlow, Biſhop of Saint Davids (for Wincheſter wrote againſt them both) had written and ſent immediately their Answers to the ſame, refuting the frivolous and unſavoury Reaſons of this Popiſh Prelate, as may well appear by a parcel additional of a Letter sent by the Lord Protector to the said Bishop in these words :

And because we have begun to write to you, we are put in remembrance of a certain Letter or Book which you wrote unto us against the Bishop of Saint David's Sermon, and Doctor Ridley's, to the which answer bring immediately made. It was by negligence of us forgotten to be sent. Now we both send you that, and also the Answer which the Bishop of Saint David's wrote to the same Book of yours.

This Article toucheth other mens Acts, who or how they have complained and informed, I cannot thoroughly tell. For at the time of the Kings Majesties Visitation I was in the Fleet, and the morrow after Twelfth day I was delivered at Hampton Court, my Lord of Somerset, and my Lord of Canterbury then being in Council, with many other Councillors, and was delivered by these words: The Kings Majesty hath granted a General Pardon, and by the benefit thereof I was discharged: whereunto I answered, That I was learned never to refuse the Kings Majesties Pardon, and in strength as that was: And I would and did humbly thank his Majesty therefore, and then they began with me in an Article of Learning, touching Justification, whereunto they willed me to say my mind; adding therewith, that because other Learned had agreed to a Form delivered unto me, I should not think I could alter it: which I received of them, and promised the Thursday after to repair to my Lord of Somerset's House at Sheene, with my mind written; which I did, and at that day seven night following, appearing before him and other of the Council, was committed to my House for Prisoner, because I refused to subscribe to the form of Words and Sentences that other had agreed unto, as they said. In which time of Imprisonment in my House, the Bishop of Rochester then being sent to me, and after Mr. Smith, and then Mr. Cecil, to which Mr. Cecil, when I had by Learning resolved my mind in the matter, I delivered it; and he delivering it to my Lords Grace, wrote me, in his name, thanks for it; and then it was within the time of Lent, ere I was discharged of that trouble, and so went to Winchester, as a man clearly out of all travel of business.

And within fourteen days after that, or thereabouts, began other travel with me, upon a request made by my Lord of Somerset to surrender a College in Cambridge, and divers Letters were written between his Grace and me in it. Wherein I might perceive the Secretary with his Pen took occasion to prick me more, than I trusted my Lords Grace himself would have done. And by this trouble was I deduced to an end. Then shortly after I received Letters to come to the Council, and by reason I alledged my discafe, I was respited by other Letters, and three days before Whitsonide received yet other Letters to come, by which it might seem unto me, that it was not of all believed that I was discafed. And therefore with all expedition, when I could not ride, I came in an Horse-litter, and according to my duty presented myself to my Lords of the Council, who all then entertained me secretly among them before the matters were objected unto me, as if I had been in the same place with them that I was in our late Sovereign Lords days. Afterwards my Lord of Somerset's Grace charged me with these Matters following, and in this form, having the Articles written in a Paper.

First, with disobedience, that I came not at his sending for. Whereunto I answered, That I had his Letters of License to stay till I might come conveniently. And upon these last Letters I came inconveniently in a Horse-litter.

Then it was objected, That I bare Palms, and crept to the Cross. Whereunto I answered, That they were misinformed, and I trusted they would not think I durst deny it, if I had done it, because Ceremonies had such circumstances, as I might easily be reproved if it were otherwise.

Then it was objected, That at Easter I had a solemn Sepulchre in the Church, and such other Ceremonies. I answered, That I had even as many as the Kings Majesties

THE KING Jeſſies Proclamations commanded me: declaring plainly, That I thought it not expedient to make any alteration, wherein to offend the Kings Majesties Proclamation; adding, how he that followeth as he is commanded, is very obedient.

Wincheſter charged to deſace certain of the Kings Chaplains. It was then objected unto me, That I went about to deſace two of the Kings Majesties Chaplains, ſent down to be Canons of the Church of Wincheſter. Whereunto I answered, declaring the Fact truly as it was, which I am yet able to juſtifie. After this matter thus off objected and answered, I was commanded to go apart, and being called in again, my Lord of Somerſet Grace looking upon a Bill of Articles, ſaid, I had preached how the Articles went from the preſence of the Council, of the Council, of the Council; which matter I denied, adding, That it was not my fault of Preaching, ſo to play in iteration of words.

Real Pro- fess. After that, it was objected unto me for Preaching of the Sacrament, to ſay, The Body of Chriſt was really preſent, being a fault to uſe the word Really, not comprised in the Scripture. Whereunto I answered, That I did not uſe the word Really, which needeth not. For as I once heard my Lord of Canterbury reaſon againſt one Lambert, in the preſence of the Kings Majesties that dead is; the words of the Scripture, This is my Body that ſhall be betrayed for you, do plainly and lively expreſs the very Preſence, and ſo did I ſet it forth to the People in my Diocels.

Wincheſter commanded to tarry at London. And this is the effect of all that was ſaid againſt me at my being at the Council, as I can remember. To whom I declared how much I eſteemed obedience, and told them, I had taught in my Diocels how the whole life of a Chriſtian man conſiſteth in ſuffering properly; and therefore we may not do our own will, but the will of God; and among men, we muſt either ſuffer the Rulers will, or their powers: theſe will to order us, and their power to puniſh us. After declaration whereof, my Lord of Somerſet ſaid, Ye muſt tarry in the Town. Whereunto I answered, I would be contented at their commandment or pleaſure to tarry; but ſeeing I was no Offender, I deſired them I might not tarry as an Offender: and for declaration thereof, that I might have ſome Houſe in the Country about London, to remove unto for a ſhiſt. In deſiring whereof, I ſhew me to borrow Aſſhar. My Lord of Somerſet ſaid, if he had any, in faith he would lend me one. And in the end, my Lord of Somerſet deſired me to write what my mind was in Ceremonies, and to ſend it unto him, and with that departed.

Mr. Philpot complained upon of Wincheſter. Thus I have truly opened after what fort I have been complained on, that hath certainly come to my knowledge: Truth it is, that one Philpot in Weſtmiſter, whom I accounted altered in his wits (as I have heard) deviſed tales of me, the ſpecialties whereof I never was called to answer unto. Players and Miſtreſs alſo railed on me, and other made Ballads and Rhymes of me, but never Man had juſt cauſe to complain of any my ſayings, doings, or preachings, or to my knowledge did, otherwiſe than afore. And if any man ſhall put me in remembrance of any other complaint that might in my abſence be made of me, if I have heard it, I will grant ſo. But well affured I am, I was never complained on, and called to make answer to the complaint, but this one time in all my whole life by any man of any degree. Once the Lord Cromwel, God pardon his Soul and forgive him, cauſed one day and a half to be ſpent in a matter between Sir Francis Brian and me, which was ended, and I declared an honeſt man, which the Kings Majesty that is dead, God pardon his Soul, ſet forth with his familiarity to me incontinently. And this is all the trouble that I have had in my life, ſaving the ſending to the Fleet, being occaſioned by my own Letter to the Council, upon a zeal that I had, which they allowed not. And finally, this ſending of me to the Tower, which was without calling me before the Council, to hear what I could ſay. I am loth to be forthwith, and therefore I account all the complaints in my whole life made againſt me whereunto I have been made privy.

Wincheſter when and how often hath been called to answer.

The ſeventh Article.

Item, That after and upon occaſion of ſiſe and many other Complaints and Informations, you have been ſundry times admoniſhed, commanded and enjoyed to conform your ſelf, as to your duty appertained.

Wincheſter admoniſhed to conform himſelf.

Wincheſter.

To this ſeventh Article I answer, I was never called afore the Council by way of outward Complaint and Information, but only once in all my whole life, which was at my laſt coming to London. Whereunto I answered as afore, and have told the form and proceſs of Speech to ſerve for furniture of answer to this and that Article: for other than I have before written. I remember not to have done or ſuffered by the higher Powers in all my whole life, till my coming into the Tower, without that I have had any by Admonitions, as a man faulty or negligent at any time, that I remember not, for the obſervation of any thing already made or ſet forth by the Kings Majesty that now is, but have kept, and cauſed to be kept to my power, the Kings Majesties Acts, Statutes, Injunctions and Proclamations inviolably, having for that purpose ſuch a Chancellor, as in Orders and Ordinances hath been always himſelf diligent and precise, for that time I might have knowledge of his doings.

The eighth Article.

Item, That after the premiſſes, and for that theſe former Admonitions and Commandments notwithstanding, you did yet ſtill ſhew your ſelf not conformable, and for that alſo others by your example were much animated, and thereby occaſion of much uneaſineſſe miſtrud among the people, you were called before the Kings Majesties Council in the month of June, in the ſecond year of his Majesties Reign, and by them on his Majesties behalf commanded to Preach a Sermon before his Majesty, and therein to declare the juſtneſſe and godlineſſe of his Majesties Faith, in his proceedings upon certain matters partly mentioned in certain Articles to you delivered in Writing, and partly otherwiſe declared unto you.

Wincheſter enjoyed by the Kings Council to Preach the ſecond year of the Kings Reign.

The effect whereof, was, touching the ſupreſed Power and Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, that the ſame was juſtly and godly taken away in this Realm, and other the Kings Majesties Dominions, touching the juſt ſuppreſſing and taking away of Monasteries and Religious Houſes, of Pilgrimages, Relicks, Shrines, Images.

Certain points enjoyed by Wincheſter to Preach upon.

The Superſtitious going about of Saint Nicholas Biſhop, Saint Edmund, Saint Katharine, Saint Clement, and ſuch like; and juſt taking away of Chaurtries, Abbies and Colledges, halloving of Candles, Water, Almes, Palm, Holy Bread, Bread, creeping to the Croſſe, and ſuch like.

Alſo touching the ſetting forth of the Kings Majesties Authority in his young years, to be as great as if his Elighths were of many more years.

That Articulate Confeſſion is indifferent, and of no neceſſity by the Law of God; and touching the Proceſſion and Common Prayer in Engliſh.

Wincheſter.

This Article being of ſo many parts as it is, ſome true, ſome otherwiſe, muſt be answered by diviſion of it into divers members, to divide the one from the other, granting that which is true, denying that which is otherwiſe, and opening that which is ambiguous, avoiding that which is capitiouſ; ſo as, according to my Oath, I may open directly and plainly the truth, with ſincerity of Conſcience. The motion of Preaching was made unto me in mine own houſe by Mr. Cecil, upon the Duke of Somerſet behalf after I had been before the Council, as I have before ſaid; from which Council I departed (as before is rehearſed) as no offender; and therefore when Mr. Cecil ſpoke to me of Preaching before the Kings Majesty, with request to write my Sermon before, I denied that manner of Preaching, becauſe I ſaid it was to Preach like an Offender, and I was none, but departed from the Council otherwiſe, as I have before ſhewed. And the ſaid Mr. Cecil did not ſay to me that I was moved to Preach, becauſe because I was not Conformable; for I had at that time no manner of variance with the Council, but was in all Conformity with them, for any thing that I know, as I will answer afore God.

As for evil Example to any man, I could none give, for I never offended Law, Statute, or Proclamation in this Realm, nor did ever any act to the empaing of due obedience to the Kings Majesty in all my whole life; but by observation of them, and letting Innovations, have done as much as in me lay to maintain obedience.

After Master Cecil had spoken to me of Preaching, and delivered two Papers containing the Matters whereupon I should entreat, because I refused to give my Sermon in Writing (which was to me like an Offender) or to read those Papers of another mans device, as the conception and sincere manner of uttering of mine own Conscience (which me thought then and since, and yet, a marvellous unreasonable matter) touching both my conscience and honesty. I was then fet to the Duke of Somersets Graces chamber, and came in at a back door to himself alone, saving he took to him as Witness he said, the Lord now of Wiltshire, then great Master; and after many Words, he shewed me certain Articles subscribed by Lawyers, what a Bishop might command, and what the King might command, and what pain to the Disobeyer.

To whom I said plainly and truly, how those Lawyers subscription could not serve in this case to command me to utter to the People, for mine own device in words, that which is not indeed so; and if I might speak with these Lawyers (I said) his Grace should soon perceive them to agree with me. My Lord said, I should speak with no man, and I should do as I was bidden, or do worse, and bad me advise me till Dinner was done. And then was I conveyed by the Lord great Master to his Chamber, and there left alone to Dine, as was indeed honorably prepared. But I took my self to be in the nature of a Prisoner, and a restrained man.

And about two of the Clock at Afternoon, came unto me Master Thomas Smith, then Secretary, unto whom I complained of the unreasonableness of the matter, and shewed him certain particularities; who said it was not meant so precisely, but to speak of the matters. To whom I said, I was content to speak of the matters, and then if I speak not according to the truth of them, there should be enough to bear witness to my condemnation; and if I speak the truth, then they had their desire. And I said further, I thought I might with my conscience say so as men ought and should be content and satisfied. And further, if I thought that in my manner of the uttering of those matters, I should offend the Council, I had rather deny to speak of the thing, and begin the contention secretly with them, than to begin with Pulpit, and so bring my self in further trouble than needed; and therefore if they would have me Preach, I would Preach as of my self, and of these matters, so as I thought they should be content.

Whereupon I was brought up to my Lord of Somersets Chamber, and there the matter ended thus, That my Lord of Somersets said, he would require no writing of me, but remit it to me, so I spake of the matters in the Papers delivered me by Master Cecil. I told him I would speak of them, saving for Childrens toys, of going about of Saint Nicholas, and Saint Clement. If that be now gon (quoth I) and forgotten, if I be too buile in rehearsal of them, they will say I lumber their heads with Ceremonies, and thus they will defame me. When Ceremonies were plenty, they will say, I did nothing but preach on them, and now they be gon, I babble of them still. I said I would teach the chief Points, adding, that I would speak of other matters also, and with that, being put to my liberty to choofe the day, departed; and otherwise I was not spoken with concerning Preaching, saving after Mr. Cecil came unto me, whereof I shall speak anon.

And concerning the matters to be spoken of, all such things as be here rehearsed, be named in the Papers delivered unto me, although not altogether after this sort; saving the setting forth of the Kings Majesties Authority in his Minority, whereof there is no word in those Papers, nor was there ever any promise made of me to speak of it. Truth it is, that after I had signified the day when I would Preach, Master Cecil came unto me, making the chief Message to know the day when I would Preach: to whom I had sent word before, that it should be Saint Peters day, because me thought the Gospel served well for that purpose, and in procees of Communication, he told me, That he liked gaily well a word that I had said in another Communication, How a King was as much a King at one year of age, as at an hundred years of age, and if I touched it, he thought it would be well taken. I told him again, every man knew that, and then opened of my self the Matter further. And at his next repair unto me, which was the Monday before I Preached, the said Master Cecil brought me Papers of the Kings Majesties hand, shewing me how the Kings Highnes used to note every notable Sentence, and specially if it touched a King; and therefore (quoth he) if ye speak of a King, ye must joyn Counsel withal. Whereunto I made no Answer, but stifted to other matter, without making him any promise or denial, because I would neither bind my self, nor trouble my self to dispute that matter. For albeit it is godly and wisely done of every Prince to use Counsel; yet speaking of a Kings Power by Scripture, I cannot by expresse Scripture limit the Kings Power by Counsel. And bearing blindly by report some secret matter, that I will not speak of here, I thought not to meddle with it at all in the Pulpit; and yet to the effect to have our Sovereign Lord now obeyed, of which mind I was ever, I pointed to our Sovereign Lord there in presence, and said, He was only to be obeyed, and I would have but one King, and other words to that purpose. But for any promise to be made by me, I utterly deny it, and tell plainly the cause why I spake not otherwise of it. There was also in the Papers delivered unto me, occasion given me to speak of the Mass, because of Masses satisfactory, as some understand them. And also there was occasion to speak of the Sacrament of the Altar, because of the Proclamation passed of the same, which to be true, I shall justify by the said Papers.

The ninth Article.

Item, That you receiving the same, and promising to declare the same in a Sermon by you made before His Majesty for that purpose, on the Feast of S. Peter, in the said second Year of his Reign, did then and there contemptuously and disobediently omit to declare and set forth many of the said matters; and of divers other of the said Articles you spake and uttered your mind in such doubtful sort, as the Justness and Godliness of His Majesties Fathers, and his Proceedings, was not set forth according to the Commandments given unto you, and your own promise, to the great offence of the Hearers, and manifest contempt of his Majesty, and dangerous example of others.

Winchester.

Touching that Promise, I answer as afore; and as touching omission of that I should have spoken of, by contempt or disobedience, I answer by mine Oath, I did not omit any thing (if I did omit it) by contempt or disobedience; for I ever minded to fatishe the promise, to speak of all matters in those Papers according to my former Declaration. And if I did perforce omit any thing (whereof I can make now no assurance, it being two years and a half past since I Preached) but if I did omit any thing, he who knew my travel in the matter, would not marvel, being troubled with a Letter sent from the Duke of Somersets, whereof I shall speak after. So as from four of the clock on Thursday, till I had done my Sermon on the Friday, I did neither drink, eat, nor sleep, so careful was I to pass over the travel of Preaching without all slander of the Truth, and with satisfaction of my Promise, and discharge of my Duty to God and the Kings most excellent Majesty. Wherein, whether any thing were omitted or not, I could have answered more precisely than I can now, if according to my most instant sute, and the sute of my servants, the matter had been heard while it was in fresh memory. But because omission may

the above Article. Omission
by contempt.

KING be by infirmity of Nature, in which oblivion is a pain of our Original Sin, in which case it is no mortal offence, if a man being put in remembrance will purge it; I therefore, according to the true Testimony of mine own confidence, dare the more boldly deny all contempt and disobedience, having for my Declaration a general Sentence spoken in my Sermon, that I agreed with the upper part in their Laws, Orders and Commandments, or such like words, and found fault only in the lower part. By which Sentence it appeared, how I allowed in the whole that was past hitherto, and only differed from the doings of them that attempt Innovations of their own presumption. And furthermore I say, That that Saying (Omission) here objected unto me, if it were true, as I know it not to be, may happen two ways, one way by infirmity of Nature, another way of purpose. Charity of a Christian man permitteth not to determine the worst of that which is doubtful and ambiguous to both Parties: as touching doubtfulness Objected, I take God to record, I minded to speak simply, and to be on the Kings Majesties side only, and not to go invincible in the World with ambiguities, esteeming him, &c. The worst man of all, is he that will make himself a lock of words and speech, which is known not to be my fashion, nor do I think this Life worth that dissimulation; and how can that be a doubtful Speech in him, that professeth to agree with the Kings Laws, Injunctions and Statutes, which I did expressly? There be that call in doubt whatsoever serveth not their appetite. It is not in the speaker to satisfy the hearer, that will doubt where doubt is not. The sum of my Teaching was, that all visible Things be ordered to serve us, which we may in convenient service use. And when we serve them, that is an abuse, and may then, at the Rulers pleasure, unless Scripture appointeth a special use of them, be corrected in that use, or taken away for Reformation. And this is a plain Teaching that hath no doubt in it, but a yea and a nay on both sides, without a mean to make a Doubt. And if any that doubteth cometh unto me, I will resolve him the Doubt as I can. And if I promised to speak plainly, or am commanded to speak plainly, and cannot, then is my fault to Promise only in the nature of Folly and Ignorance, whereunto I resort not for a shift, whereof indeed I profess the knowledge, but to shew how sometime to my hindrance I am forced. Learned, that can speak plainly, and yet speak doubtfully: otherwhiles am rejected as one that understandeth not the matter at all. As touching contempt, there can be none manifest that proceedeth of a privy Promise; if I had broken it, I intended not, but intended to take it as appears by my general Sentence, to agree with the Superiors, and only find fault in the inferior Subjects, who daily transgress the Kings Majesties Proclamations, and other, whereof I spake then.

The tenth Article.

In Article Item, That you being also commanded on his Majesties behalf, for avoiding of Tumult, and for other great Considerations inhibited to treat of any Matter in controversy concerning the Mass, and of the Communion, Then commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, did, contrary to the said Commandment and Inhibition, Declare divers your Judgments and Opinions in the same, in the manifest contents of his Highness said Inhibition, to the great offence of the Hearers, and disturbance of Common Quiet and Unity of the Realm.

Winchester.

Answer to the 10. Article. To the tenth Article the said Bishop answered, That the Wednesday after After-noon, next before the Friday when I Preached, Mr. Cecil came to me, and having in all his other Accesses spoken no word thereof, did then utter and advise me from the Duke of Somerset, that I should not speak of the Sacrament, or of the Mass, whereby he said I should avoid trouble. And when he saw me not to take it well, I mean, quoth he, doubtful matters. I asked him what? he said Transubstantiation. I told him, He writ not what Transubstantiation meant. I will Preach, quoth I, the very Presence of Christs most Precious Body and Blood in the Sacrament, which is the Catholick Faith, and no doubtful matter, ne yet in Controversie, saving that certain unlearned speak of it they wot not what. And among the matters, quoth I, whereof I have promised to speak, I must by special words speak of the Sacrament, and of the Mass also. And when I shall so speak of them, I will not forbear to utter my Faith and true belief therein, which I think necessary for the Kings Majesty to know; and therefore, if I will to be hanged when I come down, I would speak it. Which plain zeal of my Confidence, grounded upon Gods Commandment to do his Message truly, I would not hide but utter so, as my Lord should, if he would not have it spoken of, not let me to come there as he might have done: whereas else, if I had had a deceitful purpose, I might have accepted the advice, and without any colour of trouble, have refused to follow it as a thing grounded upon Wealth only, as it was then uttered. With this my Answer, Master Cecil departed, and upon the Thursday, which was the next Day following, and the Evening before I Preached, between three and four at Afternoon, I received a Letter signed with the hand of the Duke of Somerset, the Copy whereof I am ready to exhibit, and took it then, and esteemed it so now to contain no effectual inhibition, whereunto I might by Gods Law, or the Kings Majesties Laws, with discharge of my Confidence and Duty obey, although the said Letters had been (as they were not) in such terms framed, but only to speak of matters in Controversie of the Sacrament, which indeed I did not, but only uttered a Truth to my Confidence most certainly perswaded of the most Holy Sacrament, necessary to be known to the Kings Majesty, and to be uttered by me admitted to that place of Preaching from whence God commandeth his Truth to be uttered, which in this nature of Truth (the undue estimation and use whereof, Saint Paul threatneth with temporal death) may in no wise be omitted. So as I was and am perswaded, the right estimation of the Sacrament to be to acknowledge the very Presence of the same most precious Body and Blood present in the Sacrament to feed us, that was given to redeem us. If I shewed not my Sovereign Lord the truth thereof, I for my part suffer him willingly to fall into that extreme danger of Body, which Saint Paul threatneth, whose Person I am bound by nature, by special Oaths, and by Gods Laws, to preserve to my power, as I will do, and must do by all ways and means. And if the Kings Majesty doth vouchsafe to reach his People not to obey his Commandment, where God Commandeth the contrary, I might not take my Lord of Somerset's Letter for an Inhibition to hold my peace, when God biddeth me to speak, as he doth when the Wolf cometh, and not to hide my self in silence, which is the most shameful running away of all. I have much matter to alledge against the Letter why I should not credit it, written in his name alone, against a common Letter (as I took it) written by him and the Council, and published in Print the first day of the said Month, which maintaineth my Preaching of the Sacrament and Mass, according to the Proclamation and Injunctions, the violation of which publick Letters, had been a disorder and contempt, whereas I neither offended in the one nor the other.

And as for tumult, none could reasonably be feared of any thing spoken agreeable to the Kings Majesties Laws, as there did follow none, nor the People, nor any Man did offer my person any wrongs, or make tumult against me, notwithstanding, Players, Jesters, Ryimers, Ballad-makers, did signifie me to be of the true Catholick Faith, which I, according to my duty, declared to the Kings Majesty, from whom I may hide no truth that I think expedient for him to know. And as the name of God cannot be used of any Creature against God, no more can the Kings name be used of any Subject against his Highness. Wherefore seeing the abuse of this Holy Sacrament hath in it a danger assured by Scripture, of Body and Soul; whosoever is perswaded in the Catholick Faith, as I am, findeth himself so burdened to utter that unto his Majesty, 'as no worldly loss can let him to do his duty in that behalf, and much less my Lords private Letters written without other of the Councils hands.

Winchester would not take of his Sacrament and of the Mass.

St. Paul threatneth death to the offenders of the Sacrament: Kings the real presence of Christ is in the Sacrament. Kings argument. And why would not Winchester allow this reason in others, in Q. Marcellinus speaking the word of truth since their conscience, contrary to his inhibition?

But I heard no more of my matter in one whole year after almost, within fourteen days, notwithstanding two Letters written by me to the Council, of most humble request to be heard according to Justice. And then at the end of two years almost, came unto me the Duke of Somerset, with other of the Council; which matter, because it is left out here, I shall not touch, but prepare it in a matter apart, for declaration of my behaviour at all times.

Item, That after that, &c. the ninth day of July, in the fourth year of his Majesties Reign, his Highness sent unto you his Graces Letters, with a certain Submission and Articles, whereunto his Grace willed and commanded you to subscribe. TOWER

To the twelfth Article, for answer therunto, he granted, that about the time mentioned in this Article, the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Warwick, Lord great Master, Sir William Herbert, and Mr. Secretary Peter came to the Tower, and called me before them, and delivered unto me the Kings Majesties Letters, which I have to shew, and received them at the hands of the Lord Treasurer upon my knees, kissed them as my duty was, and still upon my knees read them, whereas they gently required me to take more ease, and go apart with them, and consider them: which after that I had thoroughly read, I much lamented that I should be commanded to say of my self as was there written, and to say otherwise of my self than my Conscience will suffer me, and where I trust my Deeds will not condemn me, there to condemn my self with my tongue. I should sooner, (quoth I to them) by commandment, I think if ye would bid me tumble my self desperately into the Thames.

My Lord of Warwick seeing me in that Agony, said, What say ye, my Lord, quoth he, to the other Articles? I answered, That I was loth to disobey where I might obey, and not wrest my Conscience, destroying the comfort of it, as to say untruly of my self. Well, quoth my Lord of Warwick, Will ye subscribe to the other Articles? I told him I would. But then, quoth I, the Article that toucheth me must be put out. I was answered, that needeth not, for I might write on the out-side what I would say unto it. And then my Lord of Warwick, entertained me very gently, and would needs, whilst I should write, have me sit down by him; and when he saw me make somewhat strange so to do, he pulled me nearer him, and said, we had ere this sit together, and trusted we should do so again.

And then having Pen and Ink given me, I wrote, as I remember, on the Article that touched me, these words, I cannot with my Conscience say this of my self; or such like words. And there followed an Article of the Kings Majesties Primacy, and I began to write on the side of that, and had made an I, onward, as may appear by the Articles, and they would not have me do so, but write only my name after their Articles; which I did. Whereat, because they shewed themselves pleased and content, I was bold to tell them merrily, That by this means I had placed my subscription above them all; and thereupon it pleased them to entertain me much to my comfort.

And I was bold to recount unto them merry Tales of my misery in Prison, which they seemed content to hear; and then I told them also (desiring them not to be miscontent with that I should say) when I remember each of them alone, I could not think otherwise but they were my good Lords, and yet when they meet together, I feel no remedy at their hands. I looked (quoth I) when my Lord of Somerset was here, to go out within two days, and made my farewell Feast in the Tower and all, since which time there is a month past, or thereabout; and I agree with them, and now agree with you, and I may fortune to be forgotten. My Lord Treasurer said nay, I should hear from them the next day: and so by their special Commandment I came out of the Chamber after them, that they might be seen to depart as my good Lords; and so was done. By which Process appeareth, how there was in me no contempt, as is said in this Article, but such a Subscription made as they were content to suffer me to make, which I took in my Conscience for a whole satisfaction of the Kings Majesties Letters, which I desire may be deemed accordingly. And one thing was said unto me further, That other would have put in many mo Articles, but they would have no more but those.

The thirteenth Article.

Item, That you having espoused certain of the Kings Majesties Honorable Council sent unto you the twelfth of July, in the said fourth year, with the said submission, and being on his Majesties behalf required and commanded to consider again, and better the said Commission, and to subscribe the same, stood in justification of your self, and would in no way, subscribe therunto.

Winchester.

To the thirteenth Article he said: The next day after the being in the Tower of the said Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Warwick, and other, came unto me Sir William Herbert and Mr. Secretary Peter, to devise with me how to make some acknowledging of my Fault (as they said) because the other Form liked me not. Whereunto I said, I knew my self innocent, and to enter with you to entreat of a device to impair my innocency in any the least point either by Words or Writings, it can have no policy in it. For although I did more esteem Liberty of Body, than the defamation of my self, yet, quoth I, when I had to do with you, I were not so assured by you to come out. For when I were by own (a) Pen once made a naughty Man, then were I not the more sure to come out, but had locked my self the more sure in; and a small pleasure were it to me to have my Body at Liberty by your procurement, and to have my Conscience in perpetual Prison by mine own act. Many more Words there were, and persuasions on their parts; which caused me to require of them, for the Passion of God, that my matter might take an end by Justice; and so they departed, there being no Contempt or Faction of Disobedience shewed on my behalf, but only Allegation for my defence of mine own Innocency in the best manner I could devise, as I trust they will testify.

The fourteenth Article.

Item, That after all this, viz. the fourteenth day of July in the said fourth year, the Kings Majesty sent yet again unto you certain of his Majesties Honorable Council, with another Submission, and divers other Articles, willing and commanding you to Subscribe your name therunto. Which to do you utterly refused.

Winchester.

To the fourteenth Article he said, That on the Monday in the Morning following came the Bishop of London, Sir William Herbert, Mr. Secretary Peter, and another whom I know not, who brought with them a Paper, with certain Articles written in it, which they required me to subscribe. Whereupon I most instantly required, that my matter might be tried by Justice, which although it were more grievous, yet it hath a commodity with it, that it endeth certainly the matter. And I could never yet come to my assured stay, and therefore refused to meddle with any more Articles, or to trouble my self with the reading of them; and yet they desired me instantly to read them, that I was content, and did read, and to shew my perfect obedient mind, offered incontinently upon my delivery out of Prison to make answer to them all, such as I would abide by, and suffer pain for, if I had deferred it. I would indeed gladly have been in hand with my Lord of London; but he said he came not to dispute, and said, It was the hand of God that I was thus in Prison, because I had so troubled other men in my time.

The fifteenth Article.

Item, That after all this, viz. the nineteenth day of July, in the said fourth year, you being personally called before the Kings Majesties Privy Council, and having the said Submission and Articles openly and distinctly read unto you, and required to subscribe the same, refused for unjust considerations by you alleged to subscribe the same.

Winchester.

Anno
1550.

To the fifteenth Article I grant, That upon a Saturday at Afternoon, even at such time of the day as they were at Even-song in the Chappel of the Court, I was brought thither, and at my coming the Lords of the Council said, They were all my Judges by special Commission, and intended to proceed thus with me: That I should subscribe certain Articles which were then read, and I must directly make answer, whether I would subscribe them or no. I answered on my knees in this wise: For the Passion of God, my Lords, be my good Lords, and let me be tried by Justice, whether I be faulty or no: and as for these Articles, as soon as ye deliver me to my liberty, I would make answer to them, whether I would subscribe them or no. Then they having further to say, I answered, These Articles were of divers sorts: some be Laws, which may not qualify, some be no Laws, but learning and fact, which may have divers understandings, and a subscription to them without telling what I mean, were over dangerous. And therefore I offered, for the more declaration of mine obedience to all their Requests, That if they would deliver me the Articles into the Prison with me, I would shortly make them particular answer, and suffer the pains of the Law, that by my Answer I might incur into. Whereupon I was commanded to go apart, and they sent unto me the Lord Treasurer and Mr. Secretary Peter, who communed with me of a mean way, and that liked not the Lords. And then I was called forth again, and my absolute subscription required again: and I again made offer to answer particularly, for I could not with my Conscience subscribe them as they were absolutely. And these my considerations I trust to be just, seeing no man for any Commandments ought to offend his Conscience, as I must have done in that case.

The sixteenth Article.

Item, That for your sundry and manifold Contempts and Disobediences in this behalf used, the Fruits of your Bishoprick were then by special Commission of his Majesty justly and lawfully sequestered.

Winchester.

To the sixteenth Article, I deny Contempts and Disobedience of parts, and say, That my doings cannot so be termed, because it is taught in this Realm for a Doctrine of Obedience, That if a King command that which is contrary to the Commandment of God, the Subject may not do as he is commanded, but humbly stand to his Conscience, which is my case, who could not with my Conscience do as I was required. And as touching the Fact of Decree, there was indeed a Decree read, having words placed and framed, as though I were such an Offender, which matter I deny. And in that Decree was mention made of Administration of Fruits; but whether the former words were of the present Tense, or else to be sequestered, I cannot precisely tell, but do refer that to the tenor of the Decree.

The seventeenth Article.

Item, That after this you had intimation and peremptory monition, with communication, that you should within three months next following the said intimation, reconcile and submit your self, under pain of deprivation.

Winchester.

To the seventeenth Article I answer, that in the same Decree of sequestration at the same time read, I kneeling from the beginning of the Decree to the latter end, I remember there was an Intimation and three months spoken of, and expressed also, how at every months end I should have Pen and Ink offered to write, if I would yet subscribe; and as I understand, it was upon the pain of proceeding further. And I do not remember that I heard the word Deprivation, but therein I refer me to the Acts of the Sentence; which when it was read, I desired it might be testified what mine offer was, to answer all those Articles particularly, even remaining in Prison. And this done, I made sute for some of my Servants abroad to resort to me to the Tower, partly for my comfort, partly for my necessary business, which could not be obtained. And yet to provoke it, I said to my Lord of Warwick, how for agreeing with my Lord of Somerset, I had some commodity, and for agreeing with him had nothing, and therefore would needs by Intercession press him, that I might by this means have some of my Servants resorting unto me. He answered very gently. And then one said, I should within two or three days have some body come to me. And then I was dismissed, with commandment to the Lieutenant, to let me have the same liberty I had, but no more.

The eighteenth Article.

Item, That the said three months are now thoroughly expired, and run.

Winchester.

To the eighteenth Article he said, There is almost six months passed in time and number of days, but not one month past to the effect of the Law, nor ten days neither, because I have been so kept in Prison, that I could not seek for remedy in form above said, nor was there at every month, after the form of the Sentence, offered me Pen, Ink, and liberty given me to consult and deliberate with other learned Men and Friends, what were best to do, or to send unto them. And furthermore, the very eighth day after the Decree given, I protested before my Servants, whom I had only commodity to use as witnesses of the nullity of the Decree, for the evident and apparent matter in it; but if it were in Law, I appealed to the Kings Majesty, because my request was not admitted, to have the copy of the Articles to answer them particularly, and because it is excessive correction, to sequester my Fruits and keep me in Prison. With other cases to be deduced where I might have opportunity. Which appellation I protested to intimate as soon as I could come to any presence meet therefore, as I did in this Assembly at my last repair, desiring therewith the benefit restitutionis in integrum, because of mine Imprisonment; and therefore do answer this matter with protestation of that Appeal, and utterly deny all manner of contempt.

Winchester
appeal to the King.

The nineteenth Article.

Item, That you hitherto, according to the said Intimation and monition, have not submitted, reconciled, nor reformed your self, but contemptuously yet still remain in your first disobedience.

Winchester.

To the nineteenth Article I say, That I have been all this while in Prison so kept, as no man could have access to counsel with me, nor any means to write or send to any man, having made continual sute to Master Lieutenant

and

KING and Master Marshal, under whose Custody I am here, and to make lute in my name to the Lords of the Council, that I might come to Hearing, or else be Bailed upon Surety; which I could not obtain, and so have remained under the benefit of my said Appeal to the Kings Majesty, made, as I might for the time, which I desirous desire I may have liberty to prosecute.

And whereas answering to these Articles for declaration of the integrity of my Conscience, I use in the same places general words: I protest I mean not by those words to set forth my self otherwise more arrogantly than as my direct intent (which excludeth malice) and purpose moveth me to say, and as my Conscience beareth witness unto me at this time, and therefore will say therein with St. Paul, Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed non in hoc iustificatus sum. Wherefore if any especially be objected unto me, wherein by ignorance or oversight and negligence, any offence of mine may appear against the Kings Majesties Laws, Statutes and Injunctions, I shall desire and protest that it be not prejudicial to mine Answer (for this protest, Credo, as Lawyers in Civil matters use that term) to be true, that is to say, such as without any alteration in my Conscience presently I may of my self say in affirmation or denial, as afore is answered. And whereas I spake of commandment to be made to me against Gods Law, I protest not to touch my Sovereign Lords Honor therein, which my duty is by all means to preserve, but that the commandment given resolveth to be against Gods Law on my part in the obedience to be given, because I may not answer or say otherwise but ob, est; non, non. So as my words and heart may agree together, or else I should offend Gods Law, which my Sovereign, if he knew my Conscience, would not command me.

After these things thus passed, certain of the Council, by the Kings appointment had sundry days and times accels to him in the Tower to persuade with him; which were these, the Duke of Somerset, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord great Chamberlain, and Master Secretary Peter. Who repairing to him the tenth day of June, Anno 1550. he desired of them to see the Kings Book of proceedings; upon the sight whereof he would make a full Answer, seeming to be willing in all things to conform himself therunto, and promising, that in case any thing offended his Conscience, he would open it to none but to the Council. Whereupon it was agreed, the Book should be sent him to see his Answer, that his Case might be resolved upon, and that for the mean time he should have the liberty of the Gallery and Garden in the Tower, when the Duke of Norfolk were absent.

The King then was lying at Greenwich, at which time the Lieutenant of the Tower was appointed to deliver the Kings Book to the Bishop of Winchester. Who within three days after (which was the thirteenth of June) made Declaration again unto the Council, that the Bishop having perused it, said unto him, He could make no direct answer unless he were at liberty, and so being, he would say his Conscience. Whereupon the Lords, and other that had been with him the other day, were appointed to go to him again to receive a direct Answer, that the Council thereupon might determine further order for him.

The Answer of the Bishop being received, through the report of the Lords which had been with him, declaration was made again the eighth day of July, 1550, that his Answers were ever doubtful, refusing while he were in Prison to make any direct Answer. Wherefore it was determined, that he should be directly examined, whether he would sincerely conform himself unto the Kings Majesties proceedings, or not. For which purpose it was agreed, that particular Articles should be drawn, to see whether he would subscribe them or not, and a Letter also directed unto him from the Kings Highness, with the which the Lord Treasurer, the Lord great Master, the Master of the Horse, and Master Secretary Peter, should repair unto him; the Tenor of which Letter hereafter inculth.

A Letter sent to the Bishop of Winchester, signed by the King, and subscribed by the Council.

IT is not (we think) unknown unto you, with what Clemency and Favour We, by the advice of our Council, caused you to be heard and used, upon the sundry Complaints and Informations that were made to Us and Our said Council of your disordered Doings and Words, both at the time of our late Visitation, and otherwise. Which notwithstanding, considering that the Favour, both then and many other times ministered unto you, wrought rather an Insolent wilfulness in your self, than any obedient Conformity, such as would have been deemed a man of your Vocation, we would not but use some demonstration of Justice towards you, as well for such notorious and apparent Contempt, and other Inobediences, as after and contrary to our Commandment were openly known in you, as also for some example and terror of such others as by your example seemed to take courage, to matter and grudge against our most Godly Proceedings, whereof great discord and inconvenience at that time might have ensued. For the avoiding whereof, and for your just deservings, you were by our said Council committed to Ward. Where albeit we have suffered you to remain a long space, sending unto you in the mean time at sundry times divers of the Noble Men, and others of our Privy Council, and travelling by them with Clemency and Favour to have reduced you to the knowledge of your Duty; yet in all this time have you neither acknowledged your faults, nor made any submission as might have benefited you, nor yet showed any appearance either of Repentance, or of any good Conformity to our Godly Proceedings. Whereunto albeit we both have good cause to be offended, and might also justly, by the order of our Laws, cause your former doings to be reformed and punished to the example of others: yet for that We would both the World and your self also should know that we delight more in Clemency, than in the straight administration of Justice, We have vouchsafed, not only to address unto you these our Letters, but also to send essays unto you, four of our Privy Council with certain Articles, which being by Us, with the advice of our said Council considered, We think requisite, for sundry Considerations, to be subscribed by you, and therefore Will and Command you to subscribe the said Articles, upon pain of incurring such Punishment and Penalties as by our Laws may be put upon you for not doing the same.

Given at our Palace of Westminster, the eighth day of July, the fourth Year of our Reigne.

With this Letter addressed from the King and his Council, these Articles also were delivered to the Bishop of Winchester, here following.

The Copy of the Articles.

WHereas I, Stephen Bishop of Winchester, have been suspected as one too much favoring the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishops Romes Authority, Decrees and Ordinances, and as one that did not approve or allow the Kings Majesties proceedings in alteration of certain Rites in Religion, was convened before the Kings Highnesss Council, and admonished thereof; and having certain things appointed for me to do and preach for my Declaration, have not done that as I ought to do, although I promised to do the same; whereby I have not only incurred the Kings Majesties indignation, but also divers of his Highnesss Subjects, have by my example taken encouragement (as his Grace Council is certainly informed) to repine at his Majesties most Godly Proceedings; I am right sorry therefore, and acknowledge my self condignly to have been punished, and do most heartily thank his Majesty, that of his great Clemency it hath pleased his Highness to deal with me, not according to rigor, but mercy. And to the intent it may appear to the World how little I do repine at his Highnesss doings, which be in Religion most Godly, and to the Commonwealth most profitable, I do affirm and say freely of mine own Will, without any Compulsions, as ensue.

I. That by the Law of God, and the Authority of Scriptures, the Kings Majesty and his Successors are the Supreme Heads of the Churches of England, and also of Ireland.

II. Item, That the appointing of Holy-days and Fasting-days, as Lent, Ember-days, or any such like, or to dispench therewith, is in the Kings Majesties Authority and Power: and his Highness as Supreme Head of the said Churches of England and Ireland, and Governor thereof, may appoint the manner and time of the Holy-days and Fasting-days, or dispench therewith, as to his Wisdom shall seem most convenient for the Honor of God and the Wealth of this Realm.

III. Item, That the Kings Majesty hath most Christianly and Godly set forth, by and with the consent of the whole Parliament, a devout and Christian Book of Service of the Church, to be frequented by the Church, which Book is to be accepted and allowed of all Bishops, Pastors, Curates, and all Ministers Ecclesiastical of the Realm of England, and so of him to be declared and commended in all places where he shall fortune to preach or speak to the People of it, that it is a Godly and Christian Book and Order, and to be all-way accepted, and observed of all the Kings Majesties true Subjects.

IV. I do acknowledge the Kings Majesty that now is (whose Life God long preserve) to be my Sovereign Lord, and Supreme Head under Christ to me as a Bishop of this Realm, and natural Subject to his Majesty, and now in this his young and tender Age to be my full and entire King; and that I, and all other his Highnesses Subjects, are bound to obey all his Majesties Proclamations, Statutes, Lawes and Commandments, made, promulgated, and set forth in his Highnesses young Age, as well as though his Highness were at this present thirty or forty years old.

V. Item, I confess and acknowledge, That the Statute, commonly called the Statute of the Six Articles, for just causes and grounds, is by Authority of Parliament repealed and disannulled.

VI. Item, That his Majesty and his Successors have Authority in the said Churches of England, and also of Ireland, to alter, reform, correct, and amend all Errors and Abuses, and all Rites and Ceremonies Ecclesiastical, as shall seem from time to time to his Highness and his Successors most convenient for the edification of his People, so that the same alteration be not contrary or repugnant to the Scripture and Law of God.

Subscribed by Stephen Winchester, with the Testimonial Hands of the Council to the same.

To these Articles afore specified, although Winchester with his own hand did subscribe, granting and consenting to the Supremacy of the King as well then being, as of his Successors to come; yet because he stuck so much in the first Point touching his Submission, and would in no case subscribe to the same, but only made his Answer in the Margent (as is above noted) it was therefore thought good to the King, that the Master of the Horse, and Master Secretary Peter should repair unto him again with the same request of Submission, exhorting him to look better upon it; and in case the words seemed too sore, then to refer it unto himself, in what sort and with what words he should devise to submit him, that upon the acknowledgement of his fault, the Kings Highness might extend his mercy and liberality towards him as it was determined. Which was the eleventh day of June, the year above said.

When the Master of the Horse and Secretary Peter had been with him in the Tower according to their Commission, returning from him again, they declared unto the King and his Council how precisely the said Bishop stood in justification of himself, that he had never offended the Kings Majesty; wherefore he utterly refused to make any Submission at all. For the more surety of which denial, it was agreed, That a new Book of Articles should be devised, wherewith the said Master of the Horse, and Master Secretary Peter, should repair unto him again; and for the more authentick Proceeding with him, they should have with them a Divine and a Temporal Lawyer, which were the Bishop of London, and Master Cordrey.

The Copy of the last Articles sent to the Bishop of Winchester.

Whereas I Stephen Bishop of Winchester, have been suspected as one that did not approve or allow the Kings Majesties Proceedings in alteration of certain Rites in Religion, and was convened before the Kings Highnesses Council, and admonished thereof, and having certain things appointed for me to do and preach for my Declaration, have not done therein as I ought to do, whereby I have deserved his Majesties displeasure; I am right sorry therefore. And to the intent it may appear to the World how little I do repine at his Highnesses doing, which be in Religion most godly, and to the Commonwealth most profitable, I do affirm as followeth.

I. That the late King, of most famous memory, King Henry the Eighth, our late Sovereign Lord, justly and of good reason and ground hath taken away, and caused to be suppressed and defaced, all Monasteries and Religious Houses, and all Conventicles and Convents of Monks, Friars, Nuns, Canons, Bonhomies, and other Persons called Religious, and that the same being so dissolved, the Persons therein bound and professed to Obedience to a Person, Place, Habit, and other superstitious Rites and Ceremonies, upon that dissolution and order appointed by the Kings Majesties Authority at Supreme Head of the Church, are clearly released and acquitted of those Vows and Professions, and at their full liberty, as though those unworthy and superstitious Vows had never been made.

II. Item, That any person may lawfully marry, without any dispensation from the Bishop of Rome, or any other man, with any person whom it is not prohibited to contract matrimony with, by the Law Levitical.

III. Item, That the Vowing and going on Pilgrimage to Images, or the Bones or Reliques of any Saints, hath been superstitiously used, and cause of much Wickedness and Idolatry, and therefore justly abolished by the late said King of famous memory, and the Images and Reliques so abused have been for great and godly Considerations defaced and destroyed.

IV. Item, That the counterfeiting of St. Nicholas, St. Clement, St. Katharine, and St. Edmund, by Children hereof brought into the Church, was a meer mockery and foolishness, and therefore justly abolished and taken away.

V. Item, It is convenient and godly, that the Scripture of the Old Testament and New, that is, the whole Bible, be had in English and published, to be read of every man, and that whosoever doth rebel and desert men from reading thereof, doth evil and damnably.

VI. Item, That the said late King of just ground and reason, did receive into his hands the authority and disposition of Chaurtries, and such Livings as were given for the maintenance of private Masters, and did well change drivers of them to other uses.

VII. Also the Kings Majesty that now is, by the advice and consent of the Parliament, did upon just ground and reason, suppress, abolish, and take away the said Chaurtries, and such other Livings as were used and occupied for maintenance of private Masters, and Masters satisfactory for the Souls of them that are dead, or finding of Obies, Lights, or other like things: The Mafers that was wont to be said of Priests was full of abuses, and had very few things of Christs Institution, besides the Epistle, Gospel, the Lords Prayer, and the words of the Lords Supper; the rest, for the more part, were invented and devised by Bishops of Rome, and by other men of the same sort, and therefore justly taken away by the Statutes and Lawes of this Realm; and the Communion which is placed instead thereof, is very Godly, and agreeable to the Scriptures.

VIII. Item, That it is most convenient and fit, and according to the first Institution, that all Christian men should receive the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ in both the kinds, that is, in Bread and Wine.

IX. And the Mafers, wherein only the Priest receiveth, and the other do but look on, is but the invention of Man, and the Ordinance of the Bishop of Romes Church, not agreeable to Scripture.

X. Item, That upon good and godly considerations it is ordered in the said Book and Order, that the Sacrament should not be lifted up, and showed to the People to be adored, but RING to be with godly Devotion received, as it was first instituted.

XI. Item, That it is well, politickly and godly done, that the Kings Majesty by Act of Parliament, hath commanded all Images which have stood in Churches and Chappels, to be clearly abolished and defaced, lest hereafter at any time they should give occasion of Idolatry, or be abused, as many of them heretofore have been, with Pilgrimages, and such Idolatrous Worshipping.

XII. And also for that like godly and good considerations, by the same Authority of Parliament, all Mass-Books, Copebooks, Grails, and other Books of the Service in Latine, heretofore used, should be abolished and defaced, as well for certain Superstitions in them contained, as also to avoid confusion: And that the said Service in the Church should be through the whole Realm in one uniform Conformity, and no occasion through those old Books to the contrary.

XIII. That Bishops, Priests and Deacons, have no commandment of the Law of God, either to wear Chastity, or to abstain continually from Marriage.

XIV. Item, That all Canons, Constitutions, Laws positive, and Ordinances of Men, which do prohibit or forbid Marriage to any Bishop, Priest or Deacon, be justly, and upon godly grounds and considerations taken away and abolished by Authority of Parliament.

XV. The Homilies lately commanded and set forth by the Kings Majesty, to be read in the Congregation of England, are godly and wholesome, and do teach such Doctrine as ought to be embraced of all men.

XVI. The Book set forth by the Kings Majesty, by Authority of Parliament, containing the form and manner of making and consecrating of Arch-bishops, Bishops, Priests and Deacons, is godly, and in no point contrary to the wholesome Doctrine of the Gospel, and therefore ought to be received and approved of all the faithful Members of the Church of England, and namely the Ministers of Gods Word, and by them recommended to the People.

XVII. That the Orders of Sub-deacons, Benet and Colet, and such others as were commonly called, Minors Ordines, be not necessary by the Word of God to be reckoned in the Church, and be justly left out in the said Book of Orders.

XVIII. That the Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all Doctrine required of necessity for Eternal Salvation through Faith in Jesus Christ, and that nothing is to be taught as required of necessity to Eternal Salvation, but that which may be concluded and proved by the Holy Scriptures.

XIX. That upon good and godly considerations it was and is commanded by the Kings Majesties Injunctions, That the Paraphrases of Erasmus in English, should be set up in some convenient place in every Parish Church of this Realm, whereto the Parishioners may most commodiously resort to read the same.

XX. And because these Articles aforesaid, do contain only such Matters as be already published and openly set forth by the Kings Majesties Authority, by the Advice of his Highness Council, for many great and godly Considerations; and amongst others for the common Tranquillity and Unity of the Realm; His Majesties pleasure, by the Advice aforesaid, is, That you the Bishop of Winchester, shall not only affirm these Articles with subscription of your Hand, but also declare and profess your Self well contented, willing and ready to Publish and Preach the same at such Times and Places, and before such Audience, as to his Majesty from time to time shall seem convenient and requisite, upon pain of incurring such Penalties and Punishments as for not doing the same, may by his Majesties Laws be inflicted upon you.

These Articles were sent the fifteenth of July.

The Bishop of Winchester receiving and perusing these Articles, made this Answer again: That first, Touching the Article of Submission, he would in no wise consent, affirming, as he had done before, that he had never offended the Kings Majesty in any such sort as should give him cause thus to submit himself; praying earnestly to be brought unto his Trial, wherein he refused the Kings mercy, and desired nothing but "Justice". And for the rest of the Articles, he answered, That after he were past his Trial in the first point, and were at liberty, then it should appear what he would do in them; if not being (as he said) reasonable, that he should subscribe them in Prison.

Of this Answer, when the King and his Council had intelligence by the foresaid Master of the Horse, Secretary Peter, the Bishop of London, and Mr. Goodrick, who had been with him, it was agreed that he should be sent for before the whole Council, and peremptorily examined once again, whether he would stand at this Point or no; which if he did, then to denounce unto him the Sequestration of his Benefice, and consequently the Intimation, in case he were not reformed within three Months, as in the day of his appearance shall appear. The tenor and words of which Sequestration, with the Intimation, followeth.

The words of the Sequestration, with the Intimation to the Bishop of Winchester.

FOrasmuch as the Kings Majesty, our most Gracious Sovereign Lord, understandeth and it is also manifestly known and notorious unto us, That the clemency and long-sufferance of His Majesty, worketh not in you that good effect, and humbleness, and conformity, that is requisite in a good Subject; and for that your Disobediencies, Contempts, and other Misbehaviours, for the which you were by His Majesties Authority justly committed to Ward, have since your said committing daily more and more increased in you, in such sort as a great Slander and Offence is thereof risen in many parts of the Realm, whereby also much Slander, Diffusion, Trouble and Unquietness, is very like more to ensue, if your said Offences, being as they be, openly known, should pass unpunished: We let you wit, That having special and express Commission and Commandment from His Majesty, as well for your Contumacies and Contempts so long continued, and yet daily more increasing, as also for the exchange of the Slander and Offence of the People, which by your said ill Demourers are risen, and for that also the Church of Winchester may be in the mean time provided of a good Minister, that may and will see all things done and quietly executed according to the Laws and common Orders of this Realm, and for sundry other great and urgent Causes, We do by these Presence sequester all the Fruits, Revenues, Lands, and Possessions of your Bishoprick of Winchester, and discontinue, deem and judge the same to be committed to the several Receivers, Collection and Custody of such person or persons as His Majesty shall appoint for that purpose. And because your former Disobediencies and Contempts so long continued, so many times doubled, renewed and aggravated, do manifestly Declare you to be a Person, without all hope of recovery, and plainly incorrigible; We oftentimes admonish and require you to obey His Majesties said Commandment, and that you do declare your Self, by Subscription of your Hand, both willing and well contented to accept, allow, preach and teach to others the said Articles, and all such other matters as be or shall be set forth by His Majesties Authority of Supreme Head of this Church of England, on this side and within the term of three Months, whereof we appoint one Month for the first monition, one Month for the second monition and warning, and one Month for the third and peremptory monition.

Within which time as you may yet declare your Conformity, and shall have Paper, Pen and Ink, when you shall call for them for that purpose; so if you wilfully forbear and refuse to declare your self obedient and conformable as is aforesaid, we intimate unto you, That His Majesty, who like a good Governor, desireth to keep both his Commonwealth quiet, and to purge the same of evil men (especially Ministers) intendeth to proceed against you as an incorrigible person, and unworthy Minister of this Church, unto the deprivation of your said Bishoprick.

Nevertheless, upon divers good Considerations, and specially in hope he might within his time be yet reconciled, it was agreed, That the said Bishop, House and Servants should be maintained in their present Estate, until the time that this Intimation should expire, and the matter for the meantime to be kept secret.

fore them, and by them to be examined, by whom were objected against him nineteen special Articles, in order and form here following.

Articles and Positions ministred joyntly, and severally objected to the Bishop of Winchester.

Articles

by the Commissioners.

In primis, That the Kings Majesty, justly and rightly fully is, and by the Lawes of God ought to be, the Stream Head in Earthe of the Church of England and Ireland, and so is by the Clergy of this Realm in their Convocation, and by the Ait of Parliament justly, and according to the Lawes of God recognized.

II. Item, That His Majesty as Supreme Head of the said Churches, hath full power and authority to make and set such Laws, Statutes and Ordinances for and concerning Religion, and Orders in the said Churches, for the increase of Virtue, and suppressing of all Errors, Heresies, and other Enormities and Abuses.

III. Item, That all and every his Graces Subjett are bound by the Lawes of God to obey all his Highnesses said Laws, In-the said Churches.

IV. Item, That you Stephen Bishop of Winchester have sworn obedience unto his Majesty, as Supreme Head of this Church of England, and also of Ireland.

V. Item, That all and every his Graces Subjett that disobey any of his Majesties Laws, Injunctions, Ordinances and Proceedings already set forth and published, and hereafter to be set forth and published, ought worthily to be punished according to his Graces Ecclesiastical Lawes used within this his Realm.

VI. Item, That you the said Bishop, as well as the Kings Majesties late Visitation within your Diocess, as at January other times, have been complained upon, and sundry Informations made against you for your doings, sayings and preachings against sundry Injunctions, Orders and other Proceedings of his Majesty set forth for the Reformation of Errors, Superstitions, and other Abuses in Religion.

VII. Item, That after and upon the occasion of those and other many Complaints and Informations you have been sundry times admonished, commanded and enjoined to conform your self, as to your duty appertaineth.

fold transgressions of

VIII. Item, That after the Premises, and that for those former Admonitions and Commandments notwithstanding, you did yet still shew your self not Conformer, and for that also your example, the people were much animated, and thereby occasion of much inquietude ministred, you were called before the Kings Majesties Council in the Month of June, the second Year of his Majesties Reign, and by them on his Highnesses behalf commanded to preach a Sermon before his Majesty, and therein to declare, the justness and godliness of his Majesties Faith and his proceedings, upon certain matters partly mentioned in certain Articles to you delivered in Writing, and partly otherwise declared unto you. The effect whereof was, touching the usurped Authority of the Bishop of Rome, and that his pretended authority was justly and godly taken away in this Realm, and other the Kings Majesties Dominions, touching the first suppression and taking away of Monasteries, Religious Houses, Pilgrimages, Reliques, Shrines and Images, the superstition going about of S. Nicholas Bishop of S. Edmund, S. Katherine, S. Clement, and such like, for taking away of Chalices, Obliter and Colloges, touching ballowing of Candles, Water, Ashes, Palm, holy Bread, Beads, creeping to the Cross, &c. touching the setting forth of the Kings Majesties Authority in his young years, to be as great as if his Highness were of many more years, touching Articles of Confession, touching the Procession and Common Prayer in English, and that things done in General Councils against the Word of God, may be justly revoked in particular Councils.

IX. Item, That you receiving the same, and promising to declare them in a Sermon by you made before his Majesty for that purpose, on the Feast of St. Peter, in the said second year of his Highnesses Reign, did then and there contemptuously and disobediently omit to declare and set forth many of the said matters, to the great contempt of his Majesty, and dangerous example of others.

X. Item, That you being also commanded, and on his Majesties behalf, for the avoiding of tumult, and for other great Considerations, inhibited to treat of any matter in Controversie concerning the Mass of the Communion (then commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar) did contrary to the said Commandment and Inhibition, declare divers your Judgments and Opinions in the same, in manifest contempt of his Majesties said Inhibition, to the great offence of the Hearers, and disturbance of the common Quiet and Unity of the Realm.

XI. Item, That after the Premises, viz. in the Months of May or June, or one of them, in the third year of his Highnesses Reign, his Majesty sent questions unto you, to know your Conformity towards his said Reformation, and especially touching the Book of Common Prayer then lately set forth by his Majesty, whereunto you at the same time refused to shew your self Conformer.

XII. Item, That after that, viz. the ninth day of July, in the fourth year of his Majesties Reign, his Highness sent unto you his Graces Letters, with a certain Submission and Articles, whereunto his Grace willed and commanded you to subscribe; to the which Submission, you contemptuously refused to subscribe.

XIII. Item, That you having espoused certain of the Kings most Honorable Council sent unto you the twelfth of July, in the said fourth year, with the same Submission, and being in his Majesties behalf Required and Commanded to consider again better the said Submission, and to subscribe the same,

XIV. Item, That after all this, the fourteenth day of July, in the said fourth year, the said Kings Majesty sent yet again unto you certain of his Majesties most Honorable Council with another Submission, and divers other Articles, willing and commanding you to subscribe your Name thereto, to which to do you utterly refused.

XV. Item, That after all this, videlicet, the nineteenth of July, in the said fourth year, you being personally called before the whole Council, and having the said Submission and Articles openly and distinctly read unto you, and required to subscribe the same, refused, for unjust and falstical Considerations by you alleged, to subscribe the same.

XVI. Item, That for your sundry and manifold Contempt, and Disobediences in this behalf used, the Fruits of XVII. Item, That after this you had Intimation and Peremptory Monition, with Commination, that you should, within three months next following the said Intimation, reconcile and submit your self upon pain of Deprivation.

XVIII. Item, That the said three Months are now fully expired and run.

XIX. Item, That you have not hitherto, according to the said Intimation and Monition, submitted, reconciled, or reformed your self, but contemptuously yet still remain in your disobedience. Whereupon they required the Bishop of Winchester, then and there personally present, to be sworn faith-

But briefly to conclude, such exceptions he used against the witnesses produced against him, and he himself produced such a number of witnesses in his defence, and used so many delays and cavillations, that in the end the Commissioners, seeing his stubbornness, proceeded to the sentence definitive against him, as hereunder followeth.

IN the Name of God Amen. By authority of a Commission by the high and mighty Prince our most gracious Sovereign Lord Edward the Sixth, by the Grace of God King of England, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and of the Church of England, and also of Ireland, in earth the Supreme Head, the tenour whereof hereafter ensueth; Edward the Sixth, &c. We Thomas by the Sufferance of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, with the Right Reverend Fathers in God, Nicholas Bishop of London, Thomas Bishop of Ely, and Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Sir William Peter Knight, one of our said Sovereign Lords two principal Secretaries, Sir James Hales Knight, one of our said Sovereign Lords Justices of his Common Pleas, Griffith Leiton, and John Oliver Doctors in the Civil Law, Richard Goodrich, and John Gofnold Esquires, Delegates and Judges assigned and appointed, rightfully and lawfully proceeding according to the form and tenour of the said Commission, for the bearing, examination, debating, and final determination of the causes and matters in the said Commission mentioned and contained, and upon the contents of the same, and certain Articles objected of office against you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, as more plainly and fully is mentioned and declared in the said Commission and Articles, all which we repute and take here to be expressed; and after sundry judicial assemblies, examinations and debates of the said cause and matters, with all incidents, emergents and circumstances to the same or any of them belonging, and the same also being by us, oft heard, seen, and well understood, and with good and mature examination and deliberation debated, considered, and fully weighed and pondered, observing all such order and other things, as by the laws, equity, and the said Commission ought, or needed herein to be observed, in the presence of you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, do proceed to the giving of our final judgment and sentence definitive in this manner following.

{Ann. 1551}

Winchester found to be a Transgressor.

Forasmuch as by the Articles, Exhibits and Allegations proposed, deduced and alledged, and by sufficient proofs with your own confession in the causes aforesaid, had and made, we do evidently find and perceive that you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, have not only transgressed the commandments mentioned in the same, but also have of long time, notwithstanding many admonitions and commandments given unto you to the contrary, remained a person much grudging, speaking and repugning against the godly Reformation of abuses in Religion, set forth by the Kings Highness authority within this his Realm; and forasmuch as we do also find you a notable, open and contemptuous disobeyer of sundry godly and just commandments given unto you by our said Sovereign Lord and by his authority, in divers great and weighty causes touching and concerning his Princely Office, and the state and common quietness of this Realm; and forasmuch as you have and yet do contemptuously refuse to recognize your notorious negligences, and misbehaviours, contempts and disobediences, remaining still, after a great number of several admonitions, always more and more indurate, incorrigible, and without all hope of amendment; contrary both to your Oath sworn, obedience, promise, and also your bounden duty of Allegiance; and for that great slander and offence of the people arise in many parts of the Realm, through your wilful doings, sayings and preachings, contrary to the common order of the Realm, and for sundry other great causes by the Acts, Exhibits, your own confession, and proofs of this process more fully appearing; considering that nothing effectually hath been on your behalf alleged, proposed and proved, ne by any other means appeared, which doth or may empair or take away the proofs made against you, upon the said matters and other the premises.

Therefore we Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, Judge Delegate aforesaid, having God before our eyes, with express consent and assent of Nicholas Bishop of London, Thomas Bishop of Ely, Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Sir William Peter Knight, Sir James Hales Knight, Griffith Leiton and John Oliver Doctors of the Civil Law, Richard Goodrich and John Gofnold, Esquires, Judges, and Councillors with us in the matters aforesaid, and with the counsel of divers learned men in the Laws, with whom we have conferred in and upon the premises, do judge and determine you Stephen Bishop of Winchester, to be deprived and removed from the Bishoprick of Winchester, and from all the rates, authority, emoluments, commodities, his Bishops and other appurtenances to the said Bishoprick in any wife belonging, whatsoever they be, and by these presents we do deprive and remove you from your said Bishoprick, and all rates and other commodities of refusal; and further pronounce and declare the said Bishoprick of Winchester, to all effects and purposes, to be void by this our sentence definitive, which we give, pronounce and declare in these writings.

Step Gardiner, late Bishop of Winchester, deprived of his Bishoprick.

This sentence definitive being given, the said Bishop of Winchester, under his former Protestations, dissented from the giving and reading thereof, and from the same, as unjust, and of no efficacy or effect in law; and in that the same containeth excessive punishment, and for other causes expressed in his appellation aforesaid, he did then and there apud acta, immediately after the pronouncing of the sentence, by word of mouth appeal to the Kings Royal Majesty first, secondly and thirdly, initially, more initially, most initially, and asked Apostles, or Letters dismissionals to be given and granted unto him; and then, under Protestation not to recede from the same, at relation, asked a Copy of the said sentence, the Judge declaring that they would first know the Kings pleasure and his Council therein. Upon the reading and giving of which sentence, the promoters willed William Say and Thomas Argal to make a publick Instrument, and the witnesses then and there present to bear testimony thereunto, &c.

Gardiner, late Bishop of Winchester, appealed the sentence to the King.

And thus have you the whole Discourse and Process of Stephen Gardiner late Bishop of Winchester, unto whom the Papistical Clergy doth so much lean, as to a mighty Atlas, and upholder of their ruinous Religion. And although I have not herewithal so fully expressed all his Letters, Answers, Preachings, Examinations, Defensions, Exhibits and Attestations, with the Depositions of all such witnesses as he could and did produce for the most advantage of his own cause, with such notes also and collections gathered upon the same, as here I might, and as before I have done, I must intreat the Reader to consider first the greatness of this Volume, which would not well bear the tedious tractation thereof; and secondly, to content himself in referring to our first History, where not only he may peruse the whole discourse of this Bishops doings set forth at large, but also may briefly read in a few summary notes collected the whole discourse of his doctrine and judgment, touching what points of Religion he did content and agree, or not agree unto, Page 862.

The notes and collections hereof read in the first History.

And thus an end of Winchester for a while, till we come to talk of his death hereafter. Whom as we number amongst good Lawyers, so is he to be reckoned amongst ignorant and gross Divines, proud Prelates, and bloody persecutors as both by his cruel life and Phanatical Doctrines may appear, especially in the Article of the Sacrament, and of our justification, and Images, and also in crying out out of the Paraphrase, not considering in whose person the things be spoken, but what the Paraphrast uttereth in the person of Christ, or of the Evangelist, and not in his own, that he wretchedly unto the Author, and maketh thereof Heresie and abomination.

Dr. Redman set to match
S. Gardiner.

The like impudency and quarrelling also he used against Bucer, Luther, Peter Martyr, Cramer, and almost against all other true Interpreters of the Gospel; so blind was his judgment, or else so wilful was his mind in the truth of Christs Doctrine, that it is hard to say, whether in him unskillfulness or wilfulness had greater predominance. But against this Doctor Gardiner we will now set and match on the contrary side Doctor Redman, forasmuch as he departing this transitory life the same present year 1551. cometh now by course of History here to be mentioned; who for his singular life and profound knowledge, being inferior in no respect to the said Gardiner, shall stand as great a friend in promoting the Gospels cause, as the other seemeth an enemy by all manner of ways to impair and deface the same. For the more assured declaration whereof we will hereto adjoyn (the Lord willing) the learned communication between the said Dr. Redman lying on his Death-bed, and Master Wilkes, Master Alexander Nowel, Doctor Young, and other Witnesses more. Whereof the said Mr. Wilkes thus recordeth, speaking in his own person, and his own words, as followeth.

A note of the communication that I Richard Wilkes had with Master Doctor Redman, being sick at Westminster, but of good memory, the 2d day of November, 1551. in the presence of Mr. Young and another whom I did not know, and two of Master Doctor Redman's servants, the one called Ellis, and the other unknown.

The communication and confession of Dr. Redman in his Death-bed.

I The foresaid Richard Wilkes coming to Doctor Redman lying sick at Westminster, and first saluting him after my ordinary duty, wished him health both in soul and body; not doubting moreover but he did practice the goodly counsel in himself, which he was wont to give to other being in his case; and thanks be to God (said I) who had given him stuff of knowledge to comfort himself withal. To whom he answering again, said in this wise, God of all comfort give me grace to have comfort in him, and to have my mind wholly fixed in him. Master Young and I said Amen. Then I communed with him of his sickness, and of the weakness of his body, and said, that though he were brought never so low, yet he if it were his pleasure, that raised up Lazarus, could restore him to health again. No, faith he, that is past, and I desire it not, but the will of God be fulfilled.

After this or a little other like communication, I asked if I might be so bold, not troubling him, to know his mind for my learning in some matters and points of Religion. He said, yea, and that he was as glad to commune with me in such matters, as with any man. And then I said to his servants, I trusted I should not trouble him. No, said Ellis his servant, my Lord of London, Master Nowel and other have communed with him, and he was glad of it: Then said Mr. Redman, No, you shall not trouble me. I pray God ever give me grace to speak the truth, and his truth, and that which shall redound to his Glory, and send us unity in his Church, and we said Amen.

Commoncation touching the Sacrament of the Lords body and blood.

I said, He should do much good in declaring his Faith, and I would be glad to know his mind as touching the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ.

He said, As man is made of two parts, of the body and the soul, so Christ would feed the whole man; but what (saith he) be the words of the Text? Let us take the words of the Scripture; and he rehearsed the Text himself thus, Accipite Jhesu panem, Christ took Bread. Wherein his will was to institute a Sacrament. Accipite, comedite. Take, eat. Here he told the use of it. What did he give to them? Hoc est corpus meum, he calleth it his body.

Then I asked him of the presence of Christ.

He said, Christ was present with his Sacrament, and in those that received it as they ought. And there was Mira unio, a wonderful union (for that word was named betwixt Christ and us) as St. Paul faith, Vos estis ex ossibus ejus, & caro ex carne ejus, Te be bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. The which union was ineffable.

Then I asked him what he thought of the opinion, that Christ was there corporally, naturally, and really.

He answered, If you mean by corporally, naturally and really, that he is there present vere, I grant.

Then I asked how he thought of that which was wont commonly to be spoken, that Christ was there flesh, blood and bone, as I have heard the Stewards in the Leets give charge when the six Articles stood in effect, and charge the Inquest to inquire, that if there were any that would deny that Christ was present in the Sacrament of the Altar, in flesh, blood and bone; they should apprehend them.

He said that it was too gross, and could not well be excused from the opinion of the Capernaimites.

Then I asked him, Inasmuch as Christ was there vere, how do we receive him? in our minds and spiritual parts, or with our mouths, and into our bodies, or both?

He said, We receive him in our minds and souls by faith.

Then in as much as he was much in this point, that there was Mira unio, a marvellous union betwixt us and Christ, in that we were Caro ex carne ejus, & os ex ossibus ejus, Bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh; I desired to know his opinion whether we received the very body of Christ with our mouths, and into our bodies, or no?

Here he paused and held his peace a little space, and shortly after he spake, saying, I will not say so, I cannot tell, it is a hard question; but surely, faith he, we receive Christ in our soul by faith. When you do speak of it otherways, it soundeth grossly, and savoureth of the Capernaimites.

Then I asked him what he thought of that which the Priest was wont to lift up and shew the people betwixt his hands?

He said, It is the Sacrament. Then said I, they were wont to worship that which was lifted up, Tea, faith he, but we must worship Christ in Heaven: Christ is neither lifted up nor down. I am glad, said I, Master Doctor, to hear you say so much, would not speak of the holy Sacrament otherwise than reverently, but I fear lest that Sacrament, and the little white piece of Bread so lifted up, hath robbed Christ of a great part of his honour.

Then said he, looking up and praying, God grant us grace that we may have the true understanding of his Word, whereby we may come to the true use of his Sacraments; and said, he would never allow the carrying about of the Sacrament, and other fond abuses about the same.

Then after a little while pausing, said I, Master Doctor, if I should not trouble you, I would pray you to know your mind in Transubstantiation. Jesum, Master Wilkes, quoth he, will you ask me that? Sir, (said I) not if I should trouble you. No, no, I will tell you, said he. Because I found the opinion of Transubstantiation received in the Church, when I heard it spoken against, I searched the ancient Doctors diligently, and went about to establish it by them, because it was received. And when I had read many of them, I found little for it, and could not be satisfied.

Then I went to the School Doctors, and namely to Gabriel, and weighed his reasons. The which when I had done, and perceived they were no pythier, Langucabat opinio mea de Transubstantiatione, My opinion of Transubstantiation waxed feeble: and then, faith he, I returned again to Tertullian and Irenaeus, and when I had observed their sayings, mine opinion that there should be Transubstantiation profus erat abolita, was quite dashed.

Then, said I, You know that the School Doctors did hold, That panis non remaneat post consecrationem, That bread remained not after the consecration, as they called it.

The School Doctors (saith he) did not know what Consecratio meant; and here he paused awhile. I pray you (said I) say you what Consecratio means? Saith he, It is Tota actio, in ministering the Sacrament as Christ did institute it. All the whole thing done in the ministry,

KING ministry, as Christ ordained it, that is Consecratio, and what (said he) need we to doubt that bread remaineth? Scripture calleth it bread, and certain good Authors that be of the latter time, be of that opinion.

After that I had communed with Mr. Redman, and taken my leave of him, Master Young came forth into the next Chamber with me, to whom I said that I was glad to see Master Doctor Redman so well minded. Then said Master Young to me, I am sure he will not deny it; I ensure you, faith he, Master Doctor hath so moved me, that whereas I was of that opinion before in certain things, that I would have burned and lost my life for them; now (faith Master Young) I doubt of them. But I see, faith he, a man shall know more and more by process of time, and reading and bearing of other, and Master Doctor Redman's saying shall cause me to look more diligently for them.

Anno 1550 Talk about Dr. Redman. Dr. Young stayed by Dr. Redman from his P. p. opinion. them.

Also Ellis, Master Dr. Redman's Servant shewed me, that he did know that his Master had declared to K. Henry the 8th his Majesty, That Faith only justifieth; but that Doctrine, as he thought, was not to be taught the people, lest they should be negligent to do good works.

The said Mr. Young hath reported (the which also I heard) that Master Dr. Redman should say, that consensus Ecclesie, the consent of the Church was but a weak Staff to lean to, but did exhort him to read the Scriptures, for there was that which should comfort him when he should be in such case as he was then.

Another communication between Doctor Redman lying in his Death-bed, and Master Nowel then Schoolmaster in Westminster, and certain other, with notes of his censure and judgment touching certain points of Christs Religion.

I Mprimis, The said Doctor Redman sent for Mr. Nowel of his own mind, and said he was willing to commune with him of such matters as he had moved the said Dr. Redman of a day or two before; and he being desired of the said Master Nowel to declare his mind concerning certain points of our Religion, first said, Ask me what ye will, and I will answer you, before God, truly as I think, without any affection to the World or any worldly person.

Witnesses, John Young, Alex. Nowel, Richard Burton, Ellis Lomas, Edw. Cratford, Rich. Elsborne, John Wright.

6. Item, That the Sacrament ought not to be carried about in Procession; for it is taught what is the use of it in these words, Accipite, manducate, & bibite, & hoc facite in mei memoriam. Take, eat, and drink, and do this in remembrance of me.

Witnesses, John Young, Alex. Nowel, Richard Burton, John Wright, Edw. Cratford, Ellis Lomas.

Witnesses, John Young, Alex. Nowel, Richard Burton, Edw. Cratford, Ellis Lomas, John Wright.

Although these testimonies above alledged may suffice for a declaration touching the honest life, sound Doctrine, and sincere judgment of Dr. Redman: yet (velut ex abundanti) I thought not to cut off in this place the testimonial Letter or Epistle of Dr. Young, written to Master Cheke, specially concerning the premises. Which Epistle of Doctor Young, as I received it written by his own hand in the Latin Tongue, the Copy which he himself neither hath nor can deny to be his own, and is extant to be read in the former Book of Acts and Monuments, so I have here exhibited the same faithfully translated into the English Tongue, the tenor whereof followeth.

The Letter of Master Young to Master Cheke concerning Doctor Redman, translated out of Latine into English.

Mr. Youngs letter to Master Cheke concerning Dr.
Redman.

ALTHOUGH, right Worshipful, I am stricken into no little damp and dolour of mind for the unripe (but that it otherwise pleased Almighty God) and lamentable death of that most blessed and learned man Doctor Redman, inasmuch that, all sntoned with weeping and lamenting, I cannot tell what to do or think, yet nevertheless, perceiving it to be your Worships will and pleasure, that so I should do, I gladly call my wits together, and purpose, by Gods grace, here in these my Letters sincerely, and truly to open and declare what I heard that worthy learned man speak and confess at the hour of his death, as touching the controversies of Religion, wherewith the Spouse of Christ is in these our days most miserably troubled and tormented.

Commendation of Dr.
Redman.

This Doctor Redman, being continually by the space of twenty years, or somewhat more, exercised in the reading of the holy Scripture, with such industry, labour, modesty, magnanimity and prayers to Almighty God, tried and weighed the controversies of Religion, that in all his doings, as he would not seem to approve that which was either false or superstitious; so he would never improve that which he thought to stand with the true worship of God. And albeit in certain Points and Articles of his Faith, he seemed to divers, which were altogether ignorant of that his singular Gravity, either for sntuels, fear, or lack of stomach to change his mind and belief, yet they, to whom his former life and conversation, by familiar acquaintance with him was thoroughly known (with them also which were present at his departure) may easily perceive and understand, how in grave and weighty matters, not rashly and unadvisedly, but with constant judgment and unfeigned confidence, he defended into that manner of belief, which at that time of his going out of this world he openly professed.

I give your wisdom to understand, that when death drew near, he casting away all hope of recovery, attended and talked of no other thing (as we which were present heard) but of Heaven and heavenly matters, of the later day, of our Saviour Jesus Christ, with whom most fervently he desired to be; whose incredible love towards us miserable sinners most worthily, and not without tears, he oftentimes used to extol and speak of: and us which were there present he earnestly moved and exhorted to prepare our selves to Christ, to love one another, and to beware of this most wretched and corrupt world. And besides that he promised (calling God to witness thereunto, to whom he trusted shortly to come) if any would demand any question, that he would answer him what he thought in his judgment to be the truth. At what time there were present Mr. Alexander Nowel, a man earnestly bent to the true worshipping of God, and one that had alway singularly well loved the said Mr. Redman, to whom he spake on this of Pauls wife.

KING
Edm. 6
Exhortation of Dr. Redman to them that were about him.

Mr. Alexander Nowel, since Deane well loved the said Mr. Redman, to whom he spake
on this of Pauls
wife.

Your excellent learning, and purity of life, I have ever both highly favoured, and had in admiration; and for no other cause (God be my judge) I do ask these things of you which I shall propound, but that I might learn and know of you what is your opinion and belief touching those troublesome controversies which are in these our days; and I shall receive and approve your words as Oracles sent from Heaven.

To whom when Doctor Redman had given leave to demand what he would, and had promised that he would faithfully and sincerely answer (all affection set aside) what he thought to be the truth, Mr. Nowel said, I would (quoth he) right gladly, but that I fear by my talk and communication, I shall be unto you, so feeble and now almost spent, a trouble and grief. Then said Doctor Redman, replying, What shall I spare my Carcas (quoth he) which hath so short a time here to remain? Go to, go to, (said he) propound what you will. Then Master Nowel put forth certain questions, which in order I will here declare; whereunto the said Dr. Redman severally answered, as hereafter followeth.

The See of Rome a link
of all sin.

The first question that he asked of him was, What he thought of the Bishop of Rome. Unto whom Doctor Redman answered, That the See of Rome in these our later days had much swarved from the true Religion and worshipping of God, and is with horrible voices stained and polluted; which I therefore (quoth he) pronounce to be the sink of all evil, and shortly will come to utter ruins by the scourge of God, except it do fall the sooner to repentance; wherewith he briefly complained of the filthy abuse of our English Church.

Being then asked, what his opinion was concerning Purgatory, and what the Schoolmen judged thereof, he answered, That the subtil reasons of the Schoolmen concerning Purgatory, seemed to him to be no less vain and frivolous, than disagreeing from the truth; adding thereunto, That when we be rapt to the Clouds to meet Christ coming to judgment with a great number of Angels in all glory and majesty, then every one shall be purged with fire, as it is written, The fire shall go before him, and shall flame round about his enemies, and the fire shall burn in his sight, and round about him shall be a great tempest, saying, That divers of the old Writers approved this his sentence concerning Purgatory.

Purgatory.

When he was asked whether wicked and ungodly people in the holy Communion did eat the body of Christ and drink his blood; he answered, That such kind of men did not eat Christs most blessed flesh, but only took the Sacrament to their own damnation; saying, That Christ would not give his most pure and holy flesh to be eaten of such naughty and impure persons, but would withdraw himself from them. And that (quoth he) that is objected by St. Augustine, That Judas received the self same thing which Peter received, that I think to be understood of the external Sacrament. And the like kind of phrase of speaking (said he) we may use concerning the Baptism of Magus; That Simon Magus received that which the Apostles did receive. Indeed as concerning the Sacrament of the external Baptism, Simon Magus received that which the Apostles did; but that internal grace wherewith the Apostles were endued, and that holy Spirit wherewith by Baptism they were inspired, he lacked. And so (quoth he) the wicked and forsaken people, which rashly presume to come to the holy Table of the Lord, do receive the Sacrament and the self same which good and godly men receive; but the body of Christ they do not receive, for Christ doth not vouchsafe to deliver it them. And thus, he said, was his opinion and belief, although he knew others to be of a contrary judgment.

The wicked eat not the flesh of Christ.

RING Being then after this demanded, whether he thought
Edw. 6 Christs presence to be in the Sacrament, or no: he answered, That Christ did give and offer to faithful and Christian men his very real body and blood verily and really, under Sacraments of Bread and Wine; inasmuch that they which devoutly come to be partakers of that holy food, are by the benefit thereof united and made one with Christ in his flesh and body. And therefore he said that Christ did distribute his body spiritually, that he gave it truly, yet not so nevertheless, that by these and the like words we should conceive any gross and carnal intelligence, such as the Capernaites once dreamed of, but that (quoth he) we might labour and endeavour to express by some kind of words the ineffable Majesty of this Mystery. For the manner whereby Christ is there present, and ministreth to the faithful his flesh, is altogether inexplicable; but we must believe (quoth he) and think, that by Gods mighty power, and the holy operation of his Spirit, this so notable a Mystery was made; and that Heaven and Earth was joined together at that moment, as the blessed man S. Gregory saith, The lowest parts are joined with the highest; by which is understood that holy food whereby they which be regenerate by the Holy Ghost in Baptism, are nourished to immortality.
 And further he said, That Christs body was received in the said Sacrament by faith; which being received, both body and soul were quickened to everlasting life.

Being then required to say his mind about Transsubstantiation, he gave answer, That he had much travelled in that point, and that he hath much favoured and inclined to that part which maintained Transubstantiation; in searching the verity whereof most studiously he had been no little while occupied, and found to arise thereabout infinite and almost inexplicable absurdities. In confuting whereof, when he had but finally contented himself, he said he took in hand the Schoolmens works, and perused Gabriel and other Writers of that sort, for thereby their help and aid he hoped that all inconveniences which did spring and arise by maintenance of Transubstantiation might be clean convinced and wiped away. Of which his hope he was utterly frustrate (said he) for that he did find in those Books many fond and phantastical things, which were both too foolish to be recorded in writing, and also to be alleged about such a Mystery, and truly (said he) ever after the reading of them, my former zeal and opinion touching the maintenance of Transubstantiation, did every day more and more decrease, and therefore in conclusion he performed himself to think that there was no such Transubstantiation as the Schoolmen imagined and feigned to be; saying that indeed the ancient Writers were plainly against the maintenance thereof; amongst whom he recited by name, Justin, Irenaeus, and Tertullian, notorious adversaries to the same. Furthermore he added hereunto, That the whole School understood not what this word Consecratio was, which he deemed to be the full entire action of the whole Communion.

Being demanded also, whether we ought to worship Christ present in his holy Supper; he told us, that we were bound so to do, and that it was most agreeing to piety and godly Religion. Likewise being asked, whether he would have the visible Sacrament to be worshipped, which we see with our eyes, and is lifted up between the Priests hands;
 he answered, That nothing which was visible, and to be seen with the eye, is to be adored or worshipped, nor would Christ be elevated into any higher, nor pulled down into any lower place, and that he can neither be lifted up higher, nor pulled down lower.

Again, being asked his opinion about the custom and manner in carrying about the Sacrament in solemn Pompes, Processions, and otherwise; he said, that he always mil-liked and reproved that order; inasmuch that about sixteen years ago, openly in the Pulpit at Cambridge, he spake against that abuse, and disallowed that Ceremony; shew-ing that Christ had expressed by plain and evident words a very fruitful and right use of this Sacrament, when he said, Take ye (by which phrase, quoth he, he doth expect that he will give a gift:) Eat ye (by which words he doth declare the proper use and order of that his precious gift:)
This is my body, (whereby he doth evidently and plainly shew what by that gift they should receive, and how royal and precious a gift he would give them:) and therefore he judged such pompous and superstitious ostentations utterly to be condemned and taken as plain mockeries and contemptuous vices.

His judgment also being asked about the commemoration of the dead, and the remembrance of them in Ori-sons, whether he thought it profitable or no; He answered, That it seemed to him to be no less profitable than religious and godly; and that might be well proved out of the Books of Maccabees. The which Books although S. Hierome ad-judging as not authentick, thought good to be read in the Temples only for the edifying of the Church, and not for the alteration of opinions; yet with me the opinions of the other Writers, to whom those Books are allowed as Canons, prevail, which he in that point thinketh good to be read.

Being furthermore required to shew his mind about Trental Masses, and Masses of Scala celi; he shewed them that they were altogether unprofitable, superstitious and ir-religious, flowing out of the filthy and impure fountain of superstition, not yielding the fruit which they promised to bring forth. The sacrifice of the Supper of the Lord (the Eucharist I mean) that Sacrifice, he said, could not be offered for the sins of the quick and the dead.

Finally, of his own voluntary will, and no man (as far as I can call to remembrance) demanding of him, he shewed his opinion concerning justification by Christ. I lament (said he) and repent, beleeving God forgiveness of the same, that too seriously and earnestly I have withstood this proposition, That only faith doth justify; but I always feared that it should be taken to the liberty of the flesh, and so should denie the innocency of life which is in Christ.
 But that proposition, That only faith doth justify, is true, (quoth he) sweet, and full of spiritual comfort, if it be truly taken, and rightly understood. And when he was demanded what he thought to be the true and very sense thereof, I understand (quoth he) that to be the lively faith, which resteth in our only Saviour Jesus Christ, and embraceth him; so that in our only Saviour Jesus Christ all the hope and trust of our salvation be surely fixed. And as concerning good works, faith he, they have their crown and merit, and are not destitute of their rewards; yet nevertheless, they do not merit the Kingdom of Heaven. For no works (said he) could purchase and obtain that blessed, happy and everlasting immortality; no nor yet those things which we do under grace, by the motion of the Holy Ghost.
 For that blessed and immortal glory is given and bestowed upon us mortal men of the heavenly Father for his Son our Saviour Christs sake, as S. Paul testifieth, The gift of God is eternal life.

And these be the resolutions which I heard him give to the questions of Master Noyes proposed. From which his sentence and judgment I heard by rote, and of him uttered (as I remember) he never declined or varied. I believe our Lord Jesus Christ to ease these troublesome storms wherewith the Church is troubled, and vouchsafe for his holy Names sake tenderly to heed and look upon his poor wretched flock so miserably scattered and dispersed; beleeve-ing him also of his goodness to preserve your Worship.

Here followeth the History, no less lamentable than notable, of William Gardiner an Englishman, suffering most constantly in Portugal, for the testimony of Gods Truth.

Coming now to the next year following, 1552, we will somewhat step aside, and borrow a little leave, coasting the Seas into Portugal, amongst the Popish Merchants there, whither a certain Country-man of ours doth call me, named William Gardiner, a man verily in my judgment not only to be compared with the most principal and chief Martyrs of these our days, but also such a one as the ancient Churches in the time of the first Persecutions cannot shew a more famous, whether we do behold the force of his faith, his firm and stedfast constancy, the invincible strength of his spirit, or the cruel and horrible torments;
 the report only and hearing whereof were enough to put any man in horror or fear. Yet notwithstanding, so far off it was that the same did discourage him, that it may be doubted, whether the pain of his body, or the courage of his mind were the greater; when as indeed both appeared to be very great.

The story of
 Mr. Gardiner
 most curiously martyred at Lisbon in Portugal.

Mr. Gardiner
 comparable with the Martyrs in the first Persecutions.

Wherefore if any praise or dignity amongst men, as reason is, be due unto the Martyrs of Christ for their valiant acts, this one man amongst many seemeth worthy to be numbred, and also to be celebrate in the Church with Ignatius, Laurentius, Ciriatus, Crescentius and Gordianus.

And if the Church of Christ do receive so great and manifold benefits by these Martyrs, with whose blood it is watered, by whose ashes it is enlarged, by whose constancy it is confirmed, by whose testimony it is witnessed, and finally, through whose agonies and victories the truth of the Gospel doth gloriously triumph; let not us then think it any great matter to requite them again with our duty, by committing them to memory, as a perpetual token of our good will towards them. Albeit they themselves receive no glory at our hands, and much less challenge the same, but referring it wholly unto the Lord Christ, from whom it came, whatsoever great or notable thing there was in them. Notwithstanding, forasmuch as Christ himself is glorified in his Saints, we cannot shew our selves thankful unto him, except we also shew our selves dutiful unto those by whom his glory doth increase.

Hereupon I think it came to pass that the ancient Christians in the time of the first Persecutions, thought good to celebrate yearly commemorations of the Martyrdom of those holy men, not so much to honour them, as to glorifie God in his soldiers, unto whom all glory and praise doth worthily belong; and moreover, that we being instructed by their example might be the more prompt and ready in the policies of those Wars, to stand more stoutly in battel against our adversaries, and learn the more easily to contemn and despise this world.

For in considering the end and death of these men, who will greatly long or lust after this life, which is so many ways miserable, through so many afflictions dolorous, through so many casualties ruinous, wherein consisteth so little constancy, and less safety, being never free from some hard calamity one or other? What good man would have this world in reputation, wherein he seeth so many good men so cruelly oppressed, and wherein no man can live in quietness except he be wicked? Wherefore I do not a little marvel, that in this great slaughter of good men, with so many spectacles and examples of cruel torment, Christians do yet live as it were drowned in the foolish desires of this world, seeing daily before their eyes so many holy and innocent men yield up their Spirits under the hands of such tormentors, to ly in filthy Prisons, in bonds, darkness and tears, and in the end to be consumed with fire.

We see so many Prophets of God, even Christ himself the Son of God, to be so cruelly and many ways afflicted in this world, tormented, scourged and crucified; and yet we laugh, drink, and give our selves unto all looseness of life, and all lasciviousness. For honour and great possessions we contend; we build; we study and labour by all means to make our selves rich. Unto whom it doth not suffice, that we with safety and freedom from their afflictions, Racks, Wheels, Scourges Irons red hot, Gridirons, Flesh-hooks, Mallets, and other kind of torments, may serve our Christ in peace and quiet; but being herewith not content, will give over our selves to all kind of wickedness, to be led away at the will and pleasure of Satan.

But what do we think in so doing? Either we must reckon those men to be most miserable in this life, or else our selves to be most unhappy. But if their blessedness be most certain and sure, then let us direct the course of our life to the same felicity. These men have forsaken this life, which they might have enjoyed. But if we cannot willingly put off this life, yet let us not be slow to correct and amend the same; and though we cannot dy with them in like Martyrdom, yet let us mortifie the worldly and prophan afflictions of the flesh, which thrive against the Spirit, and at the least let us not run thus headlong into the licentious desires of the world, as we do. As the life of Christian men is now, I pray thee, what do these bonds, Prisons, these wounds and scars, these great fires, and other horrible torments of Martyrs, than upbraid unto us our slothful sluggishness, and worthily make us ashamed thereof? Which Martyrs, if in their lives they lived so innocently, and in their death continued so constant, what then is to be deemed of us which suffer nothing for Christ, and will not take upon us the small conflict against vices and our own affections? How would we suffer the cruel looks of Tyrants, the fearful kinds of Torments, or the violent assaults of the Tormentors in any quarrel of godliness, if in peace and quietness we are, and that with every small breath or wind of temptation, blown away from God, so faint-hearted without any resistance, that we are carried headlong into all kind of wickedness and mischief? one singeth Songs of love, another watcheth all the night at Dice, some spend their life and time day by day in hawking and hunting, some tipple so at Taverns that they come home reeling. Others, whatsoever desire of revenge doth put into their heads, that by and by they seek to put in practice. Some gape after riches; some swell with ambition; some think they are born for no other purpose but for pleasure and pastime. All the world is full of injury and perjury, nay rather it is so rare a thing patiently to suffer injuries done unto us, that except we have the slight to do injury to others, we think our selves scarce men. There is no love almost nor charity among men; neither is there any man that regardeth the good name or fame of his neighbour.

But amongst all the rest, unsatiable covetousness and avarice so reigneth, that no man almost is contented with any tolerable estate of life, either that will prescribe himself any measure in having that he possesseth; or in profling for that which he lacketh; never quiet, but always toying; never satisfied, but always unsatiable. Whereby it is cometh to pass, that the minds of men which profess themselves to be good Christians being occupied in such worldly cares and cares, can scarcely find any vacant leisure to think upon heavenly things; and yet notwithstanding, with these minds, we will needs seem Christians. But now setting apart these complaints spent in vain, we will prosecute our purposed story touching good William Gardiner.

And first as concerning his kindred, he was of an honest stock, born at Bristow, a Town of Merchandise on the Sea Coast of England, honestly brought up, and by nature given unto gravity, of a mean stature of body, of a comely and pleasant countenance, but in no part so excellent as in the inward qualities of the mind, which he always from his Childhood preserved without spot of reprehension. Also his handiome and indifferent learning, did not a little commend and beautifie his other ornaments. When he grew unto those years at which young men are accustomed to fetter their minds to some kind of life, it happened that he gave himself to the Trade of Merchandise, under the conduct and guiding of a certain Merchant of Bristow called Master Paget, by whom he was at the last (being of the age of twenty six years or thereabout) sent into Spain, and by chance the Ship arriving at Lubon (which is the chief City of Portugal) he tarried there about his Merchandise, where at the last he having gotten understanding of the language, and being accustomed to their manners, became a profitable servant both unto his Master and others, in such things as pertained unto the Trade of that Vocation. Whereunto he did so apply himself, that nevertheless, he in that Popish Country, reserving still the Religion of his own Country of England, ever kept himself found and undefiled from the Portugals Superstition. There were also besides him divers other good men in the same City. Neither did he lack good books, or the conference of good and honest men, unto whom he would oftentimes bewail his imbecility and weakness, that he was neither sufficiently touched with the hatred of his sins, neither yet inflamed with the love of godliness.

Whilst he was there abiding, it happened that there should be a solemn Marriage celebrate the first of September in the year above said, betwixt two Princes, that is to say, the Son of the King of Portugal, and the Spanish Kings daughter. The Marriage day being come, there was great resort of the Nobility and Estates. There lacked no Bishops with Miter, nor Cardinals with Hats, to let out this royal Wedding. To be short, they went forward to the Wedding with great pomp, where a great recourse of people resorted, some of good will, some for service sake, and some (as the manners is) to gaze and look. Great preparation of all parties was there throughout the whole City, as in such cases is accustomed, and all places were filled with mirth and gladness. In this great assembly of the whole Kingdom, W. Gardiner, who albeit he did not greatly esteem

KING {Edw. 6.} fifteen such kind of spectacles, yet being allured through the fame and report thereof, was there also, coming thither early in the morning, to the intent he might have the more opportunity and better place to behold and see.

A Popish celebration of a Marriage. The hour being come, they flocked into the Church with great solemnity and pomp: the King first, and then every estate in order; the greater persons, the more Ceremonies were about them. After all things were set in order, they went forward to the celebrating of their Masses; for that alone serveth for all purposes. The Cardinal did execute, with much singing and Organ-playing. The people stood with great devotion and silence, praying, looking, kneeling, and knocking, their minds being fully bent and set, as it is the manner, upon the external Sacrament. How grievously these things did prick and move this young mans mind, it cannot be expressed, partly to behold the miserable absurdity of those things, and partly to see the folly of the common people, and not only of the common people, but especially to see the King himself and his Council, with so many sage and wise men as they seemed, to be seduced with like Idolatry as the common people were; in-The godly zeal of W. Gardiner in seeing the Idolatry of the people, and the great difficulty of God.

in-fomuch that it lacked very little, but that he would even that present day have done some notable thing in the Kings sight and presence, but that the great griefs and thorns that was about him letted that he could not come unto the Altar. What need many words, when the Ceremonies were ended, he cometh home very sad and heavy in his mind, in-
W. Gardiner fomuch that all his fellows marvelled greatly at him. Who albeit upon divers conjectures they conceived the cause of his sadness, notwithstanding they did not fully understand that those matters did so much trouble his godly mind; neither yet did he declare it unto any man, but seeking solitariness and secret places, falling down prostrate before God, with manifold tears he bewailed the neglecting of his duty, deliberating with himself how he might revoke that people from their impiety and superstition.

W. Gardiner In this deliberation and advice his mind being fully set-clears his tled, and thinking that the matter ought not to be any Books of longer deferred, he renounced the world, making up all Accounts. his accounts so exactly (as well unto that which was due unto him, as that which he owed unto others) as no man could justly ask so much as one farthing. Which thing done, he continued night and day in prayer, calling upon God, and continual meditation of the Scriptures, that scarcely he would take any meat by day, or sleep by night, or at the most above one hour or two of rest in the night, as Pendragra his fellow companion both at bed and board, being yet alive can testify.

W. Gardiner The Sunday came again to be celebrate either with like advised pre- pomp and solemnity, or not much less, whereas the said paration to William was present early in the morning, very cleanly ap-the accom- parelled even of purpose, that he might stand near the plishment of Altar without repulce. Within a while after cometh the King with all his Nobles. Then Gardiner setteth himself as near the Altar as he might, having a Testament in his hand, the which he diligently read upon, and prayed, until the time was come that he had appointed to work his feet. The Mass began, which was then solemnized by a Cardinal. Yet he sat still. He which said Mass, proceeded, he consecrated, sacrificed, lifted up on high, shewed his god unto the people, all the people gave great reverence, and as yet he stirred nothing. At the last they came unto that place of the Mass, whereas they use to take the Ceremonial Host, and tofs it to and fro round about the Challice, making certain circles and semicircles. Then the said William Gardiner, being not able to suffer any longer, ran speedily unto the Cardinal: and (which is incredible to be spoken) even in the presence of the King and all his Nobles and Citizens, with the one hand he snatched away the Cake from the Priest, and trode it under his feet, and with the other hand overthrew the Challice. This matter at the first made them all abashed, but by and by there arose a great tumult and the people began to cry out. The Nobles and the common people ran together, amongst whom one drawing out his Dagger gave him a great wound in his shoulder, and as he was about to strike him again to have slain him, the King twice commanded to have him saved. So by that means they obtained from murder.

The Cardinal After the tumult was ceased, he was brought to the at his King; by whom he was demanded what Countryman he was, and how he durst be so bold to work such a contumely against his Majesty, and the Sacraments of the Church? He answered, Most noble King, I am not allamed of my Country, which am an English man both by birth and religion, and am come hither only for traffick of Merchandise. And when I saw in this famous assembly so great Idolatry committed, my conscience neither ought, neither could any longer suffer, but that I must needs do that which you have seen me presently do. Which thing (most noble Prince) was not done nor thought of me for any contumely or reproach of your presence, but only for this purpose (as before God I do clearly confesse) to seek the salvation of this people.

W. Gardiner When they heard that he was an English man, and call-plucked the ed to remembrance how the Religion was restored by King Cardinal Edward, they were by and by brought in suspicion, that he had been suborned by English men thus to do, to mock and deride their Religion. Wherefore they were the more earnest upon him to know who was the author and procurer that he should commit that act. Unto whom he answered, desiring them that they would conceive no such suspicion of him, forasmuch as he was not moved there-unto by any man, but only by his own conscience. For otherwise there was no man under the Heaven, for whose fake he would put himself into so manifest danger; but that he ought this service first unto God, and secondarily unto their salvation: wherefore if he had done any thing which were displeasing unto them, they ought to impute it unto no man, but unto themselves, who so unreverently used the holy Supper of the Lord unto so great Idolatry, not without great ignominy unto the Church, violation of the Sacrament, and the peril of their own souls, except they repented.

W. Gardiner Whilst that he spake these with many other things plucked the more unto this effect very gravely and stoutly, the blood Cardinal ran abundantly out of the wound, so that he was ready to faint. Whereupon Surgeons were sent for, whereby he might be cured if it were possible, and be relieved for further examination, and more grievous torment. For they were fully perswaded that this deed had divers abettors and fettors on: which was the cause that all the other English men also in the same City came into suspicion, and were commanded to be kept custody. Amongst whom Pendragra, because he was his Bedfellow, was grievously tormented and examined more than the residue, and scarcely was delivered after two years imprisonment. The other were much sooner set at liberty at the intercession of a certain Duke. Notwithstanding their suspicion could not yet be thus satisfied, but they came into his Chamber to seek if there were any Letters, to understand and find out the author of this enterprise. And when as they could find nothing there, they came again unto him being grievously wounded, with torments to extort of him the author of this fact, and to accuse him as guilty of most grievous he-resie. Of both which points, with such dexterity as he could, he cleared himself. Wherein albeit he spake in the Spanish Tongue well, yet he used the Latin Tongue much more exactly.

W. Gardiner But they not being therewith satisfied, added another plucked the strange kind of torment, which (as I suppose) passeth Cardinal the Bull of Phalaris. Because there should no kind of extreme cruelty be left unassayed, they caused a linnen cloth to be fowed round like a Ball, the which they with violence put down his throat unto the bottom of his stomach, tyed with a small string which they held in their hands, and when it was down, they pulled it up again with violence, so plucking it to and fro through the meat pipe, in such sort as that with much less grief they might have rid him out of his life at once.

W. Gardiner Thus at the last, when all torments and tormentors were plucked the wearied, and that it did nothing at all prevail to go this way Cardinal to work, they asked him whether he did not repent his wicked and seditious deed? As touching the deed, he answered, that it was so far off that he did repent, that if it were to do again, he thought he should do the same. But as touching the manner of the deed, he was not a little forry that it was done in the Kings presence, to the disquietneof his mind. Howbeit, that was not to be imputed unto him, which neither interpreted nor thought upon any such matter,
but was rather to be ascribed unto the King, in that he having power would not prohibit so great Idolatry used among his people. This he spake with great fervency. After

was, and how he durst be so bold to work such a contumely against his Majesty, and the Sacraments of the Church? He answered, Most noble King, I am not allamed of my Country, which am an English man both by which neither interpreted nor thought upon any such matter, but was rather to be ascribed unto the King, in that he having power would not prohibit so great Idolatry used among his people. This he spake with great fervency. After

The right hand of Mr. Gardiner cut off in the Vestry. The left hand of Mr. Gardiner cut off in the Market-place.

After that they had used all kind of torments, and saw that there could nothing more be gathered of him, and also that through his wounds and pains he could not long live, they brought him three days after execution. And first of all, bringing him into the Vestry, they cut off his right hand, which he taking up with his left hand, kissed. Then he was brought into the Market-place, whereas his other hand also was cut off; which he kneeling down upon the ground, also kissed. These things thus done after the manner and fashion of Spain, his arms being bound behind him, and his feet under the horie-belly, he was carried to the place of execution.

There was in that place a certain Engine, from the which a great Rope coming down by a Pulley was fastened about the middle of this Christian Martyr, which first pulled him up. Then was there a great pile of wood set on fire underneath him, into the which he was by little and little let down, not with the whole body, but so that his feet only felt the fire. Then was he hoisted up, and so let down again into the fire, and thus oftentimes pulled up and down. In which great torment for all that he continued with a constant spirit, and the more terribly he burned, the more vehemently he prayed.

Mr. Gardiner at his burning wiled again to repent.

At the last when his feet were consumed, the Tormentors asked him whether he did not yet repent him of his deed, and exhorted him to call upon our Lady and the Saints. Whereunto he answered, That as he had done nothing whereof he did repent him, so he had the less need of the help of our Lady or any other Saint; and what external torments soever they used, the Truth (he said) remaineth always one and like unto it self; the which as he had before confessed in his life, so would he not now deny it at his death: desiring them to leave off such vanities and folly. For when as Christ did cease any more to be our Advocate, then he would pray to our Lady to be his Advocate, and said, O eternal God, Father of all mercies, I beseech thee look down upon thy servant, &c. And when as they sought by all means possible to stop or hinder his praying, and praising God in this sort, he cried out with a loud voice, rehearsing the three and fortieth Psalm, Jesu digne te dicam Deus, & discerno causam meam de gente non sancta. Judge me, O God, and defend my cause against the unmerciful people.

He was not come unto the later end of the Psalm, when as they pulling him up and down in the fire for the more torment, the rope being burnt asunder, he fell down into the midst thereof; whereas giving his body for a sacrifice, he changed his temporal pains for perpetual rest and quietness.

A lesson for the Portugals.

The just hand of God upon persecutions.

Thus it seemed good in the sight of God, by this messenger to provoke the Portugals to the sincere knowledge of him; and therefore they ought the more to have acknowledged the great love and kindness of God offered unto them, and also the more to be mindful of their own duty and thankfulness towards him. And if it be of great offence to violate the ordinances of mans Law, and to contemn the Ambassadors of Kings and Princes, let the Por-tugals and all others look well unto it, what it is so cruelly to handle the heavenly messenger of the high God. Neither was this their cruelty altogether unrevengeed by the mighty hand of God, when as not only the very same night, amongst divers of the Kings ships which were in the next Haven ready to sail, one was burned, being set on fire by a sparkle of Gardiners fire driven thither with the wind, but also the Kings Son which then was married, died within half a year, and in the next year after the King himself also died, and so both within one year after the tormenting of this blessed Martyr.

Thus the body of the said Gardiner being consumed, yet the rage and fury of the common people ceased not, but they were as cruel against him being dead as they were when he was alive, and with their tongues tormented this Martyr, when they could do no more with their hands; yea for very madness they would fauce tarry until he were burned, but every man as they could catch any piece of him half burned, threw it into the Sea.

This sacrifice thus ended, the Clergy to pacifie Gods wrath which they feared for the violating of their Altar, appointed a certain Fast of certain days, for penance to purge that fact, which fact rather should have taught them to purge themselves, and to put away their filthy Idolatry, and much rather they should have fasted and repented for that their extreme cruelty they had shewed unto the lively member of Christ.

Albeit this death of William Gardiner seemeth to have profited very many of them little or nothing; yet for all that there are some (as I have heard divers report) out of whose minds the remembrance of this constant Martyr can never be pulled, and is so fresh yet amongst them, as if it were now lately done; and finally, albeit it be a good while since he was put to death, yet the memory of his death, as fruitful seed, hath taken such root in some, that even

It is reported that that sparkle lighted among Guine powder.

Wol-ly prosperity not to be troubled into

After so many troublous matters in this History aforepassed, coming now to the lamentable and tragical Narration of the Lord Edward Duke of Somerset, the Kings Uncle, and Protector of his person, and of his Realm, I could not well enter into the story of him without some premonition, first to all Noble Personages, of what honour or calling fower within this Realm, by way of History briefly to admonish them, no man to plant any trust or assurance upon the brittle pillars of worldly prosperity how high fover it seemeth, considering that there is no state so high, but it hath his ruin; no wisdom so circumpect, but it may be circumvented; no virtue so perfect, but it may be envied; neither any mans trade so simple, but it may be beguiled. And therefore seeing the condition of mortal things is so, that no man can always stand in this so ruinous a world; the surest way is for every man to chuse his standing so, that his fall may be the easier. But because my purpose is (as I have said in the stories before) to abridge and make short, I will here stay, referring thee to the secret consideration of that which remaineth further by me in this matter to be uttered; and so falling into the story of the Lord Protector Duke of Somerset, we will (the Lord willing) declare in order the original and whole occasion of his trouble and decay, even from the beginning.

Concord
maketh Brethren
Breng.

King Edward, after that both his Father and Mother were dead, had three Uncles left him by his Mothers side, Edward, Thomas, and Henry Semer, of the which two first, one was made Protector of the Realm, and the other High Admiral of the same. These two Brethren, so long as they were knit and joyned together in amity and concord, preserved both themselves, the King their Nephew, and the whole Commonwealth, from the violence and fear of all danger. But the subtil old Serpent always envying mans felicity, through slanderous tongues fought to low matter, first of discord between them, then of suspicion, and last of all extreme hatred; insomuch that the Protector suffered his Brother being accused (whether truly or falsely the Lord knoweth) to be condemned, and to lose his head. Whereby it came to pass (whether by the correction of Gods judgment upon him, or whether that he after the death of his Brother, and the King being yet but young and tender of age, was the less able to thrust for himself) that not long after he was overmatched and overthrown of his enemies, and so cast into the Tower, and at last lost his head also, to the great lamentation of many good men, as in the sequel of this History followeth to be declared. For the better Introduction of which History, first to begin with the foresaid Brother of the Lord Protector, namely Sir Thomas Semer High Admiral of England, and the Kings Uncle, here is to be understood that he had married Queen Katharine late wife to King Henry the Eighth, of whom ye heard before. Now it happened (upon what occasion I know not) that there fell a displeasure betwixt the said Queen and the Dutchess of Somerset, and thereupon also in the behalf of their wives, displeasure and grudge began between the Brethren. Which albeit through persuasion of friends it was for a time appeased between them; yet in short space after (perchance not without the privy setting forward of some which were back-friends to the Gospel) it brake out again, both to the trouble of the Realm, and specially to the confusion of them both, as after it proved. First to the Lord Admirals charge it was laid, that he purposed to destroy the young King, and translate the Crown unto himself, and for the same being arraigned and condemned, he did suffer at Tower-hill the twentieth of March 1549. As many there were which reported that the Dutchess of Somerset had wrought his death; so many more there were, who misdoubting the long standing of the Lord Protector in his state and dignity, thought and affirmed no less, but that the fall of the one Brother would be the ruin of the other; the experiment whereof as it hath often been proved, so in these also effusions it insured.

It was not long after the beheading of the Lord Admiral, but Insurrections began to kindle the fame year in divers quarters of the Realm, as is above storied. By the occasion whereof the Lord Russell, Lord Privy Seal was sent to the West parts, and the Lord Dudley Earl of Warwick was sent with an Army into Northfolke; where both he himself, and a great number of Gentlemen that were with him, meeting with the Rebels, were in great danger; notwithstanding, in the end the overthrow was given to the Rebels, which was about the beginning of September 1549. After this victory achieved, in the next month following, which was October, how the matter fell out between the Lord Protector and certain other Lords, I know not, but at the return of the Earl of Warwick afore said, great working and consultation there was among the Lords, assembling themselves in the house of Mr. York, and at Bainsards-Castle, and in the Lord Mayors house at London, against the Lord Protector, remaining then with the King at Hampton-Court. Of the which business and trouble thus the Lord Protector writeth in his Letters to the Lord Russell in the West Country as followeth.

A Letter of the Lord Protector, to the Lord Russell, Lord Privy-Seal, concerning troubles working against him.

After our right hearty commendations to your good Lordship, here hath of late risen such a conspiracy against the Kings Majesty and us, as never hath been seen, the which they cannot maintain but with such vain Letters and false tales surmised, as was never meant nor intended of us. They pretend and say, that we have sold Bullbion to the French, and that we do withhold wages from the Soldiers; and other such Tales and Letters they do spread abroad (of the which if any one thing were true, we would not wish to live) the matter now being brought to a marvellous extremity, such as we would never have thought it could have come unto, specially of these men towards the Kings Majesty and us, of whom we have deserved no such thing, but rather much favour and love. But the case being as it is, this we require and pray you to hasten you hither to the defence of the Kings Majesty, with such force and power as you may, to shew the part of a true Gentleman, and of a very friend: the which thing we trust God shall reward and the Kings Majesty in time to come, and we shall never be unkindful of it too. We are sure you shall have other Letters from them: but as you tender your duty to the Kings Majesty, we require you to make no stay, but immediately repair with such force as ye have to his Highness Castle of Windsor, and cause the rest of such force as ye may make to follow you. And so we bid you right heartily farewell. From Hampton-Court the sixth of October.

Your Lordships assured loving Friend, Edward Semer.

An Answer to the Lord Protectors Letter.

TO this Letter of the Lord Protector sent the sixth of October, the Lord Russell returning answer again upon the eighth of the said month, first lamenteth the heavy dissension fall between the Nobility and him, which he taketh for such a Plague, as a greater could not be sent of Almighty God upon this Realm, being the next way, faith he, to make of us Conquerors, slaves, and like to induce upon the whole Realm an universal calamity and thralldom, unless the merciful goodness of the Lord do help, and some wise order be taken in staying these great extremities. And as touching the Dukes request in his Letters, soformach as he heard before of this broil of the Lords, and fearing lest some conspiracy had been meant against the Kings person, he hastened forward with such such company as he could make for the surety of the King, as to him appertained. Now perceiving by the Lords Letters sent unto him the same sixth day of October these tumults to rise upon private causes between him and them, he therefore thought it expedient that a convenient power should be levied, to be in a readines to withstand the worst (what perils soever might ensue) for the preservation both of the King and state of the Realm from the invasion of foreign enemies, and also for the staying of bloodshed, if any such thing should be intended between the parts in the heat of this faction. And this he thinking best for discharge of his Allegiance humbly beseecheth his Grace to have the same also in special regard and consideration, first that the Kings Majesty be put in no fear; and that if there be any such thing wherein he hath given just cause to them thus to proceed, he will so conform himself as no such private quarrels do redound to the publick disturbance of the Realm; certifying moreover the Duke, that if it were true which he understandeth by the Letters of the Lords, that he should feed about Proclamations and Letters for raising up of the Commons, he liked not the same. Notwithstanding he trusted well that his wisdom would take such a way as no effusion of blood should follow.

The Contents of the second Answer of the L. Russell to the L. Protector. The good L. Russell's solicitor for peace between the L. Protector and the Lords.

And thus much being contained in his former Letters of the eighth of October, in his next Letters again, written the eleventh day of October, the said Lord Russell rejoicing to hear of the most reasonable offers of the Lord Protector made unto the Lords, writeth unto him, and prometh to do what in the uttermost power of him (and likewise of Sir William Herbert) joynt together with him) doth lie, to work some honourable reconciliation between him and them; so as his said offers being accepted and fastid, some good conclusion might ensue, according to their good hope and expectation: signifying moreover, that as touching the levying of men, they had resolved to have the same in readines for the benefit of the Realm, to occur all inconvenience whatsoever (either by foreign invasion or otherwise) might happen, and so having their power at hand, to draw near, whereby they might have the better opportunity to be solicitors, and a means for this reformation on both parties, &c.

And thus much for answer of the Lord Russell to the Lord Protector's Letters.

The Lords of the Council assembled against the L. Protector.

But now to the matter again of the Lords, who together with the Earl of Warwick (upon what occasion God knoweth) being assembled at London, as ye heard against the Lord Protector; when the King with his Council at Hampton-Court heard thereof, first Secretary Peter with the Kings message was sent unto them, whom the Lords notwithstanding detained still with them, making as yet no answer to the message. Whereupon the Lord Protector writeth to them in this manner as followeth.

A Letter of the Lord Protector to the Council at London.

The L. Protector's Letter to the Lords of the Council at London.

MY Lords, we commend us most heartily unto you, and whereas the Kings Majesty was informed that you were assembled in such sort as you do now also remain, and was advised by me and such other of his Council as were then here about his person, to send Mr. Secretary Peter unto you, with such message as whereby might have ensued the surety of his Majesty's person, with preservation of his Realm and Subjects, and the quiet both of us and your selves, as Mr. Secretary can well declare to you: his Majesty and we of his Council here do not a little marvel that you stay still with you the said Mr. Secretary, and have not as it were vouchsafed to send answer to his Majesty, neither by him nor any other. And for our selves we do much more marvel and are right sorry, as both we and you have good cause to be, to see the manner of your doings bent with violence, to bring the Kings Majesty and us to these extremities. Which as we do intend, if you will take no other way but violence, to defend as nature and our allegiance doth bind us, to extremity of death, and and to put all to Gods hand, who giveth victory as it pleaseth him; so that if any reasonable conditions and offers would take place (as hitherto none have been signified unto us from you, nor do we understand what you do require or seek, or what you do mean) and that you do seek no hurt to the Kings Majesty's person; as touching all other private matters, to avoid the effusion of Christian blood, and to preserve the Kings Majesty's person, his Realm and Subjects, you shall find us agreeable to any reasonable condition that you will require. For we do esteem the Kings wealth and tranquillity of the Realm, more than all other worldly things; yea more than our own life. Thus praying you to send your determinate answer herein by Master Secretary Peter, or if you will not let him go, by this Bearer: We beseech God to give both you and us grace to determine this matter, as may be to Gods honour, the preservation of the King, and the quiet of us all, which may be, if the faults be not in you. And so we bid you most heartily farewell.

From the Kings Majesty's Castle of Windsor, the seventh of October, 1549.

Your Lordships Loving Friend, E. Somerset.

After these Letters received, and the reasonable conditions of the Lord Protector, and yet not much regarded of the Lords, they perfiling still in their pretended purpose, took this advice, first to keep themselves in the City of London, as strong as they might; and therefore calling upon the Mayor and the Aldermen, they willed them in any case to provide a good and substantial Watch by night, and a good Ward by day, for the safeguard of their City, and the Ports and Gates thereof; which was consented unto, and the Companies of London in their turns warned to watch and ward accordingly.

A solemn Watchword mandated in London.

Then the said Lords and Counsellors demanded of the Lord Mayor and his Brethren five hundred men to aid them to fetch the Lord Protector out of Windsor from the King; but thereunto the Mayor answered, That he could grant none aid without the assent of Common-Council of the City: Whereupon the next day a Common-Council was warned. But in the mean time the said Lords of the Council assembled themselves at the Lord Mayors House of London, who then was Sir Henry Amcotts Filhonger, and William Lock Mercer, and Sir John Aileph Sheriffs of the said City, and there the said Council did agree and publish a Proclamation forthwith against the Lord Protector, the effect of which Proclamation was as followeth:

gainst the
L. Protector

2. The loss of the Kings Pieces in France.

3. That he was ambitious and sought his own glory, as appeareth by building of most sumptuous and costly Houses in the time of the Kings Wars.

4. That he esteemed nothing the grave counsel of the Counsellors.

5. That he sowed division between the Nobles, the Gentlemen and Commons.

6. That the Nobles assembled themselves together at London for none other purpose, but to have caused the Protector to have lived within limits, and to have put such order for the surety of the Kings Majesty as appertained, whatsoever the Protector's doings were; which they said were unnatural, ungrate and traitorous.

7. That the Protector slandered the Council to the King, and did what in him lay, to cause variance between the King and the Nobles.

8. That he was a great Traytor, and therefore the Lords desired the City and Commons to aid them, to take him from the King.

And in witness and testimony of the Contents of the said Proclamation, the Lords subscribed their names, which were these:

After the afore said Proclamation was proclaimed, the Lords or the most part of them, continuing and lying in London, came the next day to the Guildhall, during the time that the Lord Mayor and his Brethren sat in their Court or inward Chamber, and entred and continued a long while with the Mayor; and at the last the Mayor and his Brethren came forth unto the Common-Council, where was read the Kings Letter sent to the Mayor and Citizens, commanding them to aid him with a Thousand well appointed men out of their City, and to send the same with all speed to his Castle at Windsor.

This Letter by name was directed to Sir Henry Amcotts Knight, Lord Mayor, to Sir Rowland Hill Knight, Mayor Elect, and to the Aldermen and Common-Council of the City of London. The day and date of the Letter was the sixth of October, in the third year of his Reign, being signed with the hand of the King, and the Lord our City of London for us, and to levy out of hand, and to put in order as many as conveniently you may, well wea-to send as hither, for the defence of our person, one thousand of that our City, of trusty and faithful men, to attend upon us and our most entirely beloved Uncle Edward Duke of Somerset, Governour of our Person, and Protector of our Realm, Dominions and Subiects, well barnessed, and with good and convenient weapon; so that they do make their repair hither unto us this night, if it be possible, or at the least to morrow before noon, and in the mean time to do what appertaineth unto your duty for ours and our said Uncles defence against all such as attempt any conspiracy or enterprise of violence against us and our said Uncle, as you know best for our preservation and defence at this present. Given under our Signet at our Mannor of Hampton-Court, the sixth of October, the third year of our Reign.

You shall further give credit to our trusty and welbelovéd Owen Cleydon, the Beater hereof, in all such things as he shall further declare unto you on the behalf of us and our said Uncle the Lord Protector.

EDWARD SOMERSET.

This Letter of the King and of the Lord Protector was not so secretly devised, nor so speedily sent, but the Lords keeping at London had knowledge immediately thereof (by the means, as some suppose, of the Lord Payer, who was then with the King and the Protector, but the truth the Lord knoweth) being there ready furnished with their own bands of Serving-men, and other Souldiers and men of Arms.

Who forthwith upon the same addressed their Letters in seemable wise to the said Lord Mayor and Aldermen in the Kings name, not only for a supportation of Armed men to serve their purposes, and for a sufficient Watch to fortifie their City, but also that they should not obey any such Letters, Proclamations, or Injunctions sent to them from the Duke. Which Letter of the Lords at the same instant came likewise to the Lord Mayor and his Brethren, the sixth day of the said month of October. The tenour and Copy of which Letter here ensueth.

To our very good Lord, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London.

After our hearty commendations unto your good Lordship; knowing your hearty favour and earnest zeal to the preservation of the Kings Majesty, and of this Realm, and other his Majesties Realms and Dominions;
we have thought good to advertise you, that notwithstanding all the good advice and counsel that we could give to the Duke of Somerset, to stay himself within reasonable limits, and to use his Government now in the tender age of his Majesty, in such sort as might tend to his Highest safety, to the conservation of his estate, and to his honour; the said Duke nevertheless still continuing in his pride, covetousness, and ambition, causeth not daily, by all the ways and means he can devise, to enrich himself without measure, and to impoverish his Majesty.

He buildeth in four or five places most sumptuously, and leaveth the poor Souldiers unpaid of their wages, unequaled, and in all things so unfurnished, as the latter lately sustained, to the greatest dishonour that ever came to the King and this Realm, do declare. He soweth daily division between the Nobles and Gentlemen, and Commons. He rewardeth and entertaineth a number of those that were Captains of the Commons in these late insurre-ctions; and finally in such wise subverteth all Law, Justice and good order (as it is evident) that putting his trust in the Commons, and perceiving that the Nobles and Gentlemen should be an impediment to him in his Devil-ish purposes, he laboureth first to have them destroyed, and thinketh after easily enough to achieve his desire, which it appeareth plainly, is to occupy the Kings Majesties place. For his doings, whosoever list to behold them, do manifestly declare, that he mindeth never to render account to his Majesty of his proceedings.

These things with many more too long to recite, considered, we pondered with our selves, that either we must travel for some reformation, or we must in effect as it were consent with him to the destruction of our Sovereign Lord and Country. Whereupon laying apart all respects, and resting only upon our duties, we joined in counsel, and thought quietly to have treated the matter with him. Who perceiv-ing that we joyed for the King, and would have such order as might be for the safety of his Majesties person, and the Commonwealth, straight put himself in force, and respects at plain points (as it appeareth) either to go through with his detestable purpose in such sort as he hath done, or to try it by the sword.

Now forasmuch as we see presently, that unless there be a reformation, the person of the King Majesty is in most certain danger, and this Realm our natural Country like to be destroyed with all our posterities; like as we have again fully resolved with Gods help, either to deliver the Kings Majesty and the Realm from this extreme ruin and destruction, or to spend our lives for the declaration of our faithful hearts and duties; so knowing your hearty good wills and truth to his Majesty, and therefore nothing doubting of your readiness to join with us in our godly purpose, we thought good to let you know the very truth of our enterprise, and in the Kings Majesties behalf to require you not only to put good and substantial order for watch and ward, but also to have an earnest continual regard to the preservation, within your City, of all Harnesse, Weapons, and Munition, so as none be suffered to be conveyed, to the said Duke, nor any others attending about him; and besides;

The City of London, urged with two contrary Letters at one instant.

After the receiving of these two Letters above mentioned, the one from the King, the other from the Lords, which came both at one instant, with contrary commandment to the Lord Mayor and Citizens of London, the case seemed hard to them, and very doubtful (as it was indeed) what way to take, and what were best for the Citizens of London to do. On the one side the name and authority of the King was much on the other side the power and Garisons of the Lords, lying then in London, was not little, which seemed then to be such as would have no repulse.

The Recorder speaks for the Lords.

The case thus standing perplexedly, first by the mouth of the Recorder it was requested, that the Citizens would grant their aid rather unto the Lords, for that the Protector had abused both the Kings Majesty and the whole Realm, and that without he were taken from the King, and made to understand his folly, this Realm was in great hazard, and therefore required that the Citizens would willingly assent to aid the Lords with five hundred men.

Henceunto of a great part in the Common-Council was no other answer made but silence. But the Recorder (who at that time was Mr. Brook) still rested upon them for answer. At the last stepped up a wife and good Citizen named George Stadlow, and said :

The grave Oration of a discreet Citizen speaking for the King, whose name was George Stadlow a Parliament-man.

"In this case it is good for us to think of things past, to avoid the danger of things to come. I remember, faith he, in a story written in Fabians Chronicle, of the War between the King and his Barons, which was in the time of King Henry the Third, and the same time the Barons (as our Lords do now) demanded aid of the Mayor and City of London, and that in a rightful cause for the Commonwealth, which was for the execution of divers good Laws against the King, which would not suffer those Laws to be put in execution; and the City did aid them, and it came to an open Battle, and the Lords prevailed against the King, and took the King and his Son prisoners, and upon certain conditions the Lords restored the King and his Son again to their liberties, and among all other conditions this was one, that the King should not only grant his pardon to the Lords, but also to the Citizens of London; the which was granted, yea and the same was ratified by Act of Parliament. But what followed of it? Was it forgotten? no surely, nor forgiven neither, during the Kings life. The Liberties of the City were taken away, strangers appointed to be our Heads and Governours, the Citizens given away body and goods, and from one persecution to another were most miserably afflicted. Such a thing is it to enter into the wrath of a Prince, as Solomon faith, The wrath and indignation of a Prince is death. Wherefore, forasmuch as this aid is required of the Kings Majesty, whose voice we ought to hearken unto (for he is our high Shepherd) rather than unto the Lords, and yet I would not wish the Lords to be clearly shaken off; my counsel is, that they with us, and we with them may joyn in suit, and make our most humble Petition to the Kings Majesty, that it would please his Highness to hear such complaint against the Government of the Lord Protector, as may be justly alledged and proved, and I doubt not but this matter will be so pacified, that neither shall the King nor yet the Lords have cause to seek for further aid, neither we to offend any of them both.

The wrath of a King not easily to be provoked.

KING
Edw 6

After this tale the Commons stayed, and the Lord Mayor and his Brethren for that time brake up, till they had further communed with the Lords. To make short, I let pass what order by the City was taken. But the conclusion was, that the Lords (upon what occasion I know not) sat the next day in Council in the Star-Chamber, and from thence sent Sir Philip Hobbie with the Letter of credence to the Kings Majesty, beseeching and requesting his Majesty to give credit to that which the said Sir Philip should declare unto his Majesty in their names; and the King gave him liberty to speak, and most gently heard all that he had to say. Who so handled the matter, declaring his message in the name of the Lords, that in the end the Lord Protector was commanded from the Kings presence, and shortly was committed to ward in a Tower within the Castle of Windsor, called Beauchamp Tower, and soon after were stayed Sir Thomas Smith, Mr. Whalley, Mr. Fisher, and many other Gentlemen that attended upon the Lord Protector. The same day the Lords of the Council resorted to the King, and the next day they brought from thence the Lord Protector, and the other that were there stayed, and conveyed them through the City of London unto the Tower, and there left them.

1 Anno 1552
Here is to be noted that the City levied 500 men, but they were not sent.

The Lord Protector committed to the Tower.

Shortly after the Lords resorted unto the Tower, and there charged the Lord Protector with sundry Articles which follow.

The Lord Protector committed to the Tower.

Articles objected against the Lord Protector.

1. Inprimis, You took upon you the Office of Protector and Governour, upon condition expressly and specially that you would do nothing in the Kings affairs, publicly or privately, but by the assent of the late Kings Executors.

Articles objected against the Lord Protector.

2. Also you, contrary to the said condition, of your own authority did stay and let Justice, and subverted the Law, as well by your Letters, as by your Commandments.

3. Also you caused divers persons being arrested and imprisoned for Treason, Murder, Manslaughter, and Felony, to be discharged and set at large, against the Kings Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

4. Also you have made and ordained Lieutenants for the Kings Armies, and other weighty affairs, under your own writing and seal.

5. Also you have communed with the Embassadors of other Realms, discoursing alone with them the weighty causes of this Realm.

6. Also you have sometime rebuked, checked, and taunted, as well privately as openly, divers of the Kings most Honourable Councillors, for hewing and declaring their advices and opinions against your purposes in the Kings weighty affairs, saying sometimes to them, that you need not to open matters unto them, and would therefore be otherwise advised, and that you would, if they were not agreeable to your opinion, put them out, and take other at your pleasure.

7. Also you had and held against the Law, in your own house, a Court of Requests, and thereby did enforce divers the Kings subjects to answer for their Freeholds and Goods, and determined the same to the subversion of the same Laws.

8. Also, you being no Officer, without the advice of the Council, or the more part of them, did dispose of the Offices of the Kings gift for money, and granted Leases and Wards of the Kings, and gave Presentations to the Kings Benefices, and Bishopricks, having no authority so to do. And further, you did meddle with the felling of the Kings lands.

9. Also you commanded Multiplication and Alcaimistry to be practised, to abuse the Kings Coyn.

10. Also you caused a Proclamation to be made concerning Inclosures, whereby the common people have made divers Insurrections, and levied open War, and distressed and spoiled divers of the Kings subjects, which Proclamation went forth against the will of the whole Council.

{ KING }
{ Edw. 6. }

11. Also, you have caused a Commission, with certain Articles thereunto annexed, to be made out concerning inclosures of Commons, High-ways, decaying of Cottages, and divers other things, giving the Commissioners authority to hear and determine the same causes, to the subversion of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm; whereby much Sedition, Infurrection, and Rebellion have risen and grown amongst the Kings Subjects.

12. Also, you have suffered the Rebels and Traitors to assemble and lie in Camp and Armor against the King, his Nobles and Gentlemen, without any speedy subduing or repressing of them.

13. Also, you did comfort and encourage divers of the said Rebels, by giving of them divers sums of your own Money, and by promising to divers of them, fees, rewards and services.

{ Anno }
{ 1552 }

14. Also, you in favour of the said Rebels did, against the Laws, cause a Proclamation to be made, that none of the said Rebels or Traitors should be sued or vexed by any person for any their offences in the said Rebellion, to the clear subversion of the Law.

15. Also you have said in the time of the Rebellion, that you liked well the doings and proceedings of the said Rebels and Traitors; and said, That the covetousness of the Gentlemen gave occasion to the common people to rise, saying also, That better it were for the Commons to die, than perish for lack of living.

16. Also you said, that the Lords of the Parliament were loth to incline themselves to reformation of inclosures and other things, therefore the people had good cause to reform the things themselves.

17. Also you, after the report and declaration of the defaults and lacks reported to you by such as did survey Bulleigh and the Pieces there, would never amend the same defaults.

18. Also you would not suffer the Kings Pieces beyond the Seas, called New-haven and Black-neß, to be furnished with men and victuals, although you were advertised of the defaults therein by the Captains of the same Pieces and others, and were thereto advertised by the Kings Council; whereby the French King, being the Kings open Enemy, was encouraged and comforted to invade and win the Pieces, to the Kings great loss, and dishonour of his Realm.

19. Also you declared and published untruly, as well to the Kings Majesty, as to other the young Lords attending by his Graces person, that the Lords of the Council at London minded to destroy the King, and you required the King never to forget it: and likewise you required the young Lords to put the King in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make ledition and discord between the King and his Lords.

20. Also where the Kings Majesties Privy Council, of their love and zeal that they did bear unto the King and his Realm, did consult at London, to have communed with you, to the intent to move you, charitably to amend your doings and misgovernment, you, hearing of their said assembly, caused to be declared by Letters in divers places, the said Lords to be high Traitors to the King, to the great disturbance of the Realm.

Sir Ralfe Vane, Sir Myles Partridge, and other, &c. At length the time being come of his arraignment, the aforesaid good Duke being brought from the Tower, was conveyed through London with the Ax of the Tower before him, and with great preparance of Bills, Halberds, Pikes, and Polaxes in most forcible wise; a Watch also set and appointed before every mans Door through the high street of London, and so was he brought into Westminster Hall, where the Lords of the Council sitting as his Judges in the middle of the Hall, upon a new Scaffold, he was there before them arraigned and charged both with Treason and Felony.

In the which judgment, I pass over the unfeinly speech, the vile taunts and despitful rebukes, without all modesty or honesty, used by certain of the Sergeants and Justices, and some other sitting there. All which notwithstanding he patiently and quietly did suffer, neither storming inwardly in stomach, nor reviling them with words again; but like a Lamb, following the true Lamb and example of all meekness, was contented to take all things at their hands, and with no less patience to bear now their ungentele and cruel railings, than he did before their glavering words and flatterings in time of his high estate and prosperity. And as the patience of this good Duke was marvelous in forbearing his enemies, so also was his discretion and temperance no less seen in answering for himself to the Articles to him objected; whereunto he wisely and substantially replied, putting himself in the end to be tried by his Peers. Who then at length, after consultation had, did frame and temper their verdict thus; That as concerning the case of Treason, wherewith he was charged, they discharged him, but they accounted him guilty of Felony. When the people (which were there present to a great number) heard the Lords say, Not guilty, (meaning by the case of Treason) supposing no less but that he had bin clearly acquitted by these words, and especially seeing the Ax of the Tower to be carried away, for great joy and gladness they made an outcry, well declaring their loving affection and hearty favour unto the Duke, whose life they greatly desired. But this opinion of the people was deceived, and the innocent Duke condemned to die for Felony. Which Act of Felony had been made a little before against the Rebels and unlawful assemblies, such as should seek or procure the death of any Councillor, so that every such attempt and procurement, according to the Act, should be adjudged Felony. By the virtue of which Act the Duke being accused, with certain other his Complices, to intend and purpose the death of the Duke of Northumberland, and of certain beside, was therefore cast and condemned of Felony, and so was returned toward the Tower again.

At whole passage through the City great exclamations and outcries were made again of the people, some rejoicing that he was acquitted, some bewailing that he was condemned. Thus the good Duke passing through a great part of the City, landing at the Crane of the Vinetree, was conveyed to the Tower, where he endured till the 22 of January. Upon the which day, at the coming down of the Letter of execution from the King and the Council, the aforesaid Duke and Uncle to the King being found no Traitor, only being cast by the Act of Felony, was delivered unto the Sheriffs, and so brought to the place of execution.

Touching which execution a few words here would be bestowed, in describing the wonderful order and manner thereof, as it hath faithfully been suggested to us upon the credit of a certain Noble Personage, who not only was there present at the deed doing, but also in a manner next unto him upon the Scaffold, beholding the order of all things with his eyes, and with his pen also reporting the same in order and manner as here followeth.

In the year of our Lord, 1552, the two and twentieth of January, in the sixth year of the Reign of King Edward the Sixth, he being yet under age and governance of Tutors, the noble Duke of Somerset, Uncle to King Edward, was brought out of the Tower of London, and according to the manner delivered to the Sheriffs of the City, and compassed round about with a great number of armed men both of the Guard and others, he was brought unto the Scaffold on Tower Hill, where he nothing changing

And thus much hitherto concerning the first trouble of the Lord Protector Duke of Somerset, with the Crimes and Articles objected against him, with his imprisonment also in the Tower, and the terrible Proclamation given out against him. All which purposes of man, though they seemed fully to intend no less than the spilling of his blood; yet the Lord above, the only disposer of all mens purposes, so ordered the matter by the means of the King labouring for his Uncle, that in short while after he was let out of the Tower, and that Proclamation which before had made him a Traitor, within three days after was called in again, (a Domino factum est illud) with commandment given, none of them to be fold. And so the Duke of Somerset, graciously escaping this adversity, was again restored, though not to the former office, yet unto liberty, wherein he continued the space of two years and two days.

After the which time of reprieve being expired, the said Duke of Somerset was apprehended and committed again to the Towers; and with him also Sir Michael Stanhop, either voice or countenance, but in a manner with the same gesture which he commonly used at home, kneeling down upon both his knees, and lifting up his hands, commended himself unto God.

The cheerful countenance of the Duke of Somerset at his death.

After that he had ended a few short Prayers, standing up again, and turning himself toward the East side of the Scaffold, nothing at all abashed (as it seemed to me standing about the midst of the Scaffold, and diligently marking all things) either with the sight of the Axe, or yet of the Hangman, or of present death; but with the like alacrity and cheerfulness of mind and countenance as before times he was accustomed to hear the causes and supplication of other, and especially the Poor (towards whom, as it were with a certain Fatherly love to his Children, he always shewed himself most attentive) he uttered these words to the people.

The words of the Duke of Somerset to the people at his death.

Dearly beloved Friends, I am brought hither to suffer death, albeit that I never offended against the King neither by word nor deed, and have been always as faithful and true unto this Realm as any man hath been. But forasmuch as I am by a Law condemned to die, I do acknowledge my self as well as others to be subject thereto. Wherefore to testify my obedience which I owe unto the Laws, I am come hither to suffer death; whereto I willingly offer my self, with most hearty thanks unto God, that hath given me this time of repentance, who might through sudden death have taken away my life, that neither I should have acknowledged him nor my self.

The care of the Duke of Somerset in setting forth true Religion.

Moreover, dearly beloved Friends, there is yet somewhat that I must put you in mind of, as touching Christian Religion; which so long as I was in Authority I always diligently set forth and furthered to my power. Neither do I repent me of my doings, but rejoice therein, for that now the State of Christian Religion cometh most near unto the form and order of the Primitive Church. Which thing I esteem as a great benefit given of God both unto you and me; most heartily exhorting you all, that this which is most purely set forth unto you, you will with like thankfulness accept and embrace, and set out the same in your living. Which thing if you do not, without doubt greater mischief and calamity will follow.

A sudden noise and fear of the people at the death of Somerset.

When he had spoken these words, suddenly there was a terrible noise heard; whereupon there came a great fear upon all men. This noise was as it had been the noise of some great storm or Tempest, which unto some seemed to be heard from above; like as if a great deal of Gunpowder being indosed in an Armory, and having caught fire, had violently broken out. But unto some again it seemed as though it had been a great multitude of Horsemen running together, or coming upon them. Such a noise then was in the ears of all men, albeit they saw nothing. Whereby it happened that all the people being amazed without any evident cause, without any violence or stroke stricken, or any man seen, they ran away, some into the Ditches and Puddles, and some into the Houses therabouts; other some, being afraid of the horror and noise, fell down groveling unto the ground, with their Polaxes and Halberds; and most of them cried out, Jesus save us, Jesus save us. Those which tarried still in their places, for fear knew not where they were; and I my self which was there present among the rest, being also afraid in this hurly burly, stood still altogether amazed, looking when any man would knock me on the head. It happened here, as the Evangelists write it did unto Christ, when as the Officers of the high Priests and Pharisees, coming with Weapons to take him, being affrighted ran backwards and fell to the ground.

The like story you shall read in 1 Cor. 14. 18. in Matthew the 23. Book and 5. Chap.

In the mean time, whilst these things were thus in doing, the people by chance spied one Sir Anthony Brown riding under the Scaffold; which was the occasion of a new noise. For when they saw him coming, they conjectured that which was not true, but notwithstanding which they all wished for, That the King by that Messenger had sent his Uncle pardon; and therefore with great rejoicing and calling up their Caps, they cried out Pardon, Pardon is come: God save the King. Thus this good Duke, although he was destitute of all mans help, yet he saw before his departure, in how great love and favour he was with all men. And truly I do not think that in so great slaughter of Dukes as hath been in England within these few years, there were so many weeping eyes at one time; and not without cause. For all men did see in the decay of this Duke the publick ruine of all England, except such as indeed did perceive nothing.

But now to return from whence we have strayed; the Duke in the mean time standing still in the same place, modestly and with a grave countenance made a sign to the people with his hand, that they would keep themselves quiet. Which thing being done, and silence obtained, he spake unto them in this manner.

Dearly beloved Friends, there is no such matter here in hand as you vainly hope or believe. It seemeth thus good unto Almighty God, whose ordinance it is met and necessary that we all be obedient unto. Wherefore I pray you all to be quiet, and to be contented with my death, which I am most willing to suffer; and let us now join in Prayer unto the Lord for the preservation of the Kings Majesty, unto whom I have always shewed my self a most faithful and true Subject. I have always been most diligent about his Majesty in his affairs both at home and abroad, and no less diligent in seeking the common commodity of the whole Realm. At which words all the people cried out and said, it was most true.

The words of the Duke spake to the people.

Then the Duke proceeding, said, Unto whose Majesty I wish continual health, with all facility and all prosperous success. Whereunto the people again cried out, Amen.

Testimony of the people with the Duke of Somerset.

Moreover, I do wish unto all his Counsellors the grace and favour of God, whereby they may rule in all things uprightly with justice. Unto whom I exhort you all in the Lord to shew your selves obedient, as it is your bounden duty, under the pain of condemnation, and also most profitable for the preservation and safeguard of the Kings Majesty.

Moreover, forasmuch as heretofore I have had oftentimes affairs with divers men, and hard it is to please every man, therefore if there be any that hath been offended and injured by me, I most humbly require and ask him forgiveness, but especially Almighty God, whom throughout all my life I have most grievously offended; and all other whatsoever they be that have offended me, I do with my whole heart forgive them. Now I once again require you dearly beloved in the Lord, that you will keep your selves quiet and still, lest through your tumult you might trouble me. For albeit the spirit be willing and ready, the flesh is frail and wavering, and through your quietness I shall be much more quieter. Moreover, I desire you all to bear me witness that I die here in the Faith of Jesus Christ; desiring you to help me with your Prayers, that I may persevere constant in the same unto my lives end.

The confession of the Duke of Somerset.

The Duke of Somerset dies in the Faith of Jesus Christ.

After this, he turning himself again about like a meek Lamb, kneeled down upon his knees. Then Doctor Cox, which was there present to counsel and advertise him, delivered a certain Scroll into his hand, wherein was contained a brief confession unto God. Which being read, he stood up again upon his feet, without any trouble of mind (as it appeared) and first bid the Sheriffs farewell, then the Lieutenant of the Tower, and other, taking them all by the hands which were upon the Scaffold with him. Then he gave the Hangman certain Money. Which done, he put off his Gown, and kneeling down again in the straw, untied his Shirt-fringes. After that, the Hangman coming unto him turned down his Collar round about his neck, and all other things which did let or hinder him. Then lifting up his eyes to Heaven, where is only hope remained, and covering his face with his own handkercher, he laid himself down alone, shewing no manner of token of trouble or fear, neither did his countenance change, but that before his eyes were covered there began to appear a red colour in the midst of his cheeks.

D. Cox, his Doctor.

Thus this most meek and gentle Duke lying alone, and looking for the stroke, because his Doublet covered his neck, he was commanded to rise up and put it off; and then laying himself down again upon the block, and calling thrice upon the name of Jesus saying, Lord Jesus save me, as he was the third time repeating the same, even as the being taken away from all dangers and evils of this life, thou hast here the true History of this worthy and noble Duke, and if any man report it otherwise, let it be counted as a lie.

The virtues of the Duke
 of Somerset.

As touching the manners, disposition, life and conversation of the said Duke and the Kings Uncle, what shall we need to speak, when as he cannot be sufficiently commended, according to the dignity of his virtues? There was always in him great humanity, and such meekness and gentleness, as is rare to be found in so high Estate. He was prone and ready to give ear unto the complaints and supplications of the poor, and no less attentive unto the affairs of the Commonwealth. Which if he had lived together with King Edward, he was like to do much good in reforming many misorders within this Realm.
 He was utterly ignorant of all craft and deceit, and as far void of all pride and ambition, as he was from doing of injury, being indeed utterly void of both. He was of a gentle disposition, not coveting to be revenged; more apt and ready to be deceived, than to deceive. His ancient love and zeal of the Gospel and of Religion he brought with him to the state of his Dignity. The proof whereof sufficiently was seen in his constant standing to Gods truth, and zealous defenses thereof, against the Bishops of Chichester, Norwich, Lincoln, London, and others more, in the consultation had at Windſor, the first year of the Kings Reign.

A competition between Duke Humfrey Uncle to K. Henry, the sixth and the Duke of Somerset
 Uncle to *K.
 Edward* the sixth.

Briefly, considering the nature and virtues of this Duke, I may (as ascerneth) not unaptly compare and resemble him unto Duke Humfrey, the good Duke of Gloucester. Who likewise being Uncle unto King Henry the sixth and Protector of the Realm (as this was also to King Edward the sixth) yet he wanted not his Enemies and privy enviers, especially Henry Beauford Cardinal, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellor of England; who, at that time disdaining and envying the rule and authority of this Duke, procured much trouble against him, and great division in the whole Realm, inasmuch that all the Shires within the City of London were shut in for fear of the favourers of these two great perionages; for each part had assembled no small number of people.

Troubles of the Duke of Gloucester
 read before.

For pacifying whereof the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Duke of Quinber, called the Prince of Portugal, rode eight times in one day between the two adversaries.
 Such were when the troubles of this tumultuous division within the Realm, between these two, as is before expressed; not much unlike to the troublesome discord betwixt parties in this Protectors days. And as in their afflictions and troubles these two Dukes seemed not much unlike, so in matters of Religion, and in discerning truth from falshood, their zeals seemed not much discrepant.
 Although the light of the Gospel did not so fully then shine out, as in the time of this later Duke, (the Lord be praised therefore) yet the wisdom and towardness of the other Duke also touching the same was not utterly unworthy of his commendation. For the more manifest declaration whereof, amongst many other his godly doings, we may take for example the prudent and famous Act of that noble Duke, in discerning and trying out the false lying miracle and Popish Hypocritie of the blind Beggar at Saint Albans, mentioned in his story before.
 For the which cause, and for his diligent study in reforming that and such other blind abuses of tainted Religion, he was the more hated of the Spirituality, and such as Winchester then was.

A false miracle detected by *D.
 Humfrey* of Gloucester.

Finally as this Lord Protector Duke of Somerset the Kings Uncle, by certain of the Council was then accused, arraigned and condemned for the trespass (as it was given forth) of Felony (although I never heard he murdered or robbed any) so the other Uncle of King Henry the sixth was made away. Of whose decease thus writeth
M. Tindal in his practice of Prelates; at the last they found the means to contrive a drift to bring their matters to pass, and made a Parliament far from the Citizens of London, where was slain the said good Duke and the only wealth of the Realm, and the mighty Shield which so long had kept it from the forrow, which shortly after his death fell upon them by heaps. But the Chronicles (saith he) cannot tell wherefore he died, nor by what means.

 Nevertheless, this they testifie, that he was a virtuous man, godly and good to the Commonwealth.

But to leave Duke Humfrey, and to return to the manners and virtues of the Duke of Somerset, which before we were about to describe; as he was a gentle and courteous Duke at home, so was he no less fortunate a Captain in warfare abroad. Under whose government and guiding not only divers rebellious commotions were happily suppressed here at home; but also abroad, in the expedition of Scotland, such a Victory was given him of God, that with the loss of six hundred of his own men, there were of the enemies as good or little less than ten thousand slain and put to flight, and even the very same day and time in the which all the Idolatrous Images were here burnt at London. And yet all these Wars notwithstanding, whereunto he was against his will compelled, he was a man of nature singularly given to peace, as may be seen by the sweet and peaceable exhortation by him set forth in Print before, and sent to the Realm of Scotland.

The happy success of the Duke of Somerset in his victory.

But as there is nothing in this world so perfect in all respects, which is not blotted or darkened with some spot of vice adjoynd withal; so amongst the manifold commendations of this Duke, one thing there was too, which both diminished his honour and estimation much, and also more impaired and hindered his own life and safety; which was, that he in condescending to the death of his Brother, followed too rashly the persuasion of certain whosoever they were; for that matter lacked not perchance some singular fetch and policy of some, more craftily than godly disposed persons, as many good men have supposed.

Gods charishment upon the Duke of Somerset.

But whatsoever of that matter is to be deemed, credible it is that the said Duke, in suffering or procuring the death of his Brother, not only endamaged himself, and weakened his own power, but also provoked the chastisement of Gods scourge and Rod, which did follow upon him.

The be-heading of the Earl of Surrey.

Furthermore, as touching the death and decay of the Lord Henry Earl of Surrey, who suffered also at the Tower next before the Lord Admiral, the Lord Protectors Brother, because the casting of him was so near to the death of King Henry, as I know not upon whom or what cause the same did proceed; I pass it over and leave it to the Lord. Notwithstanding, as for the Duke of Somerset, whatsoever his other vices and virtues were, this is certain, that his end (the Lord so working with him) was constant in Christs truth, as his life was before a great maintenance of the same.

Moreover, on the 26. day of February, in the same year was Sir Ralph Vane, Sir Miles Partridge both Hanged at the Tower-hill; and Sir Michael Stanhop, and Sir Thomas Arundel beheaded upon the Scaffold, all which four were condemned by the said Act of unlawful assembly, and as accessaries unto the Duke of Somerset.

Not long after the death of the Duke of Somerset, in the next year following, deceased the King himself about the Month of June, whereof more shall be said (the Lord granting) in his due order and course hereafter. In the mean season, before we come to close up the later end and story of this good King, the place here present seemeth not unfit to intermit by the way a few other things before happening within the time of his Reign, namely, concerning matters incident of the Church, and of Religion.
 Which state of Religion began well to grow, and to come happily forward during this Kings days, had not the unhappy troubles of the outward state, among the Lords not agreeing within themselves, disquieted the good towardness of things begun. But the malice of the Devil how subtilly worketh it, if men could see it? So long as the Lords agreed in concord among themselves, Winchester and Bonner with all that Faction was cut short, and began to condescend to good conformity. But afterward perceiving the States and Nobles of the Realm to be among themselves divided, and the Lord Protector the Kings Uncle displaced, and his Brother the Admiral before beheaded, and the young King new left in that case, they began upon some hope to take more heart to them, till at last it came to pass as they themselves desired. And thus though nothing else will lead us, yet experience may teach us what discord worketh in public weals; and contrarily, what a necessary thing concord is to the advancement especially of Gods matters appertaining to his Church. Examples whereof in this Kings days be not far to seek. Examples whereof the success of the Gospel of peace, while publick peace and the Gospel did joyn together, marvelous it was how Error and Popery were in themselves confounded, and alhamed almost to shew their faces. Inasmuch that then both Doctor Smith, Chadsey, Standish, Tong, Oglethorpe, with many more recanted their former ignorance, whole recantations I have to shew. Bonner then with his own hand subscribed unto the Kings Supremacy, and promoted his Injunctions.

The same also did Stephen Gardiner, subscribing with his own hand to the first Book of the Kings proceedings, and no doubt had done less to the second Book also to let forth by the King, had not the unfortunate discord fallen amongst the Nobles in time so unfortunate, as then it did. Briefly, during all that time of peace and concord, what Papist was found in all the Realm, which for the Popes devotion would or did once put his neck in the Halter to die a Martyr for his sake?

I shewed before how in these peaceable days of King Edward, Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paulus Pagninus, with other learned men more, were entertained, placed, and provided for in the two Universities of this Realm, Oxford and Cambridge, who there with their diligent industry did much good. The learned and fruitful disputations of whom I have likewise present in my hands here to insert, but that the bigness of this Volume driveth me to make short, especially seeing their disputations to be so long and prolix as they be, and also in Latin, and require of themselves a whole Volume to comprehend them.

First, Peter Martyr, being called by the King to the publick reading of the Divinity Lecture in Oxford, amongst his other learned exercises did set up in the publick Schools three conclusions of Divinity to be disputed and tried by Argument. At which disputations were present the Kings Visitors, to wit, Henry Bishop of Lincoln, Doctor Cox Chancellor of that University, D. Hains Dean of Exeter, Master Richard Morison Esquire, Christopher Nevins Doctor of Civil Law. The conclusions propounded were these.

1. In the Sacrament of thanksgiving there is no Transubstantiation of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ.

2. The body and blood of Christ is not carnally or corporally in the Bread and Wine, nor, as other use to say, under the kinds of bread and wine.

3. The body and blood of Christ be united to bread and wine sacramentally.

They which were the chief disputers against him on the contrary side, were Doctor Tresham, Doctor Chadsey, and Morgan. The reasons and principal Arguments of Peter Martyr herunder follow.

The Arguments of Peter Martyr upon the first conclusion.

The Scriptures most plainly do name and acknowledge bread and wine. In the Evangelists we read that the Lord Jesus took bread, blessed it, brake it, and gave it to his Disciples. Saint Paul likewise doth oft times make mention of bread.

Ergo, We also with the Scriptures ought not to exclude Bread from the nature of the Sacrament.

Cyprianus.

As in the person of Christ, his humanity was seen outwardly, and his Divinity was secret within: so in the visible Sacrament the Divinity inserteth it self in such sort as cannot be uttered, that our devotion about the Sacrament might be the more religious.

Ergo, As in the person of Christ, so in the Sacrament, both the natures ought still to remain.

Gelasius.

KING
Edw. 6.

The Sacraments which we receive of the body and blood of Christ are a divine matter; by reason whereof, we are made partakers by the same of his divine nature, and yet it ceaseth not still to be the substance of bread and wine. And certes the representation and similitude of the body and blood of Christ be celebrated in the action of the mysteries, &c.

Augustinus.

As the person of Christ consisteth of God and Man, Augustinus com- when as he is true God, and true Man. For every thing containeth in it self the nature and verity of those things whereof it is made. Now the Sacrament of the Church is made of two things, that is, of the Sacrament that signifieth, and of the matter of the Sacrament that is signified, &c.

Theodoretus.

These visible mysteries which are seen be both honoured Theodore. Dicit with the name of his body and blood, not changing the nature, but adding grace unto nature, &c. And the same Theodoretus again faith.

Those mystical Sacraments after sanctification do not pass out of their own proper nature, but remain still in their former substance, figure, and shape, &c.

Ergo, Like as the body of Christ remained in him, and was not changed into his Divinity; so in the Sacrament, the bread is not changed into the body, but both the substances remain whole.

Origene.

If whatsoever entereth into the mouth goeth down into the belly, and so passeth through a man, even that meat also which is sanctified by the Word of God, and by Prayer, as touching that part which is both material within it, passeth into the belly, and so cometh through a man. But through prayer, which is adjoined to it, according to the measure of Faith, it is profitable and effectual, &c. And he addeth moreover, For it is not the outward matter of bread, but the word that is spoken upon it, that profiteth him which eateth it worthily, &c.

Irenaeus.

Jesus taking bread of the same condition which is after us, (that is, taking bread of the same nature and kind which we use commonly to eat) did confess it to be his Body. And taking likewise the cup, which is of the same creature which is after us (that is, which we commonly use to drink) confessed it to be his blood, &c.

Item, lib. 4. Like as bread which is of the earth, receiving the word and calling of God, is now not common bread, but the Eucharist, consisting of two things, the one earthly, the other heavenly; so our bodies receiving the sacred Eucharist, be now not corruptible, having hope of Resurrection, &c.

Argument.

The bread in the Sacrament is so changed into the body, as our bodies are changed when they are made incorruptible by hope.

But our bodies are not made incorruptible by changing their substance;

Ergo, No more is the bread changed into the substance of the body.

Gregory.

Notwithstanding whether we take leavened or unleavened bread, we are all one body of our Lord and Saviour, &c.

Argument.

KING Lands

Argument.

- Da- Where bread leavened or unleavened is taken, there is substance of bread, and not accidents only.
ri- In the Sacrament bread is received either leavened or unleavened;
i. Ergo, In the Sacrament is substance of bread, and not accidents only.

Argument.

- Ba- The body of Christ is named of that which is proportioned round, and is unseparable in operation.
ro- Accidents only of bread have no figure of roundness.
es. Ergo, The body of Christ is not named of accidents, but of very bread substantial.

Argument.

The words of the Evangelist speaking of that which Christ took, blessed, brake, and gave, do import it to be bread, and nothing else but bread.
Ergo, The substance of bread is not to be excluded out of the Sacrament.

Chrysostom.

Christ in giving Bread and Wine, said, Do this in remembrance of me.

Cyrillus.

He gave to them pieces or fragments of bread.
Alto the same Cyril faith, In bread we receive his precious body, and his blood in wine.
Ergo, By these Doctors it remaineth bread after the consecration.

Ambrose.

Before the blessing of the heavenly words it is called another kind of thing. After consecration the body of Christ is signified.

Arguments of Peter Martyr disputing with Master Chadsey upon the first question.

- Da- The Analogy and resemblance between the Sacrament and the thing signified must ever be kept in all Sacraments.
ri- In the Sacrament of the Lords body this Analogy or resemblance cannot be kept, if bread be Transubstantiated:
fi. Ergo, The substance of bread must needs remain in the Sacrament.

The Major of this Argument is certain by Saint Augustine, Lib. de Catechizandis rudibus, & Epist. ad Dardanum. Where he faith, Sacraments must needs bear a similitude of those things whereof they are Sacraments, or else they can be no Sacraments.
The Minor is thus proved.

Argument.

- Ba- The resemblance between the Sacrament and the body of Christ is this, that as the properties of bread and wine do nourish outwardly, so the properties of the body of Christ do nourish spiritually.
ro- Without the substance of bread and wine there is no resemblance of nourishing.
es. Ergo, Without the substance of bread and wine the Analogy cannot hold.

Argument.

- Ba- Again, another resemblance and similitude or analogy of this Sacrament is this, That as one loaf of bread and one cup of wine containeth many Corns and many Grapes; for the mystical Congregation containeth many Members, and yet maketh but one body.
ro- Without the substance of bread and wine no such resemblance or similitude of conjunction can be represented.
es. Ergo, Without the substance of bread and wine, the Analogy of this spiritual conjunction cannot hold.

Another Argument.

- Ba- Every Sacrament consisteth in two things, that is, in the thing signifying, and the thing signified.
ro- Without the substance of Bread and Wine there is nothing that signifieth in the Sacrament.
es. Ergo, The substance of bread and wine in the Sacrament can in no wise be Transubstantiated from their natures. The Minor is thus to be proved.
Fef- There is no signification in any Sacrament without the element.
ri- The substance of bread and wine is the element of this Sacrament.
es. Ergo, Without the substance of bread and Wine there is no similitude nor signification in this Sacrament.

And forasmuch as the adversaries ground their Transubstantiation so much upon these words of Christ, This is my body, which they expound only after the literal sense, without Trope or figure; now that this their explication is false, and that the said words are to be taken figuratively and spiritually, by three causes it is to be proved.
1. First by the words of the Scripture. 2. By the nature of a Sacrament. 3. By the testimonies of the Fathers.

1. First, By these words of the Scripture, where he faith, Do this in remembrance of me, forasmuch as remembrance properly serveth not for things corporally present, but for things rather being absent.
2. Secondly, Where he faith, Until I come, which words were vain, if he were already come by consecration.
3. Thirdly, Where St. Paul faith, The breaking of bread is it not the communion of the body of Christ? Which words of breaking in no case can be verified upon the body of Christ, which for the glory thereof is unpassible.
4. Furthermore whereas the Lord biddeth them to take and eat, it is evident that the same cannot be understood simply of the body of Christ without a Trope, forasmuch as he cannot be eaten and chewed with Teeth, as we use properly in eating other meats to do.
5. The words moreover of Luke and Paul, spoken of the Cup, do argue likewise that the other words spoken of the Bread must needs be taken mystically. As where it is said, This cup is the New Testament, which words must needs be expounded thus; this Cup doth signify the New Testament.
6. Item, These words of St. John, Chap. 6, My words be spirit and life. The flesh profiteth nothing, &c.
7. Item, Where in the same place of Saint John, Christ, to reſet the carnal understanding of the Capernaimit of eating his body, maketh mention of his Ascension, &c.

The second cause why the words of Christ, This is my body, cannot be literally expounded without a Trope, is the nature of a Sacrament; whose nature and property is to bear a sign or signification of a thing to be remembered, which thing after the substantial and real presence is absent. As touching which nature of a Sacrament sufficiently hath been said before.

The third cause, why the words of consecration are figuratively to be taken, is the testimony of the ancient Doctors.

Three causes proving that these words of Christ, This is my body, are not to be taken literally, but figuratively.

The second cause, the nature of a Sacrament.

The third cause, the testimony of the Fathers.

Ambrosius.

Ambros. de sacram. c. 6.As thou hast received the similitude of his death; so thou drinkest the similitude of his precious blood.

Argument.

Fe- The death of Christ is not present really in the Sacrament, but by similitude.

re- The precious blood of Christ is present in the Sacrament as his death is present.

o- Ergo, the precious blood of Christ is not present really in the Sacrament.

The Minor of this Argument is proved before by the words of Ambrose.

The second
conclusion.The second Question, Whether the Body and Blood of Christ be in the Bread and Wine, or under the forms of Bread and Wine carnally and corporally.

Argument.

Di- The true natural body of Christ is placed in Heaven.

fa- The true natural body of Man can be but in one place at once, where he is.

mi- Ergo, the true natural body of Christ can be in no place at once, but in Heaven where he is.

The Major is plain by the Scriptures, Jesus was taken up to heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God. Mat. 26. The poor ye have always with you, but me you shall not always have. John 12. I leave the world and go to my Father. John 16. Many shall say in that day; Lo here is Christ, and there is Christ, believe them not. Mat. 24. Whom the heavens must receive for a time, until the resurrection of all. Acts 3. Seek those things that are above, where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God. Col. 3.

The Minor likewise is evident by Saint Austin, who, speaking of the glorified body of Christ, affirmeth the same to be in one certain place, Propter veri corporis modum, that is, for the manner of a true body.

Argument.

Da- Every true natural body requireth one certain place.

Augustine.

re- Christ's body is a true natural body.

o- Ergo, Christ's body requireth one certain place.

Argument.

Augustine giveth not to the soul of Christ to be in moe places at once but once. August. ad Dardanum.Ergo, much less is it to be given to the body of Christ, to be in moe places at once, but one. Comparata a Majori.

Argument.

The nature of the Angels is not to be in divers places, but they are limited to occupy one certain place at once. Comparison between Angels and the body of Christ. Basilius de Spirit. sancti. cap. 22.

Ergo, The body of Christ being the true natural body of a Man, cannot fill divers places at one time.

Argument.

Ba- Whatsoever is in many and divers places at once, is God.

ro- The body of Christ is not God, but a Creature.

co- Ergo, The body of Christ cannot be in moe places together.

Argument.

Fe- We must not so defend the Divinity of Christ, that we destroy his humanity. August.

ti- If we assign to the body of Christ plurality of places, we destroy his humanity.

no- Ergo, we must not assign to the body of Christ plurality of places.

Argument.

Fe- Whatsoever thing is circumscribed, that is to say, contained in the limits of any peculiar place, cannot be dispersed in moe places at once.

ti- The body of Christ is a thing circumscribed.

no- Ergo, The body of Christ is not dispersed in moe places at one time.

Argument.

Da- Every quantity, that is, every body having magnitude, length, and other dimensions, is circumscribed in one peculiar place.

ti- The body of Christ hath his dimensions, and is a quantity.

i- Ergo, The body of Christ is circumscribed.

Cyrillus.

The Major is proved by Cyrillus. Whatsoever is understood to be a body, the same is verily in a place, and in magnitude and in quantity. And if it be in quantity, it cannot avoid circumscription, that is, to have his place. Cyril. de Crem. lib. 2.
pag. 145.

Argument.

Ba- If Christ had given his body substantially and carnally in the supper, then was that body either passible or impassible.

ro- But neither can you say that body to be passible or impassible, which he gave at supper.

co- Ergo, he did not give his body substantially and carnally at supper.

Augustine.

The Minor is proved thus. For if ye say it was passible, Augustine is against it, which saith, Ye shall not eat this body which you see, nor drink the same blood which they shall shed that shall crucifieme. &c. And if ye say it was impassible, that may not be admitted by the words of the Evangelist, which saith, Eat, this is my body which shall be given for you; So that, that body was passible, and not impassible, wherein Christ was given. Vigilius.

One Creature cannot receive in it self two contrary or divers things together. But these two things be divers and far unlike, that is to say, to be contained in a place, and to be every where. For the word is every where, but the flesh is not every where.

Argument.

- Fe- Bodies organical without quantity be no bodies.
ri- The Popes Doctrine maketh the body of Christ in the Sacrament to be without quantity.
o. Ergo, The Popes Doctrine maketh the body of Christ in the Sacrament to be no body.

Argument.

- Da- All things which may be divided, have quantity.
ri- The body in the Popes Sacrament is divided in three parts.
i. Ergo, The body in the Popes Sacrament hath quantity, which is against their own Doctrine.

Argument.

- Fe- No natural body can receive in it self, and at one time contrary or divers qualities. Vigilius.
ri- To be in one place local, and in another place not local; to be in one place with quantity, and in another place without quantity; in one place circumscript, in another place incircumspect, is for a natural body to receive contrary qualities.
e. Ergo, The body of Christ cannot be in one place local, and in another not local; in one place with quantity, and in another without quantity, as our adversaries do affirm.

Argument.

- Fe- The wicked receive not the body of Christ.
ri- The wicked do receive the body of Christ, if Transubstantiation be granted.
Joh. Ergo, Transubstantiation is not to be granted in the Sacrament.

Argument for probation of the Major.

- Ca- To eat Christ, is for a man to have Christ dwelling and abiding in him. Augustine.
mes- The wicked have not Christ dwelling in them.
res. Ergo, the wicked eat not the body of the Lord.

Cyprian.

Cyprianus, de Coena Dom. The eating of Christ is our abiding in him.

Argument.

- Bo- The Holy Ghost could not come, if the body of Christ were really present.
car- That the Holy Ghost is come it is most certain.
do. Ergo, it cannot be that Christ himself should be here really present.
Joh. 16. For proof of the Major, John the sixteenth, Unless I go from you the Holy Ghost shall not come: It is expedient for you that I go hence.

Argument of Peter Martyr.

- Bo- If the wicked and infidels do receive the body of Christ, they receive him either with sense, or reason, or with faith.
ro- But they receive him neither with sense, reason, nor with faith.
eo. Ergo, wicked men and infidels receive in no wise the body of Christ.
Declaration of the Major. For declaration of the Major, it ye say, they receive him with sense, that is against their own lore; for the body of Christ in the blessed Sacrament (say they) is not sensible, nor to be perceived by any sense; neither with reason can they receive him, by their own learning, for so much as this Sacrament exceedeth all reason; nec fides habet meritum, ubi ratio praebeat experimentum. And if ye say, that they receive him with faith, how can that be, seeing infidels have no faith?

What it is to eat the body of Christ the teaching of the Papiſts herein is strange, and differeth from the old Doctors. For where they teach that wicked persons and infidels, albeit they receive not the effect of the Sacrament, yet the matter of the Sacrament which is the very body of Christ, they receive with their mouth, and with their sense the accidents of bread, and thus imagine a certain body of Christ, such as evil men and infidels may eat, and yet being eaten, it giveth them no nourishment nor life, nor maketh them partakers of his spirit and grace; both Scripture and the ancient Expositors of the Scripture do teach much otherwise. For the Scripture knoweth no such kind of eating Christs body, but only that which is fruitful, wholesome, and effectual. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, abideth in me and I in him, &c. John 6. And therefore it may appear, that the Scripture meaneth by eating Christs flesh, to believe in Christs Passion, which none can do but only the faithful. And to the same sense found all the old Doctors.

Cyprianus.

That we should know that eating is our dwelling in him, and our drinking is, as it were, a certain incorporation Domini. in him.

Item, The same Cyprian, The eating therefore of his flesh is a certain desire to abide in him; and faith moreover, that none eateth of this Lamb, but such as be true Israelites, that is, true Christian men, without colour or dissimulation.

And again he saith, That as meat is to the flesh, the same is faith to the soul, the same is the word to the spirit.

Moreover, And therefore (saith he) doing this we whet not our teeth to bite, but with pure faith we break the holy Bread and distribute it, &c.

Augustinus.

It may not be said, that any such do eat the body of Aug. de civ. Christi, because they are accounted amongst the Members cap. 13. of Christ. Neither can they be both Members of Christ, John 6. and Members of an Harlot, &c. Furthermore, when Christ saith, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him; he sheweth what it is, not Sacramentally, but indeed to eat his body and drink his blood, which is, when a man so dwelleth in Christ, that Christ dwelleth in him. For so Christ spake those words, as if he should say; he that dwelleth not in me, and in whom I dwell not, let him not say nor think, that he eateth my body, or drinketh my blood.

Also in other places the said Augstn affirmeth, that to drink is to live; And saith moreover, Why preparest thou thy belly and thy teeth? Believe and thou shalt eat. &c.

All which kinds of eating cannot be said of the wicked and infidels, but only of the godly and faithful.

And thus briefly we have run over all the Arguments, and Authorities of Peter Martyr in that disputation at Oxford, with Doctor Tresham, Chedsey, and Morgan, before the Kings Visitors, above named, An. 1549.

Furthermore who so listeth more fully to be satisfied and resolved in all the points and occurrences, touching the matter of this Sacrament, let him read the Books first of the Archbishop Crammer against Winchester; Secondly, the tractation of Peter Martyr made in Oxford, translated and extant in English; and thirdly, the Book of Bishop Ridley made in prison, called A brief Declaration of the Lords Supper.

The like disputation also about the same time was appointed and commenced at Cambridge, concerning the same matter of the Sacrament, the Kings Visitors being directed down for the same purpose by the King. The names of which Visitors were these, Nicholas Ridley Bishop shop of Rochester, Thomas Bishop of Ely, Master John Cleeke the Kings Schoolmaster, Doctor May Civilian, and Thomas Wendy the Kings Phylitian. The conclusions in that disputation propounded were these.

The first disputation holden at Cambridge the twentieth day of June Anno 1549. before the Kings Majesties Commissioners, by Doctor Madew respondent; whose first conclusion was this.

Transubstantiation cannot be proved by the plain and manifest words of Scripture, nor can thereof be necessarily collected, nor yet confirmed by the contents of the ancient Fathers for these thousand years past. D. Glina. M. Langdale, M. Segewick, M. Yong, opponents.

Doctor Madew.

First of all (quoth he) I am very sorry and do not a little lament the shortness of time, to declare and discuss such weighty matters of Religion in, as these be. But that notwithstanding, if I had had more plenty of time indeed; yet you shall understand how that I have ever both in heart and mind (if otherwise I could have avoided it) abhorred all Scholastical disputations, and subtil sophistifications. In consideration whereof, I beseech those that are to dispute, not to alledge or bring forth any dismembered, or curtailed sentences, or writted, as happeneth many times, but the whole and full sentences either of the Scriptures, or of the ancient Doctors; yea, and to avouch such Authors sayings, as are not suspected, or fained, but such as be their own very sayings indeed; which if they do, there is no doubt, but the clear light of this our disputation shall the sooner appear, and be manifest to this auditory. And for a further declaration of my part, you shall understand, that this my Preface in my said former most Catholick and godly conclusion shall consist in three principal points. 1. First, What thing it was that Christ gave to his Disciples. 2. Secondly, What season or time this Transubstantiation did begin. 3. Thirdly, How many devillish abominations have ensued upon that horrible and pestilent invention. As concerning the first, that is, what thing Christ gave to his Disciples, that may very well appear even by our own natural senses, as namely, by the sight, by the touching, by the tasting, which cannot be deceived of their natural judgment. For the eye seeth nothing but Bread and Wine, the tasting favouring nothing else; and the hands touch nothing else. He gave also to their understanding not only his holy and sacred Doctrine, but also a special gift and pledge of his love. He gave the only material Bread and Wine sanctified, as the rude and plain elements or principles to allure them withal; but he gave them the gift of his Grace and heavenly Doctrine, as the very things signified by the sensible elements: which thing plainly appeareth by the words of Christ our Saviour, Nem bibam, &c. I will not drink hereafter of the Fruit of this Vine, until I drink it new with you in the Kingdom of God. Now this fruit or juice of the Vine is nothing else but Wine, as Chrysostome saith. And moreover, to prove the same true, if it be reserved after the consecration for a time, it becometh fowre and tart, therefore it is but Wine. And as touching the Bread Saint Paul saith thus; Is not the Bread which we break the Communion, or participation of Christs Body? He brake Bread, therefore it was but Bread which he gave them; for the Body of Christ is not broken, as the Scripture saith of the same, Os non comminuitis ex eo, you shall not break a bone of him. Also he saith, this is my Body, not that the Bread was his Body, and the Wine his blood, but he spake those words to and of his own mortal Body, there sitting amongst them at Supper; or he spake yet doubtfully as thus; this signifieth my Body. It is one thing which is seen, but it is another thing which is understood: for that which is seen hath a bodily form, but that which is understood thereby hath a spiritual Fruit. Saint Augustine saith. Let the Word have access to the element so it made a Sacrament; mark he saith, Let the Word have access, and not succed. Now the thing that hath access to another thing doth not engorge the thing that it cometh to, no more doth it here, Ergo, it is Bread and Wine still as before, howbeit sacred and holy. What saw you yesterday (saith Saint Augustine) upon the Altar? Truly Bread and Wine, which your own Eyes can witness, said he. What plainer testimony can be had of so ancient a Father as he was, and of so rare knowledge in the Scriptures of God? Seeing then that our Eyes do behold nothing but Bread and Wine, it must needs follow that it is so indeed, or else our senses be deceived in their own proper object, which cannot be by any reason or natural Philosophy. And yet notwithstanding some Papists dream and phantasie such a corporal, real, and gross presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, as they affirm it to be there even as verily as it was upon the Crofs. Indeed the Bread is changed after a certain manner into Christs Body; for Christ gave not his own natural Body to his Disciples at his last Supper, but only a sign or figure thereof. Christs Body is there with the Bread; our senses cannot be deceived about the substance of Bread, but they do judge there to be but one Body, that is of Bread, Ergo, so it is. Also the very denimation of a Sacrament doth plainly repugn unto Transubstantiation. Bread nourisheth the substance of Christs Body, but the accidents do not so; Ergo, the substance doth remain of the Bread that nourisheth: it is also called Bread in the Acts, and in divers other places of the Scriptures, wherefore it is so, but indeed after a sort more holy then before. What gave he in the Supper? Bread, which is the Body, that is to say, an holy sign of his Body, as Augustine doth witness, saying; He doubted not to say, This is my Body, when it was but a sign of his Body. The unleavened Bread was but a bare and naked sign of Christs Body, and so is this Bread the same Body even as Baptism, is. Now indeed there be two manner of signs, One that signifieth only, the other that doth exhibit the thing it self. The first is applied to the old Law chiefly, the other to the Law of Grace. The old ancient and learned Fathers did never use to speak of the substantial change, because that all the mutation is but accidental, not substantial; nor do we deem the bodily substance sacramentally, but yet we say that this Proposition (this is my body) is but a figurative speech, and no proper speech, as some do deem. But it is as much to say as, This signifieth my Body; or else thus, This is a Sacrament of my Body; for the bodily Bread and Christs Body are not contained in place locally, but mystically.

This portentous and monstrous Transubstantiation began first to enter, when the Popish Prelates and Priests began first to understand this said proposition (This is my body) of the carnal and real presence of Christs Body, as Hugo de sancto victore, Gratian, Peter Lombard, and Innocent the third, the very pestilent poison of all Christian Religion, unto whom we have of long season, yea alas too long, given credit. Under the which Innocent the said devillish term or vocable of Transubstantiation began, the year one thousand three hundred fifteen. And Boniface after him Bishop of Rome made the said mad blind Transubstantiation to be the third Article of the Faith, full wisely no doubt; whereas another Bishop of Rome after him affirmed plainly against Nestor the Heretic, that Bread remaineth still, whose name was Gelasius the third. Now as touching the most shameful and detestable inconveniences which must needs follow this devillish term or vocable of Transubstantiation, you shall understand the first is, That then such Papists will have Christs Body still prostituted and received even of the wicked and naughty people, which is clean contrary to that place of our Saviour Christ, where he saith, Whoever eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me, and I in him. Now it is plain, that evil persons dwell not in Christ, nor Christ in them, wherefore they receive not his Body therein at all. For Saint Augustine, Tractat. 8. super Joban. saith, its but Bread which is seen after the consecration, Ergo, the substance of Bread is there still. 2. The second inconvenience that growth hereof, is the fond and superstitious reservation of the Sacrament in pixes, boxes, and such like, with vain Tabernacles over the Altar, where oftentimes it doth putrifie for all their foolish honour; which began in Homo.

KING { Ends } Honorius his days, the third of that name, Bishop of Rome : Which corruption declareth it to be but only Bread, say all the Papists what they list. 3. The third inconvenience that must needs follow Transubstantiation, is Adoration, which is too plain Idolatry, as the Papists do know themselves, if they list : but they are so stiff-necked that they will not know it, and so both have, and yet also will keep the World in blindness still, if they might be suffered. But to be short with you, even as we are changed into Christ by receiving the Sacrament, so the Bread is changed into the Body of Christ. But our substance is not changed into Christs substance, Ergo, the substance of the Bread is not changed into Christs Body. And to be short and plain with you, most honourable Audience, the whole universal World hath been, and yet is fore deceived and deluded about the estimation of this Sacrament. Therefore this is most true, when we do receive the said Sacrament worthily, then are we joyed by Faith spiritually to Christ our Saviour. And thus much have I said in this first matter.

The second matter to be disputed of is this :

That in the Lords Supper is none other Oblation or Sacrifice, than one only remembrance of Christs death, and of thanksgiving.

In this conclusion I will be much shorter, and more compendious than in the first. In consideration whereof, you shall understand that the same is a very godly, and true Catholick proposition. For to offer Christ, and to exhibit the same, is all one thing ; for in that he is offered, he is set forth to eat, there is no difference at all between the maker of the sacrifice, or offerer, and the thing that was offered, which both were one Christ. The Lord did command saying, Do this in remembrance of me ; he made mention of the remembrance only, wherefore it can be none other sacrifice but only that. The Apostle doth declare the manner of the thing doing, saying thus, He took Bread in his hands, he blessed it, he brake it, and gave it to his Disciples. What gave he to them ? Forsooth Bread, which was the Sacrament, and not his Body. No earthly Creature nor heavenly did ever offer up Christ at any time, but he himself once for all upon the Cross, Ergo, he cannot nor ought not to be many times, and often, though that Pighius with all the blind rabble of Papists say the contrary. For truly in this point especially they know not what they say, being so led by the old Pharisaical blindness. But to the purpose : you shall understand, good Auditors, that the pure and clean oblation and sacrifice, spoken of by the Prophet Malachi, is nothing else but devout and faithful prayer and thanksgiving, as Tertullian saith in his third Book contra Marcionem, expounding the Psalm, where it is said thus, The sacrifice of laud and praise shall honour me. So doth Saint Jerome, Irenaeus, and Saint Austin say also upon Malachi. Where also they deny that Christ is essentially in the Sacrament. Yea and Saint Austin Epist. 95. ad Paulinum witnesseth, that the mortifying of our earthly Members is our true Sacrifice that be Christians. And all the ancient Fathers do call Prayers by the name of Sacrifices. And for this purpose, whosoever list to read that most excellent and famous Clerk Zuinglius, cap. 18. de articulis, shall find the same confirmed of him by most grounded reasons, whatsoever the Papists do bark against it. Thus I have declared my mind in both matters now disputable. And if my further declaration be required through the vehemence of Arguments, I will perform the same in my answer thereunto.

There disputed against this Defendant, Doctor Glim, M. Langdale, M. Segewick, and M. Tong, Students in Divinity.

Glim.

Notwithstanding, Right worshipful M. Doctor, that you have so exquisitely declared your mind and opinion in every one of these matters now in contention, before this honourable and learned Audience, and also though just occasion be ministered to me to infringe your positions in both conclusions, yet I will not invade the same as now indirectly, with contrarious and vain words to occupy the small time which is appointed us for the trial of the same, but we will go forthwith to the thing it self, which containeth in it matter enough. It is but folly to use many words, where few will serve our purpose, as saith the Master of the Sentences. All words may signifie at pleasure, and commonly there be moe things than vocables. Like as sometimes there was variance amongst learned Men of the Unity of two substances in one personage of Christ God and Man : So is there now in our days variance of Transubstantiation of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ. Wherefore I do require you first to shew me here openly what the said Transubstantiation is, that we go not from the thing it self, which is our first and chiefest ground.

Madew.

As for that, I need not to shew you ; for every man knoweth it.

Glim.

Peradventure it is not so, good Master Doctor. And I am perfectly assured that every man doth not know it indeed ; for it is not so light a matter as you make it to be.

Madew.

Forsooth you know it your self, and so do all men else.

Glim.

Well, yet I pray you shew me what thing Christ did demonstrate and shew forth by that Article of the Neuter Gender, where he said, This is my body ? What did he point at in that Article This ? For if he meant by that, the Bread, then Christ in the Sacrament is not only of two natures, but of three natures, as of the nature of Bread, of the nature of Man, and of the Divine nature, which to say were blasphemy. The argument is good, and doth hold by that Text, He spake the word, and it was done ; he commanded, and they were created. Moreover, if he should mean by that Article of the Neuter Gender (this) the material Bread, then he would have said, This bread is my body, so making the Article of the Neuter Gender : or else he would have said thus, Here with this bread is my body, to have avoided ever after all Heresies, Errors and Schisms. But he said not so, but spake the Article of the Neuter Gender saying, This is my body, that is to say, the thing or substance contained under the form and kind of Bread, which you see not with your bodily eyes, is my body, according to my promise made to you before, that I would give you my very Flesh to eat, John 6. In like manner when he gave the cup of his Blood, he said not This in the Neuter Gender, as he would have done if he had meant the material Creature of Wine to have remained, but he said then in the Masculine Gender, This is my blood, that is to say, the thing contained under the form of Wine, which you see not with your bodily eyes, is my blood. For truly the Holy Ghost came down to lead us into all truth and verity, and not to deceive us in so notable a point of our Faith. But out of doubt he should have deceived in this matter, if so be he had given us only material Bread and Wine, instead of his Body and Blood, and not have fulfilled his promise made John 6, where he promised thus, The bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. Here be two things spoken of, with two relatives, whereof the first with his relative must needs be referred to his gift in the last Supper, and the second giving of the same Flesh of his, with his relative, must be applied of necessity unto his giving of his Body upon the Cross. Nor do we find in the whole Scripture, where Christ did fulfil his said promise made in the sixth of John, but at those said two times. Wherefore if we be deceived in this matter of Transubstantiation, we may well say, O Lord thou hast deceived us. But God forbid that we should once think such wickedness of him. He must also be unjust just of his promise if it be not performed at any season, as it is not indeed, if it were not at both the said times. Then if it were performed (as the Catholick Church of Christ doth hold, determine, and believe) then must it needs be granted, that he gave at his last Supper his own body and flesh indeed and verily, which he gave upon the Croſs for the life of the world, though not in so fleshy a manner and bloody, yet the very same flesh and blood really after an unbloody sort, and spiritually. He said not, This Bread is my body, nor yet, here with the Bread is my Body, but, This is my body which shall be given for you. Neither said he, This wine is my blood, nor with this wine is my blood, which circumstance of plain speech he would have use, if the pure creatures should have remained, but he said, This is my blood which is shed for you and for many, for the remission of sins, that is to say, the substance hidden under these visible forms of bread and wine, are my very proper flesh and blood. I pray you where do you find in the whole body of the Scripture exprefsed, or justly understood, that Christ gave but only a bare and naked sign, figure, or Sacrament? Or where find you that he gave his body with bread, it remaining bread still? And if you think to find it, I pray you shew me here, whether that body that he gave with material bread were his true body or not? If not, then it was phantall; if it were his true body, (as you do grant) then must there needs be two very true bodies in one place together.

Now that it was his very true body and blood, it is certain by the plain words of the Text saying thus, Which is betrayed or given, and which is shed for you and for many. But I will let all this pass over, and I do require of you this one question, Whether that the Sacraments of the old Law and of the new Law be all one?

Madew.

If you do consider the things themselves, they be all the same, but if you respect the only signs, figures, and Sacraments outwardly, then they be divers.

Glin.

I do perceive your answer very well; then further to our purpose, Was Christ then after the same manner in the bread that came from Heaven, in the Paschal Lamb, and in Isaac, as he is in this Sacrament? Which if you do grant me, then these propositions were true, for Christ to say, this Manna is my body, this Lamb is my body, this Isaac is my body. Moreover, if the Sacraments of the old Law, and of the Law of Grace be all one in very deed and effect, (as you seem to grant) then what difference is between the Shew-Bread in Moses Law, and the bread that we do break, that St. Paul speaketh of? They then had that bread, which signifieth Christ, and so doth ours (as you say) that was bread, so is ours; and so by your reason there is no difference between them: yea their Manna, because it came from Heaven, was better than this earthly bread, that cometh from beneath, which is contrary to the Truth; for Saint John saith, That the Law was given by Moses, but the mercy was given by Jesus Christ. Wherefore that which Christ gave was not only a sign, but also the verity, that is to say, the living bread that came down from Heaven, the true Lamb that taketh away the sins of the World, and Isaac himself which is Christ, or else you must grant me that we Christians do receive less than the Jews did. For they received the bread called Manna from Heaven, and we only a poor morsel of bread from the Earth. Theirs was called Angels food, and ours is, as you hold, little better than common bread. Me seemeth that you do distrust the Doctrine of the Faith of Christianity for these 500 years, even as though Christ had forsaken his Catholick Church after 1000 years, but that is not so; for he promised his holy Spirit to assist his Spouse the Church, and to lead her continually into all truth from time to time, as need should require. As I remember, you said that adoration did follow upon Transubstantiation; but the Fathers for one thousand years past do grant Adoration of the Sacrament, therefore Transubstantiation also. The Minor I prove by the most clear testimonies of S. Austin, S. Ambrose, S. Denſe, S. Basil, and Saint Chrysostom.

1 EDW. 6

I deny Master Doctor, that I said any such thing; and therewith I say that the Fathers do understand by Adoration a certain reverent manner, that we should receive the Lords Supper with, which may be called a certain Veneration, but no Adoration.

Glin.

No may? Saint Austin (De Civitate Dei) witnesseth that the Ethniks and Paynims do esteem the Christians to worship and adore the Gods of Wheat and Barly called Ceres, and the God of Wine called Bacchus. And again St. Austin saith thus, Lo, no Man cateth of that bread except he first adore and worship it.

Madew.

By your patience Saint Austin in that place speaketh of the honouring of Christs body now sitting in Heaven.

Glin.

Yea Master Doctor, think you so? And why not also of his blessed body in the Sacrament? Seeing that he saith it is there, This is my body which is given for you, faith he. More plainly he needeth not to speak for the real presence of his blessed body, being both able and willing to verifie his word. For if a cunning Lapidary should say to you or me, this is a true right Diamond, a perfect Carbuncle, Saphyre, Emerald, or any such precious Stone, we would believe him, though we were ignorant of their natures. Wherefore we ought much more to believe our Saviour Christ, God and Man, in that he saith, This is my body. And why then ought we not to honour it in the Sacrament? Or how many bodies hath Christ, seeing you do grant his body in Heaven to be honoured, but not his body here in the Sacrament?

Forsooth he hath but one very body, and no more, but the Argument, fame is Sacramentally in the Sacrament, and substantially in Heaven; here by faith, and there in deed.

Glin.

Well yet once again to you thus. The very true body Bishop Ridley saith is to be honoured, but the same very true body is not present in the Sacrament, Ergo, the body of Christ in the Sacrament is to be honoured.

Recheſter.

Welbeloved friends and brethren in our Saviour Christ, you must understand that this Disputation, with other that shall be after this, are appointed to search for the plain truth of the holy Scriptures in these matters of Religion, which of a long season have bin hidden from us by the false Glosses of that great Antichrist and his Ministers of Rome, and now in our days must be revealed to us Englishmen, through the great mercy of God principally, and secondarily through the most gentle Clemency of our natural Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesty, whom the living Lord long preserve to reign over us in health, wealth, and godliness, to the maintenance of Gods holy Word, and to the extirpation of all blind Glosses of men that go about to subvert the truth. Because therefore that I am one that doth love the truth, and have professed the same amongst you, therefore I say, because of conferring my mind with yours, I will here gladly declare what I think in this point now in controvertie. Not because this worshipfull Doctor had any need of my help in dissolving of Arguments proposed against him, for as true seemeth he hath answered hitherto very well and clearly according to the truth of Gods Word. But now to the purpose, I do grant unto you (Mr. Opponent) that the old ancient Fathers do record and witness a certain honour and adoration to be due unto Christs body, but they speak not of it in the Sacrament, but

KING } but of it in Heaven at the right hand of the Father, as it. For we receive virtually only Christs body in the Sacrament.

Glin.

How then (if it please your good Lordship) doth Baptism differ from this Sacrament? For in that we receive Christ also by grace and virtually,

Rocheſter.

Christ worketh otherwise in Baptism than in the Sacramental bread.

Christ is present after another sort in Baptism than in this Sacrament; for in that he purgeth and wafeth the Infant from all kind of sin, but here he doth feed spiritually the receiver in Faith with all the merits of his blessed death and passion. And yet he is in Heaven still really and substantially. As for example, The Kings Majesty our Lord and Master, is but in one place, wherefore that this Royal person is abiding for the time, and yet his mighty Power and Authority is every where in his Realm and Dominions: So Christs real person is only in Heaven substantially placed, but his Might is in all things created effectually. For Christs flesh may be understood for the power or inward Might of his flesh.

Glin.

Obſed. If it please your Fatherhood, Saint Ambrose and Saint Augustine do say, that before the consecration it is but very bread, and after the consecration it is called the very body of Christ.

Madew.

Answer. Indeed it is the very body of Christ Sacramentally after the consecration, whereas before it is nothing but common bread, and yet after that it is the Lords bread, and thus must St. Ambrose and St. Augustine be understood.

¶ Here the Proctors commanded the Opponent to disvert the second conclusion, but he requested them that they would permit him as long in this matter, as they would in the second, and so he still prosecuted the first matter as followeth.

Glin.

Well cavil-led and like a Papist.

The bread after consecration doth feed the soul, Ergo, the substance of common bread doth not remain. The Argument is good, for S. Ambrose De Sacramentis saith thus, After the consecration there is not the thing that nature did form, but that which the blessing doth consecrate. And if the benediction of the Prophet Elias did turn the nature of Water, how much more then doth the benediction of Christ here both God and Man?

Madew.

That of Book S. Ambrose is suspected to be none of his works.

Rocheſter.

So all the Fathers say.

Glin.

I do marvel at that for S. Austin in his Book of Retractions maketh plain that that was his own very work.

Rocheſter.

He speaketh indeed of such a Book so intitled, to Saint Ambrose, but yet we do lack the same Book indeed.

Glin.

Well, let it then pass to other Mens judgments. What then say you to holy S. Cyprian 1200 years past? Who saith That the bread, which our Lord gave to his Disciples, was not changed in form, or quality; but in very nature, and by the Almighty word was made flesh.

Madew.

I do answer thus, That this word flesh may be taken two ways, either for the substance it self, or else for a natural property of a fleshly thing. So that Cyprian there did mean of a natural property, and not of fleshly substance. And contrariwise in the Rod of Aaron, where both the substance and also the property was changed.

Glin.

Holy Saint Ambrose saith, the body there made by the mighty power of Gods Word is the body of the Virgin Mary.

Rocheſter.

That is to say, that by the Word of God the thing hath a being, that it had not before, and we do consecrate the body, that we may receive the grace and power of the body of Christ in Heaven by this Sacramental body.

Glin.

By your patience (my Lord) if it be a body of the Virgin (as S. Ambrose saith) which we do consecrate as Ministers by Gods holy Word, then must it needs be more than a sacramental, or spiritual body; yea a very body of Christ indeed, yea the same that is still in Heaven without all moving from place to place, unspcakably, and far passing our natural reason, which is in this mystery so captivate, that it cannot conceive how it is there, without a lively Faith to Gods Word. But let this pass. You do grant that this bread both quicken or give life, which if it do, then it is not a natural bread, but a superubstantial bread.

Rocheſter.

So doth the effectual and lively Word of God, which for that it nourisheth the soul, it doth give life; for the Divine essence infuseth it self unspcakably into the faithful receiver of the Sacrament.

Glin.

How then say you to holy Damasene a Greek Author, Damasene who, as one Tritenis saith, flourished one thousand years past; he saith thus, The body that is of the Holy Virgin Mary is joyned to the Divinity after the consecration in verity, and indeed: not so as the body once assumed into Heaven, and sitting on the Fathers right Hand, doth remove from thence and cometh down at the consecration time, but that the same bread and wine are substantially transfused into the very body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. If (saith he) thou dost not know the manner how it is brought to pass, let it be enough to thee to believe that it is done by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and we do know no more but that the living Word of God is working and Almighty, but the very manner how, is inscrutable to us: and no great marvel, saith he, for we cannot well express how the material bread, wine, or water are transfused naturally into the same body and blood of the receiver and become another body than they were before. So saith this great ancient Clerk, also this Shewbred with wine and water are changed, by the coming of the Holy Ghost, into Christs body and blood, and they be not two bodies there, but very one (of Christ) and the same.

Rocheſter.

Rochester.

First I deny (Master Doctor) that Damasene was one thousand years past; Secondly, I say that he is not to be holden as an ancient Father, for that he maintaineth in his works evil and damnable Doctrine, as the worshipping of Images and such like. Thirdly, I say that indeed God by his holy Spirit is the worker of that which is done in the Sacrament. Also I grant that there is a mutation of the common Bread and Wine spiritually into the Lords Bread and Wine, by the sanctifying of them in the Lords Word. But I deny that there is any mutation of the substances; for there is no other change there indeed, than there is in us, which when we do receive the Sacrament worthily, then are we changed into Christs Body, Bones and Blood, not in nature, but spiritually, and by grace, much like as Isaiab law the burning Coal, even so we see not there the very simple Bread as it was before the Consecration; for an Union cannot be but of two very things. Wherefore if we be joynt to Christ receiving the Sacrament, then there is no adhibition of Bread, which is, when it is reduced to nothing, as it is in your feigned Transubstantiation.

A spiritual mutation of the bread and wine, but no mutation of the substances.

Glin.

So I perceive you would have me to grant that the Sacrament is but a figure, which Theophylactus doth deny.

Rochester.

Theophylact
expounded.

You say truth, he denieth it indeed to be a figure, but he meaneth that it is not only a figure.

Glin.

The Paschal Lamb a figure.

Whereas Saint Paul saith, That we being many are one Bread, he speaketh not, nor meaneth one material Bread, as you do here, Ergo, he speaketh of heavenly Bread. And holy Chrysostome upon Matthew saith, That the Paschal Lamb was a figure, but the mystery is the verity. For the Disciples would not have been offended to have drunk a figure of Christs Blood, being well accustomed to figures. For Christ did not institute a figure for a figure, but the clear verity instead of the figure, as Saint John saith, Grace and verity was given by Christ. Dost thou see Bread? (saith Chrysostome) doth it avoid or pass as other meats do which we receive? God forbid. Ergo, &c.

That ancient Clerk Origen upon the 15. of St. Matth. saith thus, As touching that which is material in the Sacrament, it descendeth and issueth out as other nutriments do, but as concerning that which is celestial, it doth not so.

Glin.

Chrysostome, Homily 82. upon Matthew saith, That we cannot be deceived of Christs Word, but our natural senses may be deceived in this point very soon and easily; his said words cannot be false, but our senses be many times beguiled of their judgments. Because therefore that Christ said, This is my body, let us not at any hand doubt (saith he) but let us believe it, and well perceive it with the eyes of our understanding. And within a little after in that place he saith thus, It was not enough that he was become man, and afterwards was scourged for us, but also he did reduce and bring us to be as one body with him, not through Faith only, but in very deed also he maketh us his Body. And after that he saith, that these works are not of mans power. But the same things that he wrought in his last Supper, he now worketh also by his Precept to his right Ministers, and we do occupy the place of the same Ministers, but he it is that doth sanctifie and transmute the creatures, he performeth still the same.

Rochester.

M. Doctor, you must understand, that in that place S. Chrysostome sheweth us that Christ delivered to us no sensible thing at his last Supper.

Glin.

Honourable Sir, by your patience I grant that he gave to his Disciples no sensible thing in substance, but thing insensible, his own precious Body and Blood, and the only kinds of creatures. And truly, as it seemeth, Theophylactus best knew the meaning of Chrysostome, because all Authors accept him as a faithful Interpreter of him. And he hath these same plain words transcribed and transformed. Also Theophylactus Alexandrinus super Marcum, Cyrillus, and Saint Augustine saith, That before the Consecration it is Bread, but afterwards it is Christs very Body. In like manner Saint Augustine upon the 33. Psalms saith, that in the last Supper Christ did bear himself in his own hands. Now every man may bear the figure of his body in his own hands, but Saint Augustine saith it there for a miracle. Irenaeus in his Fifth Book is of the same mind. And Saint Augustine saith, I do remember my words, &c. The Law and Figures were by Moses, but the Verity and Body came by Christ.

Rochester.

Well, say what you list, it is but a figurative speech, like to this, If you will receive, and understand he is Elias, for a property, but indeed he was not Elias, but John the Baptist. And so in this place Christ calleth it his Body, when it was very Bread. But better then the common Bread, because it was sanctified by the word of Christ.

¶ Here Master Langdale replied to Doctor Madew.

Langdale.

Right worshipful Master Doctor, by your patience I have noted two things that you affirmed in your Position, even now before this honourable Audience, the which, as me seemeth, are not consonant to the truth of Gods Word. The first is as touching Christs saying, I will not from henceforth drink any more of the Fruit of the Vine, until I drink it new with you, &c. Which place of the Scripture you did, as I think, understand, and interpret as though nothing else remained after the Consecration, but very Wine still. Whereof I do not a little marvel; seeing that most famous Clerk Erasmus, whose authority and sentence you refuse at this present only, yet nevertheless is very worthy, in this matter, of far better estimation amongst learned men. Wherefore I trust I shall not offend to alledge him before this learned and honourable Auditory. He plainly affirmeth that for all his great labour in searching the Scriptures, he could never find either in the Evangelists or yet in the Apostolical Doctrine, that it might be, or was called Wine, after the Consecration. And therefore I cannot but marvel, if the thing be so open and plain, as in your declaration you seem to make it, that such a profound Clerk as he was, could not find it out. For that said place he intreated of in his Paraphrases, in his Annotations, and in others of his Labours, and yet he plainly denieth that same very thing to be found of him, which you here openly affirmed, that it is Wine, or may be so called after the Consecration duly performed by a right Minister. I beseech you not to be offended, though I credit not your saying in this so weighty a matter of Christian Religion, as I do his.

Madew.

No forsooth, I will not be offended one jot with you. But to content your mind in this point; It is most constant and sure, that Erasmus was of that mind and opinion, that it was enough for a Christian to believe Christs Body and Blood to be in the Sacrament in what manner or condition soever it were.

By your licence, good Master Doctor, these be Erasmus words. The Church of Christ hath determined very lately Transubstantiation in the Sacrament. It was of a long season enough to believe Christs body to be either under the bread consecrated, or else to be present after any other manner. But yet, faith he, after that the said Church had pondered and weighed the thing more pithily with greater judgment, then she made a more certain determination of the same. In the which place, 1 Cor. 7. Erasmus saith, That the proceeding of the Holy Ghost equally from the Father and the Son, was also determined of the same Church. But let this pass. And as touching the second point which I noted in your so eloquent declaration, which was, that you did wrest and wring the saying of Tertullian from the verity of his mind; for you said, that he doth interpret the Prophet Malachy, speaking of our daily Sacrifice in the New Law, to mean nothing else by that Sacrifice in that place, but prayer and thanksgiving. But the said ancient Clerk Tertullian hath not those words that you do alledge of him, that is to say (Nothing else.) And yet though that Oecolampadius doth so interpret that place, yet (as me seemeth) the judgment of the whole Christian Church is to be preferred in such a matter of Religion. But I will pass over this point, and return to the matter it self. And first I do require of your Mastership, whether that this sentence, This is my body, be spoken of Christ figuratively or not.

Mader.

After the mind of the common Gloss of Cyprian and Origen, it is so taken in very deed.

Langdale

That cannot be by your patience, for it is taken there substantially; Ergo, not figuratively.

Mader.

I deny your Argument.

Langdale.

I prove my Argument good, thus; This word substance doth plainly repugn, and is contrary to this word figure; Ergo, substantially and figuratively do also repugn. Moreover I ask of you, whether that this be a true proposition or not; Bread is Christs body.

Mader.

Yea forsooth, it is a true proposition.

Langdale.

Then thus to you, Christs body was given for us, but you say, that Bread is Christs body; Ergo, Bread was given for us.

Rochester.

Not so Sir, for your former proposition is of double understanding.

Langdale.

Well, yet you Mr. Doctor do grant that Christ is substantially in the Sacrament.

Mader.

No I deny that I said so ever.

Langdale.

Yea? do you so? Well, I pass not thereupon greatly, for I will prove it by another means. Christ did suffer his most glorious passion for us, really and substantially; Ergo, he is also in the Sacrament substantially. The Argument is good, because that it is the same here that was there crucified for us, howbeit here invisibly, indeed spiritually and sacramentally, but there visibly, and after a mortal and most bloody manner.

Rochester.

Master Langdale, your Argument doth well conclude, in case that his body were here in the Sacrament after such a sort as it was when he was betrayed. But that is not so, for he was betrayed and crucified in his natural body substantially and really in very deed; but in the Sacrament he is not so, but spiritually and figuratively only.

Langdale.

By your good Lordships favour that is not so, for he is there not figuratively, but verily and indeed by the power of his mighty Word, yea even his very own natural Body under the Sacrament duly performed by the lawful Minister.

Mader.

O say not so, for you speak blasphemy.

Langdale.

No, no, Master Doctor, God forbid that either I or any man else should be noted of blasphemy, saying nothing but the very plain truth, as in my conscience and learning I do no less.

Rochester.

O Mr. Langdale, I wis it becometh you not hereto have such words.

Langdale.

If it like your good Lordship, I gave not the first occasion of them, but only did refuse that which I was unjustly burdened withal, as reason doth require, and it grieved me to hear it. He saith, if it please your Lordship, that there is a mutation or change of the bread after it is consecrated; which if it be so, as I grant no less, then I would require of him, whether it be changed in the substance, or in the accidents, or else in both, or in nothing? No man can justly say, that there is a change into nothing. And all ancient Fathers do agree, that the same accidents are there still after, that were before; nor doth any Doctor say, That there is any mutation both of the substance and accidents also; Ergo, the substance of bread is changed into some other thing that is there really present under the forms of bread and wine, which by Christs words must needs be his own blessed body.

Rochester.

Sir, you are deceived greatly, for there is no change either of the substances, or of the accidents; but in very deed there do come unto the bread other accidents, inasmuch as that whereas the bread and wine were not sanctified before, nor holy, yet afterwards they be sanctified, and so do receive then another sort or kind of virtue which they had not before.

¶ Here is to be noted, That Peter Martyr in his answer at Oxford, did grant a change in the substances of bread and wine, which in Cambridge, by the Bishop Dr. Ridley was denied.

Langdale.

By your patience, reverend Father, by such means a man may easily avoid all the Mysteries of our Christian faith. As where it is said thus of God the Father, This is my beloved Son, &c. A man may also wring that for us is, to

to be understood thus, This is the image of my welbelov'd Son; or, This is the virtue of my welbelov'd Son; yea, much more justly than your good Lordship doth the other; because St. Paul to the Hebrews doth call the Son the image of the Father, and in another place he calleth him the power or virtue of God, and Gods Wisdom. Now though he be so called in Scripture, God forbid that we should call him only Gods image or Gods virtue, and not God himself.

Rochester.

A figurative speech, where hurely, some-where not. O gentle Master Langdale, you ought not to reason after such a sort as you do now, because that a trope or figurative speech is nocive somewhere, but not every where, nor in this matter.

Langdale.

A food reason wherefore this is his body, should seem no figurative speech. Yet by your licence, honourable Father, it doth appear to me no trope at all in these words of Christ, This is my body which is given for you, and that for this reason; Christ did exhibit or give again the very same things at his last Supper, by the which things he was joynd to us; but he was joynd or knit unto us by his own natural flesh and blood; Ergo, he did exhibit to us at his last Supper no less again. My former proposition I prove by the testimony of Saint Crysostome, whose words in Christs person are these; I would be your Brother, I took upon me common flesh and blood for your sakes, and even by the same things that I am joynd to you, the very same I have exhibited to you again, &c.

¶ Here the Professors commanded Langdale to give place to another.

Rochester.

We are not joynd by natural flesh, but do receive his flesh spiritually from above.

¶ Here Mr. Segewick replied.

¶ Anno 1549. Whether the article of the neuter Gender word (body;) is referred to the bread, or to the body. Right worshipful master Doctor, I do also ask of you first of all, whether the Greek Article (this) of the neuter Gender, be referred to the word (bread) or to the Gender word (body;) if it be referred to the word (bread) then Christ would not have said (this) in the neuter Gender, but rather (this) in the masculine Gender.

Rochester.

Forsooth that Article is referred to neither of both, but may signifie unto us any other kind of thing.

Segewick.

Bread taken directly in the Scripture. No forsooth, but it doth note unto us some excellent great thing determinately, and not so confusedly as you say. For such a great heap of Articles, in the Greek, doth signifie unto us a great and weighty thing to be in the Sacrament determinately, if we may credit the ancient Fathers. Moreover this word (bread) is not always in the Scriptures taken after one sort: Wherefore I desire you to shew me how it is taken in this place of St. Paul, We that are many, are one bread, &c.

Madew.

Forsooth of the very wheaten bread.

Segewick.

Then, after your mind, we are all very wheaten bread.

Rochester.

How we are bread, and how not. Forsooth we are bread, not for the nature of bread, but for the fellowship and unity that is noted by the coagulation of many grains into one bread or loaf.

Segewick.

{ KING }
{ Edw. 6 }

Well let that pass, then thus. It is the body, Ergo, no figure; because there is a perpetual contrariety between the Law of Moses and the Law of Grace. Therein were figures and shadows, and herein is the verity indeed.

Rochester.

I do grant it to be Christs true body and flesh, by a property of the nature assumed to the Godhead, yea, and we do really eat and drink his flesh and blood after a certain real property.

How the bread is Christs body.

Segewick.

It is not the figurative Paschal Lamb, it is not the figurative Manna, nor yet the figurative (shew-bread, &c. Ergo, It is no figure.

Madew.

I deny your Argument.

Segewick.

I maintain my Argument thus. All the shadows are wholly past; Ergo, so also be the figures; for every figure is a shadow: if then it be but a figure, all the figures are not past as yet; but that is false; Ergo, so is the other.

Rochester.

It is nothing but a figure or token of the true body of Christ; as it is said of John the Baptist, he is Elias, not that he was so in deed or person, but in property and virtue he represented Elias.

Segewick.

So: But most learned Father, when Christ said, I am the way, the truth, and the life, may it be understood as you do the other place thus, I am the virtue of the way, verity and the life? But now to the matter it self. It is verily meat, Ergo, it is not figuratively.

Madew.

This Verb or word (is) in this place is taken for that signifieth.

Here he was commanded to reply in the second matter.

Segewick.

NOW as touching our second Conclusion, this I say. Wheresoever Christ is, there is a Sacrifice propitiatory; but in the Lords Supper is Christ; Ergo, in the Lords Supper is a Sacrifice propitiatory.

Madew.

Christ is not offered in the Lords Supper, but is received spiritually.

Christ not offered, but received in spirit.

Segewick.

The Priesthood and the Sacrifice be correspondent together; but Christs Priesthood after the order of Melchisedech is perpetual; Ergo, also so is his Sacrifice.

Rochester.

Christ is a Priest for ever, that is to say, his Priesthood, and Sacrifice, offered once for all, is available for ever, so that no other shall succeed him.

Christs Sacrifice offered once for all, is only sufficient without any other. Christs Sacrifice an end of all sacrifices.

Segewick.

{KING Edm. 6}

Segewick.

Where there is no oblation, there is no Sacrifice; Ergo, if Christ be not perpetually offered, there is no perpetual Sacrifice. Item, the same bloody-Sacrifice of Christ upon the Cross was the very fine and end of all the bloody Sacrifices figured in the Law after the order of Aaron's Priesthood. Wherefore you must needs grant that he offered himself also at his last Supper after the order of Melchisedech, under the forms of bread and wine; or else you must shew the Scripture where he did so, which I cannot perceive to be done, but at his last Supper only, after an unbloody manner. Item, He is offered for the remission of sins daily; Ergo, he is a Sacrifice propitiatory still in the new Law, as Saint Augustine saith, expounding these words of the Psalms, Thou hast not willed to have sacrifice and oblation, but, &c.

Rochester.

Saint Cyprian speaketh much like that sort, where he saith thus, It is the Lords Passion, which we do offer, &c.

Segewick.

In the old law there were many Sacrifices propitiatory; Ergo, There be also in the new Law; or else you must grant that God is not so beneficial now to us, as then he was to them, seeing that we be as frail and as needy as ever were they, which must be especially the most pure daily Sacrifice of Christs body and blood, that holy Malachy speaketh of.

Madew.

What Sacrifice it is that Malachy speaketh
of.

As touching the place of Malachy the Prophet, I answer, That it is nothing to your purpose for the offering of Christ daily in the Sacrament. For that Sacrifice there spoken of, is nothing else but the sincere and most pure preaching of Gods holy Word, of prayer, and of thanksgiving to God the Father through Jesus Christ.

Here Mr. Segewick was commanded to cease to Mr. Young.

Young.

The words of Scripture ever effectual.

Worshipful Master Doctor, although you have learnedly and clerkly defended these your Conclusions this day; yet seeing that I am now placed to impugn them in place of a better, I do begin thus with you. It hath pleased Christ to make us partakers of his holy Spirit, and that in very deed, by receiving of the Christian faith, hope and charity; Ergo, much more of his own blessed body and blood, spiritually and in very deed, in the Lords Supper. Item, the Angels food was altogether holy from above, and heavenly, called Manna; Ergo, also this celestial and heavenly food can be justly esteemed to be of no less excellency than that, but without comparison better; and so no very Wheat, after due Consecration of it. Item, the words of holy Scripture are evermore effectual and working; Ergo, they must perform the thing indeed that they do promise. For he that might create, might also change at his pleasure the natures and substances of creatures, as appeareth that Christ did by changing Water into Wine at a Marriage in Galilee. But Christ in the Scripture did promise, John 6. that the bread that he would give is his flesh indeed, which promise was never fulfilled till in his last Supper, when he took bread, gave thanks, blessed it, and gave it to his Disciples, saying, Take, eat, this is my body. Which bread then was his flesh indeed, as doth well appear in the said place, and next promise depending upon the same, thus, which flesh I will give for the life of the world. This last promise was fulfilled by him upon the Cross; Ergo, the first was likewise at his last Supper. So that it was but one and the same flesh, first and last promised and performed.

Rochester.

Indeed the words of holy Scripture do work their effects potentially and thoroughly by the mighty operation of the Spirit of God.

Young.

If it please your Lordship, man is fed and nourished with Christs blood; Ergo, then it is his blood indeed, though it do not so appear to our outward senses, which he deceived; for Christ saith, This is my blood; And also, My blood is drink indeed. And because that we should not abhor his blessed blood in his natural kind, or his flesh if they should be so ministered unto us; of his most excellent mercy and goodness, condescending to our weak infirmities, he hath appointed them to be given us, under the sensible kinds of his convenient creatures, that is to say, of bread and wine. Also our body is fed with Christs body, which is meat indeed, but it cannot be nourished with that that is not there present; Ergo, Christs body that feedeth us must needs be present in very deed in the Sacrament. Item, the nature of bread is changed; but the nature of the bread, and the substance of it, is one and the same thing; Ergo, the substance also is changed. My first proposition is S. Cyprians de cana Domini, saying, that the bread in figure is not changed, but in nature.

Man is nourished by the force of Christs blood by faith, but not by drinking it really in this Cup.

Rochester.

Cyprian there doth take this word nature for a property Cyprian exposed, of nature only, and not for the natural substance.

Young.

That is a strange acception, that I have not read in any Author before this time; but yet, by your leave, the communion of Christs body cannot be there where his body is not; but the communion of Christs body is in the Sacrament; Ergo, Christs body is there present in very deed.

Rochester.

Grace is there communicated to us by the benefit of Christs body sitting in Heaven.

Young.

Not so only, for we are members of his flesh, and bones of his bones.

Rochester.

We be not consubstantial with Christ, God forbid that, but we are joyned to his mystical body through his holy Spirit, and the Communion of his flesh is communicated to us spiritually through the benefit of his flesh in Heaven.

We be not consubstantial with Christ, but joyned to him by his body spirit.

Young.

Well, I am contented, and do most humbly beseech your good Lordship, to pardon me of my great rudeness and imbecility, which I have here shewed.

Here ended the first Disputation, holden at Cambridge the 20th of June, 1549.

¶ The second Disputation holden at Cambridge the 24th day of June 1549.

Dr. Glan tri his first Conclusion.

The Mysteries of Faith (as Augustine witnesseth) may very profitably be believed, but they cannot well be searched forth, as saith the Scripture, I believed, therefore I spake; and he thus confesseth me before men, him ed.

Mysteries
may better

will I confest before my Father which is in Heaven. We believe every man in his Art, therefore much more Christ our Saviour in his Word. Marvel not most honourable Lords and worshipful Doctors that I speak thus now, for once you your selves spake the same. But peradventure some w^d. say, Believe not every spirit. I answer, Charity beleeveeth all things, but not in all things. If those things which I shall utter be convinced as false, I shall desire you to take them as not spoken at all. But these are the words of truth, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my body; Christ spake them, therefore I dare not say, This bread is my body, for so Christ said not, Christ said thus, This is my body, and therefore I, but dust and ashes, yea a worm before him, dare not say, this is a figure of his body; Heaven and Earth, faith he, shall pass, but my Word shall not pass. Whatsoever our old Father Adam called every creature, that is his name to this day; the new Adam Christ Jesus said, This is my body, and is it not so? He never said, This is a figure of my body, nor Eat you this figure or sign of my body. And therefore when the Paschal Lamb was set before him, he said not, this is my body. Wherefore if at the day of Judgment Christ should say to me, Why hast thou believed that this is my body? I would answer him, because thou hast so called it. I believed it not to be a figure, because thou saidst not that it was a figure. Other reasons to avouch I know not. On the word it self I contend not, but the thing it self I defend, for we must speak regularly. Thus Christ, thus the Apostles, thus all the ancient Fathers have spoken, our Fathers had but only figures and shadows; but the Church of God hath the truth it self with the signs. Tertullian faith, one figure containeth not another; but Melchisedech was a figure; Ergo, this is the body. The Sacraments of the Jesus were signs and tokens; but ours be both the signs and the thing signified also. Luther himself confessed, That the body was present with the bread, and could not deny it. Oecolampadius took it for a figure only. Chrysostome demanding wherefore Christ gave his body before his passion, rather than at any other time; answereth, That he might tie the truth to the figure, saying, Take, eat, this is my body, not a figure of my body. And the same Chrysostome faith again, If it were but bare bread, or but a figure, wherefore should his Disciples have been offended in eating a figure. Again, in his eighty third Homily upon Matthew, They are not any human works which he did work at his last Supper, he it is that worketh, he maketh perfect, we are his Ministers, but it is he that sanctifieth and changeth the elements of bread and wine into his body and blood. Again, Dost thou see bread and wine? Do they pass into the Privy like other meats? God forbid, &c. Theophilus Alexandrinus upon these words of Mark the Evangelist, This is my body, faith, This which I give, and which you receive, is not only bread, or a figure of Christs body, but the truth it self; for if it should appear, as it is, in form of flesh and blood, we should loath it, and therefore the Lord, condescending to our weakness, retaineth the forms of bread and wine, and yet converteth the same into the truth of his body and blood. Theophylactus faith, the bread and the wine is the very body and blood of Christ, and not a figure only. If you stand in suspence of the Author, or approve him not, yet know you that he is counted and taken amongst all the learned for a most faithful interpreter of Chrysostome; The bread (saith he) is transubstantiated, and transmuted into another substance than it was before. Augustine faith there was great heed taken in the Primitive Church, lest any part of the Sacrament should fall down to the ground, &c. Cyrillus faith, Left we should abhor flesh and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, God humbled himself to our weakness, pouring and infusing the force of life into it, and making it the very truth of his own blessed body and blood. Damasce calleth it a Divine body, or a body deified. Origene, Irenaeus, Eusebius, Hieronymus, with all the rest of the ancient Catholick Fathers, are of the same opinion with me, all which to produce at were too long.

At Christ called not the real a figure, for he spake thus figuratively at other times, called them not plain figures, though they were so.

The Sacraments of the Jesus were signs of Christ to come; ours of Christ already come.

The declaration of Doctor Glin upon his second Conclusion.

THe Sacrifice and offering up of Christs body in the Sacrament of the Altar (right honourable and worshipful) I will defend even to the effusion of blood, as a thing consonant to Scripture, whereof Paul speaketh to the Hebrews. But perchance some will object, Christ offered up himself; Ergo, you ought not to offer him. I answer, yea, because he offered himself, therefore I offer him, for except he had offered himself, I could not have offered him. But you will say, Christs death is sufficient, and therefore you ought not to offer him again. I answer, so may we say, we need neither to fast nor pray, for Christ hath done both sufficiently for us. Again, you will object, if you offer him up again, you crucifie him anew. I answer not so, for many have offered him that have not crucified him, as Abraham, Isaac, Moses, the Levites, Anna, Samuel. We offer Christ, but not to the death, but in commemoration of his death, there being not only a commemoration thereof, but also the very preface of Christs body and blood. Irenaeus faith, Christ commended his Disciples to offer the first fruits of all their Goods to God, not that he needed any of them, but for that they should not shew themselves fruitless or ungrateful, and therefore Christ took the creature of bread, gave thanks, and said, This is my body, and likewise the creature of the Cup, and consecrated, saying, This is my blood of the New Testament. Thus Christ hath taught a new kind of oblation, which the Church receiving from the Apostles, offereth to God throughout all the whole world, who only giveth unto us all kind of food, and the first fruits of his gracious gifts in the New Testament, whereof Malachi thus faith, I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, I will not receive any sacrifices at your hands, because my name is glorified amongst the Nations from the East to the West, saith the Lord, and in every place is incense and pure sacrifice offered to my Name. But here it may be objected, Christ is the only sacrifice for sin, and without him there is no more. I answer, notwithstanding we have this Commandment, Do this in remembrance of me, and although I deny not that it is a commemoration, yet I deny that it is an only commemoration; I deny his absence, and I affirm his presence.

{ KING }
{ Edm. 6 }

Christ hath offered himself; his death; no man ought to offer him.

Christ is the only sacrifice for sin, and without him there is no more.

Here endeth the Declaration of Dr. Glin.

Master Perne.

Whereas you say (most reverend Master Doctor) in your proposition, I believed, and therefore I offer him, I restain the use of Scriptures. I answer, we believe, and therefore do speak, our Consciences suggesting the same unto us; and again, that Mysteries are not to be searched, and the like; it seemeth you go about to restrain the searching of holy Scriptures, whereas Christ faith Scrutaminum Scripturas, Search the Scriptures. Moreover, you have cited the Fathers confusedly, and without order; you left Transubstantiation, and endeavour your self to prove the real presence in the Sacrament, whereas we deny nothing less than his corporal presence, or the absence of his substance in the bread.

Glin.

You inveigh wonderfully you know not against what; for neither I, nor yet Augustine do deny the searching of the Scriptures, but I said out of Augustine, Mysteries are not to be searched; it is another thing to search Mysteries, than it is to search the Scriptures; whereas you require of me a regular order of citing the Doctors, I had not, (as all men know) the liberty of time to do so; but if you desire me to earnestly to perform that, if time may be granted me, I will easily fulfil your request.

Perne.

I pray you, let me ask you, what is a Sacrament?

Glin.

{ KING }
{ Edm. 6 }

Glin.

A Sacrament is a visible sign of an invisible grace.

Perne.

Augustine against Maximinus the Arian Bishop, maketh this definition of a Sacrament. A Sacrament is a thing signifying one thing, and shewing another thing.

Glin.

I refuse not his reason.

Perne.

What is the thing figured by the Sacrament?

Glin.

The thing figured is twofold, to wit, the thing contained and signified, and the thing signified and yet not contained. For there be three things contained, the true body of Christ, the mystical body, and the fruit or benefit of the Sacrament.

Perne.

The forms and signs of bread nourish not; Ergo, somewhat else besides the bare sign of bread doth remain, which nourisheth, that is the substance of bread; for in every Sacrament there is a similitude between the sign and the thing signified; but betwixt the body of Christ, and the form or kind of bread, there is no similitude; Ergo, the nature of a Sacrament is taken away.

Glin.

I deny your Minor Mr. Doctor.

Perne.

The forms nourish not; but the body nourisheth; Ergo, there is no similitude betwixt them, and so is the nature of a Sacrament clean destroyed.

Glin.

It is sufficient to similitudes that the bread which was doth nourish; and yet certain Doctors do affirm, that the Forms do nourish miraculously.

Rocheffer.

Whosoever taketh away all the similitude of substances, consequently he taketh away the Sacrament; for a similitude is threefold, namely, of nutrition, of unity and conversion. But by a contrary similitude, he is not changed into our substance, but we into his; for in nutrition this is the similitude, that as our blood nourisheth our bodies, so the blood of Christ doth nourish us, but after a wonderful manner, to wit, by turning us into himself.

Glin.

{ Anno }
{ 1549 } I have answered your reason (most reverend Father) in that I said that the forms do nourish miraculously, as certain learned men do affirm.

Perne.

By what authority can you say that bread doth not remain?

Glin.

By authority of Christ, who saith, This is my body.

Perne.

By the same reason may we say that bread still remaineth; for Saint Paul calleth it bread sundry times in his Epistles.

Glin.

I deny not that it is bread, but that it is material bread; for Paul always addeth this Article (which) betokening (as all men hold) some chief thing.

Perne.

We are changed into a new creature.

Glin.

Not substantially, but actually.

Rocheffer.

This is that bread which came down from Heaven
Ergo, it is not Christ's body, for his body came not from Heaven.

Glin.

We may say that Christ, God and Man, came down ^{Christ's body} from Heaven, for the unity of his person, or else for the ^{came not} mutual community of the same his two natures in one; for ^{from here;} his human nature I know came not from Heaven.

Rocheffer.

The bread is his human nature; but that human nature of his came not from Heaven; Ergo, neither the bread.

Glin.

It is true that the bread came not from Heaven as bread simply, but as celestial and heavenly bread. But I will answer to that, whereas you hold that the body of Christ came not from Heaven; I by the body and flesh of Christ do understand whole Christ, neither separating his soul, nor yet his Deity, although his Humanity is not turned into his Divinity by confusion of substance, but is one by unity of both. Or else thus I may reason, the God of glory is crucified, and the Son of Mary created the World, &c.

Rocheffer.

So it is. But he is called a Rock and a Vine, and so after your judgment he is both a material Rock, and also a material Vine.

Christ is called a Rock, a Vine, but in a figure.

Glin.

The circumstances there shew plainly that there is a trope or figure; for it followeth, I am the Vine, you are the branches; but here is no trope. For after these words, This is my body, he addeth, which is given for you.

Rocheffer.

Your judgment herein is very gross, and far discrepant from the truth.

The judges of the Pope's very gross.

Glin.

If my judgment in this be gross (most reverend Father) then are all the ancient Fathers as gross in judgment as I in this point, and the Catholick Church also.

Perne.

Shew us one place, or one Doctor, who saith that it remaineth not bread after the Consecration.

¶

Glin.

Glin.

I wonder that you are not ashamed to ask that of me ; for have you not had almost infinite places and Doctors alledged to you in my former declarations, proving as much as you request at my hands ?

Perne.

Christ took bread, and gave bread.

He took bread, he brake bread ; ergo, it is bread.

Glin.

I have answered often hereunto, and I grant it is bread, but not only, or material.

Perne.

A Sacrament consisteth of a double matter.

Irenaeus affirmeth that a Sacrament consisteth of a double matter, of an earthly matter, and of a heavenly ; ergo, the bread remaineth.

Glin.

Irenaeus in that place by the earthly matter, meaneth the Humanity of Christ, and by the heavenly matter the Deity of Christ.

Rochester.

The Humanity and the Divinity of Christ make not a Sacrament, which consisteth of a visible and an invisible nature ; and I deny that Irenaeus can be so understood : Therefore we desire the learned Auditory to search Irenaeus at home, as opportunity will serve for this matter.

Glin.

I wish them so to do also with all my heart.

Here Master Grindal beginneth to dispute.

Grindal.

Grindal to please.

Whereas you say (worshipful Mr. Doctor) that we speak not now as sometimes we thought and judged in this matter, peradventure you also judge not so now all things as you have done heretofore. But what we have once been it forceth not, God respecteth no mans person. And whereas you say, that you dare not contrary to Christ call it a sign or a figure, Augustine notwithstanding dareth to call it a figure, and Tertullian likewise, with many more.

Aug. Tertul with many more call it a figure.

Glin.

True it is, but they called it not a sign or a figure only ; but prove you, if you can, that after the Consecration remaineth any other substance than the real body of Christ.

Grindal.

What the forms of bread and what do nourish.

If the forms do nourish, as you contend, they nourish the natural and humane body, for they be both as one, and are nourished alike.

Glin.

Your reason is meer physical, and therefore to be rejected in matters of faith ; but I grant they nourish, but miraculously.

Grindal.

If you grant that the forms do nourish, then you grant that bread remaineth.

Glin.

I said even now that it is true, but the nature of it is changed, and that miraculously.

Grindal.

If it be the real and substantial body of Christ, because Christ said, This is my body ; ergo, because the Lord said, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, and Paul calleth it bread after the Consecration, it is therefore bread and wine.

It remaineth bread and wine after the Consecration.

Glin.

Truly Sir, You must bring better Arguments, or else you will prove nothing for your purpose. For to your reasons thus I answer, Chrysostome saith, Christ did drink of the blood, but whether this sentence, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, be spoken of the blood, it is not certain. And truly Erasmus denieth that it is to be found in all the whole Scripture, that it is called bread after the Consecration. Or else thus I may answer you. Even as it is called bread for the form and kind, and accidents which remain ; so for the form and similitude which it hath, it may be called the fruit of the Vine, after the Consecration. And whereas Chrysostome saith, That the fruit of the Vine is nothing else but Wine ; Ergo, Christ gave them Wine, and drank Wine himself also, and not blood.

How it is called bread, and in what respect.

Christ calleth it wine, not blood. Ann. 7. 1549.

Glin.

Christ said twice, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine ; once at the eating of the Paschal Lamb (as Luke saith) and then was it Wine indeed : And again, after the Consecration of his body and blood he said the like, and then it was not Wine, which methink I can prove by the plain words of Luke, if we compare him with Matth. For if it were Wine as they both affirm, then the words of Christ cannot well stand, because first (as Luke sheweth) he said at his legal Supper, I will not drink of the fruit of this Vine, &c. And again in Matthew, after the Consecration of his body and blood, he drank ; it followeth therefore, that that which he drank was not Wine by nature, for then must Christ needs be a lyer, which were blasphemous to say.

Rochester.

Augustine doth thus reconcile those places, saying, it is spoken by a figure which we call Hysseron proteron.

Two places alloted.

Glin.

I know that Augustine saith so ; but methink that which I have said seemeth to be the true meaning of the places.

Rochester.

Augustine seeketh no starting holes, nor yet any indirect shifts to obscure the truth.

Glin.

Say your Fatherhood what you will of Augustine, I think not so.

Grindal.

This Cup is the New Testament in my blood ; but here is a Trope ; Ergo, in these words of Christ, This is my body, is a Trope also.

In these words, This is my body, is a Trope.

Glin.

I deny your Argument ; for whereas Luke saith this Cup, Matthew saith, this is my Blood, and therefore as Augustine

KING gustine faith, places that be dark are to be expounded by other that be light.

But hear what Tertullian faith, he took bread and made it his Body, saying, This is my Body, &c.

Rocheſter.

All of your ſide deny that Chriſt ever uſed any Trope in the intituting of Sacraments.

Glin.

For my part I hold no opinion but the truth, whereof you your ſelf alſo do pretend the like.

Rocheſter.

A queſtion wherein conſiſteth the ſtrength of the ſacrament. What underſtand you by this word (hoc, this) and in what words ſtandeth the force or ſtrength of the Sacrament? In this Pronoun (Hoc, this) or in this Verb (Eſt, is) or elſe in this whole ſentence, This is my Body?

Glin.

It is not made the true body except all the words be ſpoken, as in Baptiſm, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. For neither doth Baptiſm conſiſt in this word Ego, I, or in baptiſe, or in this word, Te, thee; or in theſe words, In nomine, In the Name, &c. but in all the words ſpoken in order.

Grindal.

To eat the Body of Chriſt a figurative ſpeech. If to eat the Body of Chriſt be a figurative ſpeech, as Auguſtine faith it is, ergo, then theſe words, This is my Body, is a figurative ſpeech alſo.

Glin.

It is a figurative ſpeech, becauſe we eat not the Body of Chriſt after the ſame manner that we do other meats, &c.

Grindal.

Cyprian explained. Cyprian underſtandeth this of thoſe that come unworthily, and make no difference of the Lords Body, ſpeaking of the adjudication of the Sacraments, and not of the Body of Chriſt.

Glin.

Truly he ſpeaketh of the true Body of Chriſt.

Rocheſter.

They receive unworthily who neither judg themſelves, nor yet Sacraments, taking them as other common bread.

Grindal.

Auguſtine upon the Thirty third Pſalm faith, Chriſt bare himſelf in his own hands after a ſort, not indeed or truly, &c.

Glin.

You omit many other things which Auguſtine faith, and I conſels that he carried himſelf in his own hands after a ſort, but Auguſtine delivereth this unto us as a great miracle. And you know it was no great miracle to carry a figure of his Body in his hands. And whereas you ſay that Chriſt carried himſelf after a ſort in his own hands. For Chriſt in the viſible figure bore himſelf inviſibly.

Grindal.

Tertullian calleth it a figure, Ergo, it is ſo.

Glin.

It is, as I have ſaid, a figure, but not a figure only.

Grindal.

Hear what Chryſoſtome faith upon Matthew, Homil. Chryſ. ſuper 11. ſuper Cap. 5. If Veſſels ſanctified to holy uſes, Mat. dom. 11. cap. 5.

Glin.

That works is received not as Chryſoſtomes, but ſome mans elſe as you know; or thus I anſwer, It is not the true Body in proper and viſible form.

Here Mr. Geſt Diſputed.

THE Bread is not changed before the Conſecration, Ergo, not after it neither.

Glin.

I deny your Argument, Mr. Geſt.

Geſt.

Chriſt gave earthly bread, Ergo, there is no Tranſubſtantiation.

Glin.

I deny your Antecedent.

Geſt.

That which Chriſt took he bleſſed, that which he bleſſed he brake, what he brake he gave; Ergo, he receiving earthly bread gave the ſame bread.

Glin.

Your order in reaſoning ſtandeth not; for by the ſame reaſon may you gather, that God took a rib of man, and thereof built a rib and brought it unto Adam; Ergo, what he received he brought; but he received a rib, Ergo, brought a rib.

Geſt.

How is the Body of Chriſt in Heaven, and how in the Sacrament, whether circumſcriptively or definitively?

Glin.

The Body of Chriſt is in Heaven circumſcriptively, but not in the Sacrament. The Angels alſo are contained definitively. But I have learned that the Body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament, but not locally, nor circumſcriptively, but after an unſpeakable manner unknown to man.

Rocheſter.

Ah, know you not?

Glin.

Neither in other myſteries of Faith do we know the mean how, although this may partly be proved by reaſon. For as my ſoul is wholly in my head, and wholly in my foot, and wholly in my finger, and ſo in other parts of my body; and as there is one voice or ſound which all men hearing do underſtand; ſo the Body of Chriſt being one and the ſame is wholly in the Altar, and in many places elſe. For if God could do this in my ſoul, how much more in his own Body?

Rocheſter.

{ Ann. 7.
1549 }

Rochester.

I beseech you shew us what difference is betwixt these two, to be in a place circumscriptively and definitively.

Glin.

Your Lordship knoweth very well : but yet if any would know the difference, let him read August. ad Volufianum, & ad Dardanum, &c.

Gest.

The bread
not changed

If the Bread be changed, it is made the Body of Christ; but that is not so; Ergo, it is not changed.

Glin.

I deny your Minor.

Gest.

It is not generate or begot : Ergo, it is not the Body.

Glin.

That followeth not; as though to be made and to be generate or begot were all one thing; or as though there were no other mutation than a generation, and so you impugn a thing that you know not. But what call you the generation?

Gest.

The generation is the production of the accidents.

Glin.

A new definition of a new Philosopher.

Gest.

That which he took he blessed; that which he blessed he brake, and gave it unto them : Ergo, &c.

Glin.

Christ took bread, brake bread, and gave his Body, that is, the substance of his Body : saying, This is my Body.

Gest.

The bread is not changed into the Blood of Christ : Ergo, not into his Body neither.

Glin.

I deny your Antecedent.

Gest.

The Master of the Sentences saith it.

Glin.

You understand him not; for the bread is changed into the Body of Christ by the power of Gods word.

Rochester.

Papists dream of Transub-stantiation.

Ye dream of a real presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, by the force of the words spoken; which the Holy Scripture doth impugn.

Glin.

We say that not only by the power of the word, but also by the spirit and secret vertue in the words it is brought to pass; for there is no power in one word alone, as before in Baptism, but in all the words } KING duly prolated according to the custom of the ancient Ca- } Edm. 6 tholick Church.

Gest.

If there were any Transubstantiation, the accidents should not remain still, for they have no matter whereto they may lean or cleave; but the accidents remain not themselves alone; Ergo, &c.

Glin.

I confesse accidents cannot stand themselves alone by their own nature without a subject, but by the power of God they may, not after the opinion of Philosophers, but of the Scriptures; although I could shew out of the Scriptures the accidents to have been without the subject; as in Genesis, the light was made without a subject, whereas the subject of the light was made the fourth day after, as Genesis beareth me record.

If there were Transubstantiation on these should remain no accidents.

Here Master Pilkington Disputed.

Pilkington.

THIS one thing I desire of you, most worshipful Mr. Doctor, that you will answer me with like brevity as I shall propound. And thus I reason: the Body of Christ that was broken on the Cross is a full satisfaction for the sins of the whole world; but the Sacrament is not the satisfaction of the whole world; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Christ.

Glin.

I deny your Argument.

Pilkington.

It is a Syllogism.

Glin.

It is not so; for there be four termes. Touching this word Sacrament it is manifold; but thus I answer. If you take the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament, that is, the Body of Christ, then is your Minor Proposition true, and the matter of the Sacrament is the satisfaction for the sins of the whole world; but if you take the Sacrament for the sign, which we call a Sacrament, then is your Minor Proposition false.

Pilkington.

The Body of Christ hath satisfied for the sins of the whole world; but the Sacrament hath not satisfied; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Christ.

Glin.

I deny your Minor, understanding the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament.

Pilkington.

The Sacrament only profiteth him that receiveth it; but many were saved before the institution of the Sacrament was begun; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the Body of Christ.

Glin.

If you mean of the bare sign, only it profiteth nothing; but if you mean the thing signified, then what is spoken of the Body of Christ is spoken also of the thing of the Sacrament it self.

Pilking-

{RING
Edw-6}

Pilkington.

Transubstantiation is not a Sacrament; but that which I mean is a Sacrament; Ergo, that which I mean is not transubstantiated,

Glin.

I mean not that Transubstantiation is a Sacrament, neither do I say that the Sacrament is transubstantiated, but the bread.

Pilkington.

The Body of Christ is refiant in Heaven, and the Body of Christ is in the Sacrament; Ergo, the Sacrament is in Heaven.

Glin.

A goodly reason forsooth; but I answer, he is after one fort in Heaven, and after another fort in the Sacrament; for in heaven he is locally, in the Sacrament not so; in heaven visibly and circumscriptively, but in the Sacrament invisibly and Sacramentally.

Rochester.

Saint Augustine saith, Take away the spaces from the bodies and they shall be no where, and that which is no where is not at all; so whilst you take away the spaces and dimensions from the Body of Christ in the Sacrament, you bring to pass that it is not there at all.

Glin.

In that place Augustine speaketh of natural bodies, not of supernatural; otherwise I could deny that Christ had a true body, when he entred into his Disciples, the Gates being shut.

Rochester.

Of the Gates being shut a divers and doubtful meaning may be gathered; for it may be he entred in before the Gates were shut, and afterward opened them being shut, &c.

Glin.

Then it could be no miracle; but the Evangelists and all sound Interpreters say and affirm this to be a miracle of our Saviour Christ.

Rochester.

Whether Christ entred in miraculously, the Gates being shut, or else open, the Scripture setteth not down.

Glin.

As Christ (the womb of the Virgin being shut up) was born into the world without violation of her pure virginity, or apertion of her womb (for so he might have been polluted) so entred he through the doors to his Disciples miraculously.

Pilkington.

In the Body of Christ which was given for us there are no accidents of bread; but in the Sacrament there be accidents of bread; Ergo, in the Sacrament there is not the Body of Christ.

Glin.

In the matter of the Sacrament, that is, in the Body of Christ, are no accidents of bread, but accidents are the very Sacrament itself.

Pilkington.

I beseech you, what do we eat, the substance or the accidents?

Glin.

Both as when we eat wholesome and unwholesome meats together, so we eat the substance of Christs body, and yet not without the accidents of bread.

Pilkington.

I prove that the accidents are eaten, for whatsoever entred in by the mouth, goeth into the Privie; but the accidents go in by the mouth, Ergo, into the Privie.

Glin.

This sentence, Whatsoever entereb in by the mouth, &c. is not meant of all kind of meats, as not of that which Christ eat after his Resurrection.

Pilkington.

You shall not eat his Body which you see.

Glin.

That is, not after that manner as you see it now, not after the same visible form.

Pilkington.

Wheresoever Christ is, there be his Ministers also; (for Where Christ is, there be his Ministers.) But Christ as you hold is in the Sacrament, Ergo, his Ministers are there also.

Glin.

To be with Christ is spoken divers ways, as in heart, in mind and place, and sometimes both; or to be with Christ is to minister unto him, and to do his will, &c.

The third Disputation holden at Cambridge as before.

Master Perne.

CHRIST at his last Supper took bread, brake bread, distributed bread; Ergo, not his body, but a Sacrament of his body; for the bones of Christ could no man break, as witnesseth the Prophet saying, Os non comminabitur ex eo, that is, You shall not break a bone of him. This cup is the cup of the New Testament in my blood. In this sentence there is a Trope by their own confession; wherefore there is in the other also, This is my Body; for the holy Scripture is a perfect rule not only of doing, but also of speaking. Paul calleth it bread three times, Ergo, it is bread, &c. And whereas they urge so much this Pronoun (illum) it is not in the Greek Canon which hath Panem, bread, not Panem illum, that bread. There was no Transubstantiation in the Manna; Ergo, nor in the Sacrament; for there is this particle, est, if that can prove Transubstantiation, as they suppose. And if Manna were a figure, say they, then this is not. This mystery or Sacrament we hold to be true bread, and true meat. Manna gave life unto them, as this doth unto us; yet was it but a figure. In every Sacrament there ought to be a certain analogy, There ought to be both of the intern and extern thing of the Sacrament, as a certain analogy in every Sacrament. Augustine saith, writing to Bonifacius; but betwixt the analogy in forms of Bread and Wine, and the Body of Christ there is no analogy at all. Ergo, they make not a sacrament. As twen the thing that of many grains, &c. This similitude of Paul is spoken figuratively, and the thing that of the substance of bread, not of the form thereof, otherwise Paul should in vain compare us to bread. As in Baptism the thing that is signified

{Ann
1552}

Anno 1549. tism there is material water; so in the Sacrament of the Eucharist is material bread. Dionysius called the Sacrament of Christs body no otherwise than bread. Eusebius in Ecclesiastica Historia doth the same. Tertullian, Lib. 4. against Marcion, saith thus, He gave his Body, that is, saith he, a figure or type of his body. Cyprian saith, in his last Supper he gave bread and wine, and his body upon the Cross. The same Cyprian, Epist. 6. Lib. 1. and Epist. 3. Lib. 2. saith, Christ drank wine at his last Supper, because he would root out the heresie of certain who only used water in the ministrations thereof. Chrysostome Hom. 13. upon Matthew saith, That only bread remaineth, &c. Theodore saith in his first Dialogue, bread remaineth still in his first nature as before. Augustine saith, The bread doth not lose his first nature after the consecration, but receiveth another quality, whereby it differeth from common bread. The same Augustine, Lib. 3. against Maximus saith, Sacraments are figures, being one thing indeed, and shewing forth another thing; he speaketh of no Transubstantiation here. Again, writing to Bonifacius he saith, The Sacrament of the Body of Christ is the Body of Christ, and so is the Sacrament of Wine also, &c. The Sacraments of the old and new Law are all one in substance of matter, notwithstanding they be divers in signs: which Sacraments why should they not be one, when as they signifie all one thing? The body of Christ when it was on the earth was not in heaven: so now it being in heaven is not on the earth.

Whereby it may appear that Transubstantiation is a most blasphemous, sacrilegious and damnable error, and a most vain, unfavoury, and Devillish Papistical invention, defended and maintained only by the Papists, the professed and sworn enemies of all truth. Those who impugn the Doctrine of Transubstantiation are no new upstarts, as the enemies of the truth the Papists bear the world in hand. But contrarily those who maintain this Devillish Doctrine are new sprung up Cockatrices, as Manichæus, Eutiches, and others. Gelasius saith, the Sacraments which we receive are Divine things; yet cease they not to be bread and wine in nature. Out of this piddle of Transubstantiation hath sprung up adoration of the Sacrament, and inducing men to believe that Christ hath many bodies.

Transubstantiation is a most blasphemous error.

The Declaration of the said Master Perne in the second conclusion.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and the Apostle Paul, call it a commemoration or remembrance of Christs body and blood, and Paul to the Hebrews saith, By one only oblation once offered are we made perfect to eternal salvation, &c. By him therefore do we offer up the sacrifice of laud and praise to God, that is the fruit of the lips, &c. It is called the Eucharist, because we offer to God praise and thanksgiving, with devout minds; and it is called the cup of thanksgiving, because we give thanks to God thereby also. You shall preach forth the Lords death, &c. That is, you shall give thanks and be mindful of his death, &c. Give your bodies a quick and living sacrifice, &c. The sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving shall honour me, &c. Chrysostome saith, The wise men offered three kinds of sacrifices, Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh; so we do also, namely Vertue, Prayer, and Almesdeeds: These be the sacrifices wherewith Christ is pleased. And Augustine saith there are no other sacrifices than Prayer, Praise, and Thanksgiving, &c. Chrysostome, Homil. 46. upon John saith, To be converted or turned into Christ, is to be made partaker of his body and blood.

Why it is called the Eucharist.

No other sacrifice, but only praise and thanksgiving.

These words prove the bread to be transubstantiated.

There disputed against him Master Parker, Master Pollard, Master Vavisor, and Master Young.

Parker.

CHRIST, whose words are to be believed, said, This is my Body; he said not, this bread is my body, or with this bread, or under this bread, or by this bread, but said plainly, This is my Body. And this he proved by these reasons: First, for that it was prefigured before.

Secondly, for that it was promised. Thirdly, for that it was given. The transubstantiation of the bread was prefigured by the Manna which came down from heaven; all that bread was heavenly, and without any earthly matter or substance annexed. Secondly, it was promised in those words of Christ, The bread that I will give is my flesh, &c. Thirdly, it was given by Christ, and exhibited in his last Supper, saying, Take, eat, this is my Body.

Here they were forced to break off through want of time, yet Parker replied thus against Doctor Perne.

WE give thee thanks most holy Father, that thou halt hid these things from the wife and prudent and halt revealed them to babes; for pride is the root of all heresies whatsoever. And on the other side, to acknowledge our own infirmity and imperfection is the first step to the true understanding of the truth. Nestorius the Heretick affirmed, that there were two Persons in Christ, one that was man, another that was God; therefore he said that in the Eucharist was contained true flesh, but only of his pure manhood. Against him did the Council of Ephesus conclude, saying, That there was the real flesh of the Son of God, &c. this he proved by the words of Christ, My flesh is meat indeed: and what flesh that is, he teacheth upon the sixth of John, That is, quoth he, the flesh united to the Deity, and quickened by the Holy Ghost, &c. Now that that flesh is in the Sacrament, it is plain by Hilary, l. 8. de Trinitate: he proved the same also out of Chrysostome, Homil. 45. upon John, We are one body with him, members of his flesh, and bones of his bones, &c. Again in the same Homily, We are joynted to his flesh, not only by faith and love, but also in very deed and truly. And again, it pleased me to become your brother, and by the same things whereto I was joynted to you, have I given my self again unto you, &c.

Hilary l. 8. de Trinitate. Chrysost. ho. 45.

Perne.

I grant unto you that Christ is in the Sacrament truly, wholly, and verily, after a certain property and manner; I deny not his presence, but his real and corporal presence I utterly deny; for doubtless his true and natural body is in heaven, and not in the Sacrament: notwithstanding he dwelleth with us, and in us, after a certain unity. And also in the sixth Chapter of John he speaketh not of the flesh of Christ crucified, &c.

Christ is in the Sacrament really after a figure.

Parker.

The flesh of Christ, as it is in the Sacrament, is quick, and giveth life; Ergo, his real and substantial flesh is in the Sacrament.

How Christ flesh giveth life.

Perne.

The flesh of Christ in that it is united unto the Deity, doth vivifie, and giveth life, but not otherwise.

Rochester.

Christ dwelleth in us by faith, and by faith we receive Christ both God and man, both in spirit and flesh; that is, this Sacramental eating is the mean and way whereby we attain to the spiritual eating, and indeed for the strengthening of us to the eating of this spiritual food was this Sacrament ordained. And these words, This is my Body, are meant thus, By grace it is my true body, but not my fleshly body, as some of you suppose.

How these words, This is my Body, are meant.

Parker.

We are joynted to Christ, not only by faith, but also in very deed, Ergo, &c.

There is a unity between man and woman yet no Transubstantiation.

Rochester.

We are joynted to Christ, that is, we are made partakers of his flesh and of immortality. And so in like case is there a union between man and woman; yet is there no transubstantiation of either, or both, &c.

Why it is called bread so often.

Pollard.

The Sacrament is not bare bread, and nothing else, only because it is called bread so often in the Scriptures, and that I prove

KING. I prove by three reasons. First, it is called bread because of the similitude. Secondly, because of the mutation. Thirdly, for the matter whereof it is made and compact, as the Angels are called men, the Holy Ghost a Tongue, the Rod of Aaron a Serpent, and such like. The words of Christ do teach the same thing, as appeareth in the healing of the woman of Canaans Daughter, fairus Son, and many others, &c. Ergo, &c. Then he proved against Rocheſter, that somewhat else was in the Sacrament besides power and grace, by this reason, The evil receive the Body of Christ, as is plain out of Augustine, Homil. 21. de verbis domini; but the evil and wicked receive not the virtue, or grace: Ergo, there is not only grace and virtue in the Sacrament.

Rocheſter.

The evil receive not the Lord in the Sacrament, but the Sacrament of the Lord, as Judas, who in deed ate not the true Body of the Lord.

Pollard.

In the Sacrament be three things, to wit, an outward sign, the matter of the Sacrament, and the fruit of the same: the evil receive the outward sign, and the subject of the Sacrament, but not the fruit of the Sacrament: Ergo, there is somewhat else in the Sacrament than only Grace. Also every Sacrament ought to have a certain similitude with the matter of the Sacrament; but the material bread hath no such similitude with the Body of Christ, which is the matter of the Sacrament: Ergo, Material bread is not a Sacrament.

Perna.

I deny your Minor: for material bread doth so nourish the body, as the flesh of Christ doth the soul.

Here he being requested gave place to others.

Mr. Vavisor.

Through the shortness of time I am so constrained, that neither I can speak without loss of my reputation, nor yet hold my peace without offence to God. For in speaking (as I do) without great premeditation before this honourable, worshipful, and learned Audience, I shall but shew forth my childlikehood herein, and if I should hold my peace, I might be thought to betray the truth of Gods cause. And therefore whilst I can neither speak for the brevity of time, nor yet hold my peace, Gods truth being in controversy, I have determined, (although with the impairing of my good name) to render a reason of my faith, which if I cannot afford probably in words, yet will I not fault in saying nothing at all. For it seemeth better that I be esteemed altogether foolish and unlearned amongst so many grave learned Fathers and Doctors, than to forsake the just defence of the Truth, which every good Christian man throughout the world hath ever holden inviolable. For whoso forsaketh the manifest known truth, had never any true faith therein. Which thing that I may overpass in Berengarius, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, and many others, who are certainly known to be at no less variance amongst themselves, than uncertain of their faith what to believe, Zuinglius writeth thus of himself: Although this thing which I mean to entreat of doth like me very well, yet notwithstanding I dare define nothing, but only shew my poor judgment abroad to others, that if it please the Lord, others may be thereby instructed by the Spirit of God, which teacheth all good things. In vain do I spend many words; you see plainly he dare not define any thing certainly, but doubteth whether it please God or not. Oecolampadius writing to a certain Brother of his, faith thus, Peace be with thee. As far as I can conjecture out of the learned Fathers, the words, Joh. 6. and, This is my Body, be figurative locutions, &c. You see hereby how uncertain they be of their opinions; they lean not to the Scriptures, to Doctors, nor yet to the Truth, but to suppositions and conjectures: Who therefore hereafter will cleave unto them? But now I come to your Oration, whose beginning pleaseth me very well, and whose progress therein offended me not; but in the end

Uncertainty amongst the Doctors

you concluded in such sort, that you left the whole matter to me, as it were confirming my parts by the same. And herein you framed a syllogism after this manner: What Christ took, that he blessed; what he blessed, that he brake; what he brake, that he gave: Ergo, what he received he gave, &c. Whereto I answer with a like syllogism out of Genesis: God took a rib out of Adams side; what he took he built; what he built he brought; what he brought he gave to Adam to be his wife; but he took a rib, Ergo, he gave a rib to Adam to wife, &c. Also in your said Oration you shew much at those words of Paul where he calleth it bread so often, &c. But the Scripture in another place calleth it water, when indeed it was wine; a rod when it was a plain serpent.

5 Ann. 2.
1549 B.

An unreasonably compact ion.

Rocheſter.

You have pretended great zeal and words enough, but what pith or substance your reasons will afford we shall see hereafter.

Vavisor.

Christ gave the same flesh to us which he received of the Virgin; but he took true and natural flesh of her: Ergo, he gave us true and natural flesh. My Major I prove by Augustine upon the 98 Psalm.

Aug. serm. 38.

Rocheſter.

Mr. Vavisor, you are in a wrong Box; for the place maketh altogether for maintenance of adoration, if it make for any thing.

Vavisor.

I know it very well, and therefore I alledg it as the ground of my reason. These be Augustines words, Christ of the earth received earth, and of the flesh of Mary he received flesh; acknowledge his substance therefore.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledged it.

Vavisor.

And in the very same flesh he walked here upon the earth; acknowledge his substance.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledged it.

Vavisor.

And the very same flesh he gave us to eat; acknowledge his substance.

Rocheſter.

I acknowledge not his real substance to be there, but the property of his substance.

Vavisor.

Then Vavisor recited the place, to the end he might prove that his real substance ought to be acknowledged as well in the last place, as in the first and second; affirming it out of St. Augustine, who faith thus, The Disciples of Christ approaching the Lords Table, by faith drank the same blood which the tormentors most cruelly spilt, &c. but the tormentors spilt no figure of blood: Ergo, &c. This place will not permit the other so to be illuded.

Rocheſter.

It is no illusion, good Mr. Vavisor, but surely you would move a Saint with your impudent reasons.

Vavisor.

I beseech your Fatherhood to pardon my rudeness, for surely I cannot otherwise speak without breach of conscience.

Perna.

That place of Augustine is to be understood of a spiritual kind of eating.

Vavisor.

I demand whether the faithful may receive spiritually; so as they need not to receive Sacramentally.

Perna.

They may.

Vavisor.

Then thus to you: the spiritual eating there is no need to come to the Lords Table; for so it is the meat of the soul, not of the teeth; but the faithful come to the Lords Table, Ergo, that place is to be understood of a Sacramental eating. And again, Augustine faith that he carried himself in his hands.

Rocheſter.

{ Ann. }
1549.

Rochester.

Augustine sheweth a little after what he meaneth thereby, where he saith, he carried himself in his own hands after a certain fort or manner.

Vavijor.

True it is, that after one manner he sat at the Table, and after another manner was in the Sacrament.

Master Young here disputeth against Perne as followeth.

Young.

I Understand the meaning of this word Proprietas, propriety, well enough; for in Hilary and Eusebius it signifieth not the virtue or power of any substance or being, but rather a natural being or substance.

Rochester.

I commend your great diligence in searching of Authors, but in Divinity the matter standeth not so; for the propriety of essence in the Deity is the very essence, and whatsoever is in God is God.

Young.

True it is (most reverend Father) that this word Proprietas, propriety, in Hilary in his eighth Book de Trinitate, entreating there of the Divinity of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is so meant and taken; but the same Hilary almost in the same place speaketh of our communion and unity with Christ, &c. Tertullian also writing of the Resurrection of the flesh, affirmeth that the flesh of our Saviour is that whereof our soul is allied to God, that is, it which causeth that our souls are joyed to him, but our flesh is made clean, that the soul may be purged; our flesh is anointed, that the soul may be made holy; the flesh is sealed, that the soul may be comforted; the flesh is shadowed with the imposition of the hands, that our soul may be lightened with the glory of the Spirit; Our flesh is clothed with a body and blood, that the soul may be fed and nourished of God.

Rochester.

The flesh indeed is fed with the Body and the Blood of the Lord, when our bodies by mortification are made like to his body. And our body is nourished, when the virtue and power of the Body of Christ doth feed us. The same Tertullian is not afraid to call it flesh and blood, but he meaneth a figure of the same.

Young.

Then by your leave it should follow by good consequence, that where any mortification is, there must needs be a Sacramental communion, which cannot be; Ergo, &c.

Here ended the third and last Disputation holden at Cambridge, 1549.

Answers and Disputations in these Disputations at Cambridge.

This Disputation continued three days. In the first did answer Dr. Madew; against whom disputed Dr. Glin, Mr. Langdale, Mr. Segewick, Mr. Young.

In the second Disputation did answer Dr. Glin: Against whom disputed Mr. Grindal, Mr. Perne, Mr. Geisf, Mr. Pilkington.

In the third Disputation answered Mr. Perne: Against whom disputed one Mr. Parker, (not Dr. Matthew Parker) Mr. Pollard, Mr. Vavijor, Mr. Young.

At length the Disputations ended, the Bishop of Rochester, Dr. Nicolas Ridley, after the manner of Schools, made this determination upon the foresaid Conclusions, as here followeth.

The Determination of Dr. Nicolas Ridley, Bishop of Rochester, upon the Conclusions above prefixed.

The determination of Dr. Nicolas Ridley upon the disputations.

THERE hath been an ancient custom amongst you, that after Disputations had in your common Schools there should be some determination made of the matters so disputed and debated, especially touching Christian Religion. Because therefore it hath seemed good unto these worshipful Affiliants joyed with me in Commission from the Kings Majesty, that I should perform the same at this time; I will by your favourable patience declare, both what I do think and believe my self, and what also other ought to think of the same. Which thing I would that afterward ye did with diligence weigh and ponder, every man at home severally by himself.

The principal grounds or rather head-springs of this matter are specially five.

The first is the authority, majesty, and verity of Holy Scripture.

The second is the most certain testimonies of the ancient Catholic Fathers, who after my judgment do sufficiently declare this matter.

The third is the definition of a Sacrament.

The fourth is the abominable Heresie of Eutiches, that may ensue of Transubstantiation.

The fifth is the most sure belief of the Article of our Faith: He ascended into Heaven.

The first Ground.

This Transubstantiation is clean against the words of the Scripture, and consent of the ancient Catholic Fathers. The Scripture saith, I will not drink hereafter of this fruit of the Vine, &c. Now the fruit of this Vine is Wine. And it is manifest that Christ spake these words after the Supper was finished, as it appeareth both in Matthew, Mark, and also in Luke, if they be well understood. There be not many places of Scripture that do confirm this thing, neither is it greatly material: For it is enough if there be any one plain testimony for the same. Neither ought it to be measured by the number of Scriptures, but by the authority, and by the verity of the same. And the Majesty of this verity is as ample in one short sentence of the Scripture as in a thousand.

Moreover, Christ took bread, he gave bread. In the Acts Luke calleth it bread. So Paul calleth it bread after the sanctification. Both of them speak of breaking, which belongeth to the substance of bread, and in no wise to Christ's Body, for the Scripture saith, Ye shall not break a bone of him. Christ saith, Do ye this in my remembrance. St. Paul also saith, Do ye this in my remembrance. And 1 Cor. 11 again, As often as ye shall drink of this cup, do it in remembrance of me. And our Saviour Christ in the sixth of John, speaking against the Carnepites, saith, Labour for the meat that perisheth not. And when they asked, What shall we do that we may work the works of God? He answered them thus, This is the work of God, that ye believe in him whom he hath sent. You see how he exhorteth them to faith, For faith is that work of God. Again, This is the bread which came down from Heaven. But Christ's Body came not down from Heaven. Moreover, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. My flesh (saith he) is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. When they heard this, they were offended. And whil实现 they were offended, he said unto them, What if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before? Whereby he went about to draw them from the gross and carnal eating. This Body, saith he, shall ascend up into heaven, meaning altogether, as St. Augustine saith, It is the spirit that quickneth the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you, are spirit and life, and must be spiritually understood. These be the reasons which perwade me to incline to this sentence and judgment.

The second Ground.

Now my second ground against this Transubstantiation are the ancient Fathers a thousand years past. And so far off is it that they do confirm this opinion of Transubstantiation, that plain they seem unto me, both to think and to speak the contrary.

Dionysius in many places calleth it bread. The places are so manifest and plain, that it needeth not to recite them.

Ignatius to the Philadelphians saith, I beseech you Brethren cleave fast unto one Faith, and to one kind of Preaching, using together one manner of shanksgiving; for the flesh of the Lord Jesus is one; and his blood is one which was shed for us: There is also one bread broken for us, and one Cup of the whole Church.

Ireneus

4 KING. Irenæus writeth thus: Even as the Bread that cometh of the Earth receiving Gods vocation is now no more common bread, but Sacramental Bread, consisting of two natures, Earthly and Heavenly, even so our bodies receiving the Eucharist, are now no more corruptible, having hope of the Resurrection.

Tertullianus Tertullian is very plain, for he calleth it a figure of his body, &c.

Cyprianus Cyprian writeth to Cæsarius the Monk, albeit he be not received of divers, yet will I read the place to fasten it more deeply in your minds; for it seemeth to shew plainly the substance of bread to remain. The words are these.

Before the Bread is sanctified, we name it Bread: but by the grace of God sanctifying the same, through the ministry of the Priest, it is delivered from the name of bread, and is counted worthy to bear the name of the Lords body, although the very substance of Bread notwithstanding do still remain therein, and now is taken not to be two bodies, but one body of the Son, Cyprianus Cyprian faith, Bread is made of many Grains. And is that Natural Bread, and made of Wheat? Yea it is Theodore so indeed.

The Book of Theodoret in Greek was lately printed at Rome, which if it had not been his, it should not have been set forth there, especially seeing it is directly against Transubstantiation; For he faith plainly, that bread still remaineth after the sanctification.

Gelasius Gelasius also is very plain in this manner, The Sacrament (faith he) which we receive of the body and blood of Christ, is a Divine matter: By reason whereof we are made partakers by the same of the Divine Nature, and yet it ceaseth not still to be the substance of Bread and Wine. And certes, the representation and similitude of the body and blood of Christ be celebrated in the action of the mysteries, Isidore &c. After this he recited certain places out of Augustinus and Cyril which were not noted.

Isidore Isidore also confesseth that is Bread.

Also the judgment of Bertram in this matter is very plain and manifest. And thus much for the second ground.

The third Ground.

The third ground. The third ground is the nature of the Sacrament, which consisteth of three things, that is, Unity, Nutrition, and Conversion.

As touching Unity, Cyprian thus writeth: Even as of many grains is made one Bread, so are we one mystical Body of Christ. Wherefore Bread must still needs remain, or else we destroy the nature of a Sacrament.

2. Nutrition. Also they that take away Nutrition, which cometh by Bread, do take away likewise the nature of a Sacrament. For as the body of Christ nourisheth the soul, even so doth Bread likewise nourish the body of man.

Therefore they that take away the grains or the union of the Grains in the Bread, and deny the Nutrition or Substance thereof, in my judgment are Sacramentaries: For they take away the similitude between the Bread and the body of Christ. For they which affirm Transubstantiation are indeed right Sacramentaries and Catholics.

3. Conversion. As touching Conversion (that like as the Bread which we receive is turned into our substance, so are we turned into Christs Body) Rabanus and Chrysostom are witnesses sufficient.

The fourth Ground.

4. Creation. They which say that Christ is carnally present in the Eucharist, do take from him the verity of mans nature. Enriches granted the Divine nature in Christ, but his humane nature he denied. So they that defend Transubstantiation ascribe that to the humane nature which only belongeth to the Divine nature.

The fifth Ground.

The fifth ground is the certain perswasion of this Article of Faith, He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand, &c.

Augustine faith, The Lord is above, even to the end of the World: but yet the verity of the Lord is here also, For his Body wherein he rose again must needs be in one place, but his Verity is spread abroad every where.

Also in another place he faith, Let the godly also receive that Sacrament, but let them not be careful (speaking there of the presence of his Body.) For as touching his Majesty, his Providence, his invisible and unspeakable Grace, these words are fulfilled which he spake, I am with you unto the end of the World. But according to the flesh which he took upon him, according to that which was born of the Virgin, was apprehended of the Jews, was fastened to a Tree, taken down again from the Cross, laid in a Linen Cloth, was buried and rose again, and appeared after his Resurrection, so you shall not have me always with you, and why? because that as concerning his flesh he was conversant with his Disciples forty days, and they accompanying him, seeing him, but not following him, he went up into Heaven, and is not here, for he sitteth at the right hand of his Father, and yet he is here, because he is not departed hence, as concerning the presence of his Divine Majesty.

Mark and consider well what St. Augustine faith, He is ascended into Heaven, and is not here, faith he. Believe not them therefore which say that he is here still in the Earth.

Moreover, Doubt not (faith the same Augustine) but that Jesus Christ, as concerning the nature of his Manhood, is there from whence he shall come. And remember well and believe the profession of a Christian Man, that he arose from death, ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of his Father, and from that place and none other (not from the Altars) shall be come to judge the quick and the dead, and he shall come as the Angel said, as he was seen to go into Heaven: that is to say, in the same form and substance, unto the which he gave immortality, but changed not Nature. After this form (meaning his Human Nature) we may think that it is every where.

And in the same Epistle he faith, Take away from the bodies limitation of places, and they shall be no where, and because they are no where, they shall not be at all.

Vigilius faith, If the Word and the Flesh be both of one Nature, seeing that the Word is every where, why then is not the Flesh also every where? For when it was in Earth, then verily it was not in Heaven; and now when it is in Heaven, it is not surely in Earth. And it is so certain, that it is not in Earth, that as concerning the same we look for him from Heaven, whom, as concerning the Word, we believe to be with us in Earth.

Also the same Vigilius faith, Which things seeing they be so, the sense of the Scripture must be searched of us, and many testimonies must be gathered, to shew plainly what a wickedness and sacrilege it is to refer those things to the property of the Divine Nature, which do only belong to the Nature of the Flesh: and contrariwise, to apply those things to the Nature of the Flesh, which do properly belong to the Divine Nature. Which thing the transubstantiators do, whilst they affirm Christs Body not to be contained in any one place, and ascribe that to his Humanity, which properly belongeth to his Divinity, as they do which will have Christs Body to be in no one certain place limited.

Now in the later Conclusion concerning the Sacrifice, because it dependeth upon the first, I will in few words declare what I think. For if we did once agree in that, the whole controversie in the other would soon be at an end. Two things there be which do perfwade me that this Conclusion is true; that is, certain places of the Scripture, and also certain testimonies of the Fathers. St. Paul faith, Hebrews: the Ninth, Christ being become an high Priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect Tabernacle not made with hands, that is, not of Body, this building, neither by the Blood of Goats and Calves, but by his own Blood, entered once into the Holy place, and and obtained for us eternal Redemption, &c. And now in the end of the World he hath appeared once to put away sin by the Sacrifice of himself.

And again, Christ was once offered to take away the sins of many.

Heb. 10. Moreover he saith, With one Offering hath he made perfect for ever those that are Sanctified.

Ch. 10. never offered but once. These Scriptures do persuade me to believe that there is no other Oblation of Christ (albeit I am not ignorant there are many Sacrifices) but that which was once made upon the Cross.

Aug. ad Rom. 23. Aug. 23. Aug. 23. Aug. 23. The testimonies of the ancient Fathers, which confirm the same, are out of Augustine ad Rom. Epist. 23. Again in his Book of 43 Questions, in the 41 Question. Also in his 20 Book against Fausus the Manichee, Chap. 21. And in the same Book against the said Fausus cap. 28, thus he writeth, Now the Christians keep a memorial of the Sacrifice past, with a holy oblation and participation of the Body and Blood of Christ.

21. And in the same Book against the said Fausus cap. 28, thus he writeth, Now the Christians keep a memorial of the Sacrifice past, with a holy oblation and participation of the Body and Blood of Christ.

Eulgentius in his Book De fide calleth the same Oblation a Commemoration. And these things are sufficient for this time for a Scholastical determination of these matters.

Disputations of Martin Bucer.

Over and beside these Disputations above-mentioned, other Disputations were also holden at Cambridge shortly after by Martin Bucer upon these conclusions following.

Conclusions to be disputed.

1. The Canonical Books of Holy Scripture alone do sufficiently teach the regenerated all things necessarily belonging unto Salvation.

2. There is no Church in Earth which erreth not in matters as well as in Faith.

3. We are so justified freely of God, that before our justification it is sin, and provoketh Gods wrath against us whatsoever good work we seem to do. Then being justified we do good works.

In these three propositions against Bucer disputed Mr. Segurick, Young, and Pern. Which Disputations because they are long here to be recited, I mind (the Lord willing) to reserve them to some other convenient place. In the mean season, because great controversy hath been and is yet amongst the learned, and much effusion of Christian Blood about the words and meaning of the Sacrament: to the intent that the Verity thereof more openly may be explained, and all doubtful scruples discussed, it shall not be out of place to adjoin to the former Discourses of Peter Martyr, and of Dr. Ridley above-mentioned, another certain learned Treatise in form of a Dialogue, as pertaining to the same Argument, compiled (as it seemed) out of the tractions of Peter Martyr, and other Authors, by a certain learned and reverend person of this Realm; who, under the persons of Custom and Verity, manifestly layeth before our Eyes, and teacheth all Men not to measure Religion by Custom, but to try Custom by Truth and the Word of God; for else Custom may soon deceive, but the Word of God abideth for ever.

A fruitful Dialogue declaring these words of Christ: This is my Body.

CUSTOM. VERITY.

Custom. I marvel much what madness is cropt in into those Mens hearts, which now adays are not alarmed so violently to tread down the lively Word of God, yea and impudently to deny God himself.

Verity. God forbid there should be any such. Indeed I remember that the Romish Bishop was wont to have the Bible for his footstool, and so to tread down Gods Word evermore when he stood at his Mass. But thanks be to God he is now detected, and his abominations be opened and blown throughout all the World. And I hear of no more that oppress Gods Word.

Custom. No more say you? Yes doubtless there are an hundred thousand more, and your part it is Verity to withstand them.

Verity. As touching my part, you know it agreeth not with my nature to stand with fallhood. But what are they? Disclose them if you will have them reprov'd.

Custom. What are you so great a stranger in these quarters? Hear you not how that Men do daily speak against the Sacrament of the Altar, denying it to be the real Body of Christ?

Verity. In good sooth I have been a great while abroad, and returned but of late into this Country. Wherefore you must pardon me if my answer be to seek in such questions. But go forth in your tale. You have been longer here, and are better acquainted than I. What say they more than this?

Custom. Than this? Why, what can they possibly say more?

Verity. Yes, there are many things worse than this: for this seemeth in some part to be tolerable.

Custom. What? me thinketh you daily with me. Seemeth it tolerable to deny the Sacrament?

Verity. They deny it not, so much as I can gather by your words.

Custom. Nay then fare you well: I perceive you will take their part.

Verity. I am not partial, but indifferent to all parties: For I never go further than the Truth.

Custom. I can scarcely believe you. But what is more true than Christ, which is Truth it self? Or who ever was so hardy before this time to charge Christ with a lie for saying these words: This is my Body? The words are evident and plain: There is in them not so much as one obscure or dark Letter, there is no cause for any Man to cavil. And yet that notwithstanding, whereas Christ himself affirmed it to be his Body, Men now adays are not ashamed to say, Christ lied, it is not his Body. The Evangelists agree all in one, the old Writers stand of our side, the Universal and Catholic Church hath been in this mind these fifteen hundred years and more. And I shall we think that Christ himself, his Evangelists, all the whole Catholic Church hath been so long deceived, and the truth now at length begotten and born in these days?

Verity. You have moved a matter of great force and weight, and whereto without many words I can make no full answer. Notwithstanding because you provoke me thereto, if you will give me license, I will take part with them of whom you have made false report, for none of them ever reprov'd Christ of any lie. But contrariwise, they say, That many Men of late days, not understanding Christs Words, have builded and set up many fond lies upon his Name. Wherefore, first I will declare the meaning of these words, This is my Body, and next in what sense the Church and the old Fathers have evermore taken them. First therefore you shall understand, That Scripture is not so to be taken always as the Letter foundeth, but as the intent and purpose of the Holy Ghost was, by whom the Scripture was uttered. For if you follow the bare words, you will soon shake down and overthrow the greatest part of the Christian Faith. What is plainer than these words, Pater major me est, My Father is greater than I am? Of those plain words sprang up the Heresie of the Arians, which denied Christ to be equal with his Father. What is more evident than this saying, I and my Father are both one? Thereof arose the Heresie of them that denied three distinct persons. They all had one soul and one heart, was spoken by the Apostle: yet had each of them a Soul and Heart peculiar to himself. They are now not two, but one flesh, is spoken by the Man and his Wife; yet hath both the Man and the Wife his several Body. He is our very flesh, said Ruben by Joseph his Brother, which notwithstanding was not their real Flesh. I am bread, said Christ, yet was he Flesh and no Bread. Christ was the same, said Paul, and was indeed no material Stone. Melchisedech had neither father nor mother, and yet indeed he had both. Behold the Lamb of God, said John Baptist by Christ, notwithstanding Christ was a Man, and not a Lamb. Circumcision was called the Covenant, whereas it was but a token of the Covenant. The Lamb named the Passover, and yet was it eaten in remembrance

KING } brance only of the Passover. Jacob raised up an Altar, and called it, being made but of lime stone, The mighty God of Israel. Moses, when he had conquered the Amalekites, set up an Altar, and called it by the names of God, Jebova and Tetragramatum. We are all one loaf of bread, saith Paul, yet were they not thereby turned into a loaf of bread. Christ hanging upon the Crofs appointed S. John to his Mother, saying, Lo there is thy Son, and yet was he not her Son. So many as be baptized into Christ, saith Paul, have put on Christ, and so many as are baptized in- to Christ, are washed with the blood of Christ: Notwith- standing no man took the Font water to be the natural blood of Christ. The cup is the New Testament, saith Paul, and yet is not the Cup indeed the very New Testament. You see therefore that it is not strange, nor a thing unwont in the Scriptures, to call one thing by another name. So that you can no more of necessity enforce the changing of the bread into Christ body in the Sacrament, because the words be plain. This is my body, the Wives flesh to be the natural and real body and flesh of the husband, because it is written, They are not two but one flesh or the Altar of stone to be very God, because Moses with evident and plain words pronounced it to be the mighty God of Israel. Notwithstanding, if you will needs cleave to the letter, you make for me, and hinder your own cause. For thus I will reason, and use your own weapon against you. The Scripture calleth it bread. The Evangelists agree in the same. Paul nameth it so five times in one place; the holy Ghost may not be set to school to learn to speak. Wherefore I conclude by my own argument, that we ought not only to say, but also to believe that in the Sacrament there remaineth bread.

Custom. Me thinketh your answer is reasonable, yet can I not be satisfied. Declare you therefore more at large, what moveth you to think this of the Sacrament. For I think you would not withstand a doctrine so long holden and taught, unless you were enforced by some strong and likely reasons.

Verity. First, In examining the words of Christ, I get me to the meaning and purpose for which they were spoken. And in this behalf I see that Christ meant to have his death and passion kept in remembrance. For men of themselves be and evermore were forgetful of the benefits of God. And therefore it was behoofull that they should be admonished and stirred up with some visible and outward tokens, as with the Passover Lamb, the Brazen Serpent, and other like. For the Brazen Serpent was a token, that when the Jews were stung and wounded with Serpents, God restored them and made them whole. The Passover Lamb was a memory of the great benefit of God, which, when he destroyed the Egyptians, saved the Jews, whose doors were sprinkled with the blood of a Lamb. So likewise Christ left us a memorial and remembrance of his Death and Passion in outward tokens, that when the child should demand of his father, what the breaking of the bread and drinking of the Cup meaneth, he might answer him, that like as the bread is broken, so Christ was broken and rent upon the Crofs, to redeem the soul of man. And likewise as wine fethereth and comforteth the body, so doth the blood of Christ cherish and relieve the soul. And this do I gather by the words of Christ, and by the institution and order of the Sacrament. For Christ charged the Apostles to do this in the remembrance of him. Whereupon thus I conclude.

Ref. Nothing is done in remembrance of it self.

ti- But the Sacrament is used in the remembrance of Christ.

mo- Therefore the Sacrament is not Christ.

Fe- Christ never devoured himself.

ri- Christ did eat the Sacrament with his Apostles.

son. Ergo, the Sacrament is not Christ himself.

Besides this, I see that Christ ordained not his body, but a Sacrament of his body. A Sacrament (as S. Augu- stin declareth) is an outward sign of an invisible Grace. His words are Sacramentum est invisibilis gratie visibilis signum. Out of which words I gather two arguments. The first is this; the token of the body of Christ is not the thing tokened, wherefore they are not one. The second is this.

Fe- One thing cannot be both visible and invisible.

ri- But the Sacrament is visible, and the body of Christ invisible.

son. Therefore they are not one.

Which thing S. Augustin openeth very well by these words, Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud res sacramenti. Sacramentum est quod in corpus vadit: res autem Sacramenti est corpus Domini nostri Jesu Christi. Moreover, I remember that Christ ministered this Sacrament not to great and deep Philosophers, but to a sort of ignorant and unlearned Filibers, which notwithstanding understood Christ's meaning right well, and delivered it even as they took it at Christ's hand, to the vulgar and lay people, and fully declared unto them the meaning thereof. But the lay nor scarcely the Apostles themselves could understand what is meant by Transubstantiation, Impanation, Dimensions, qualitates, quantitates, accident sine subjecto, terminus a quo, & terminus ad quem, per modum quanti. This is no learning for the unlearned and rude people, wherefore it is likely that Christ meant some other thing than hath been taught of late days. Furthermore, Christ's body is food, not for the body but for the soul, and therefore it must be received with the instrument of the soul, which is Faith. For as ye receive sustenance for your bodily mouth, so the food of your soul must be received by Faith, which is the mouth of the soul. And for that S. Augustin sharply rebuketh them that think to eat Christ with their mouth, saying, Quid paros dentem & ventrem? crede & manducasti. (i.) Why makest thou ready thy tooth and thy belly? believe and thou hast eaten Christ. Likewise speaking of eating the self same body, he saith to the Capernaimites which took him grossly as men do now adays, The words that I speak are spirit and life. It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh John 6: profiteth nothing. And S. Augustin upon these words of Christ saith, Non hoc corpus quod videtis munducatur: Quod estis, neque bibimus sanguinem, quem effusuri sunt qui me crucifigent. Sacramentum aliquod vobis trade. Id spiritus ritualiter acceptum vivificat: caro autem non prodest quicquam. Auguſt. Quinquagesima. 2. Plal. 98.

Custom. What mean you by this spirit, and by spiritual eating? I pray you utter your mind more plainly. For I know well that Christ hath a body, and therefore must be eaten (as I think) with the mouth of the body. For to the spirit and the soul as it hath no body and flesh, so it hath no mouth.

Verity. You must understand, that a man is shaped of two parts, of the body and of the soul. And each of them hath his life and his death, his mouth, his teeth, his food, and abstinence. For like as the body is nourished and so- stered with bodily meats, or else cannot endure; so must the soul have his cherishing, otherwise it will decay and pine away. And therefore we do and may justly say that the Turks, Jews, and heathen be dead, because they lack the lively food of the soul. But how then, or by what mean will you find the soul? Doubtless not by the instrument of the body but of the soul. For that which is received into the body, hath no passage from thence in- to the soul. For Christ saith, That whatsoever entereth into the belly, is conveyed into the draught. And whereas you say that the spirit hath no mouth, like as it hath no body or bones, you are deceived. For the spirit hath a mouth in his kind, or else how could a man eat and drink justice? Matth. 5: For undoubtedly his bodily mouth is no fit instrument for what it is to hunger and eat righteousness. Yet Christ saith, that he is blessed that hungereth and thirsteth for justice. If he hunger and thirst for justice, be- like he both eateth and drinketh it, for otherwise he neither abateth his hunger, nor quengeth his thirst. Now if a man may eat and drink righteousness with his spirit, no doubt his spirit hath a mouth. Whereof I will reason thus.

Da- Of whatsoever sort the mouth is, such is his food.

ti- But the mouth of the spirit is spiritual, not bodily.

fi. Therefore it receiveth Christ's body spiritually not bodily.

Christ is no food for the body, but for the soul.

That is to say: You shall not eat the body which you see, and drink that blood which they shall shed that shall cruci- fice me: I have com- mended to you a Sacra- ment, un- derstand it spiritually and it shall give you life: the flesh profit- teeth nothing.

And in like manner Christ, speaking of the eating of his body, nameth himself the Bread, not for the body, but of Life, for the Soul, and faith. He that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth in me shall never thirst. Wherefore whosoever will be relieved by the body of Christ, must receive him as he will be received, with the instrument of Faith appointed thereunto, not with his teeth or mouth. And whereas I say that Christ's Body must be received and taken with Faith, I mean not that you shall pluck down Christ from Heaven, and put him in your Faith, as in a visible place; but that you must with your Faith rise and spring up to him, and leaving this world dwell above in heaven, putting all your trust, comfort, and consolation in him, which suffered grievous bondage to set you at liberty and to make you free, creeping into his wounds, which were so cruelly pierced and dented for your sake. So shall you feed on the Body of Christ, so shall you suck the Blood that was poured out and shed for you. This is the spiritual, the very true, the only eating of Christ's Body. And therefore S. Gregory calleth it, Cibus mentis non ventris, (i. e.) The food of the mind, and not of the belly. And S. Cyprian saith likewise, Non acinus dentem, nec ventrem paramus. i. e. We sharpen not our tooth, nor prepare our belly.

Now to return to our former purpose, seeing it is plain that Christ's body is meat for our spirit, and hath nothing to do with our body, I will gather thereof this reason. The Sacrament is bodily food and increaseth the body; Ergo, the Sacrament is not the very body of Christ. That it nourisheth the body it is evident; For Christ calleth it the fruit of the Vine, whose duty is to nourish. And for a proof, if you consecrate a whole loaf, it will feed you so well as your table bread. And if a little Moule get an Host, he will crave no more meat to his Dinner. But you will say these are worldly reasons. What then if the old Fathers record the same? Irenaeus saith, Quando mixtus calix, & fractus panis percipit curbum Dei, fit Eucharistia corporis & sanguinis Domini, ex quibus angur & conficit carnis nostrae substantia. Beda witnesseth the same by these words, Quia panis carnem confirmat, & vinum sanguinem operatur in carne, hic ad corpus Christi mystice, illud ad sanguinem refertur. Wherefore as I said before, seeing that Christ's body is spiritual meat, and the bread of the Sacrament bodily, I may conclude that the Sacrament is not Christ's body. Beside this, where it was forbidden in the old Law that any man should eat or drink Blood, the Apostles notwithstanding took the Cup of Christ's hands, and drank of it, and never staggered, or flunk at the matter; whereby it may be gathered, that they took it for a military, for a token, and a remembrance, far otherwise than it hath of late been taken.

Again, when the Sacrament was dealt, none of them all crouched down, and took it for his God, forgetting him that sat there present before their eyes; but took it, and eat it, knowing that it was Sacrament and remembrance of Christ's Body. Yea, the old Councils commanded that no man should kneel down at the time of the communion, fearing that it should be an occasion of Idolatry. And long after the Apostles time, as Tertullian writeth, Women were sufficed to take it home with them, and lap it up in their Chels. And the Priests many times sent it to sick persons by a Child, which no doubt would have given more reverence thereto, if they had taken it for their God. But a great while after, about 300 years ago, Honorius the Third, Bishop of Rome took him and hanged him up, and caused men to kneel and crouch down, and all to begod him.

Furthermore, if the bread be turned and altered into the body of Christ, doubtless it is the greatest miracle that ever God wrought. But the Apostles saw no miracle in it. Nesciamus, an old Writer, and Augustin in treating of all the miracles that are in the Scripture, number the Sacrament for none. As for the Apostles, it appeareth well that they had it for no marvel, for they never mused at it, neither demanded how it might be; whereas in other things they evermore were full of questions. As touching S. Augustin, he not only over skipped it as no wonder, but by plain and expels words testifieth that there is no marvel in it. For speaking of the Lords Supper, and of the other Sacraments, he saith these words, Hic Sacramenta bonivem ut religioſa habere possunt, stuporem autem ut mira non possunt. Moreover a little before the institution of the Sacrament, Christ spake of his ascension, saying, I leave the world: I tarry but a little while with you. Let not your hearts be troubled, because I go from you. I tell you truly, it is for your profit that I go from you, for if I go not, the Spirit of comfort cannot come to you. Jo. 14. with many other like warnings of his departure. S. Stephen saw him sitting at the right hand of his Father, and thought it a special revelation of God; but he never said that he saw him at the Communion, or that he made him every day himself. And in the Acts of the Apostles S. Peter saith, That Christ must needs keep the heaven till all be ended. Esaiah, Solomon, and S. Stephen say, That God dwelleth not in Temples made with mans hands. S. Paul willeth that he were dissolved and dead, and were with Christ; not in the Altar doubtless where he might be daily, but in heaven. And to be brief, it is in our Creed, and we do constantly believe, that Christ is ascended into heaven, and sitteth at his Fathers right hand; and no promise have we that he will come jumping down at every Priests calling. Hereof I gather this reason.

Christ's body cannot both be gone, and be here. But he is gone, and hath left the world. Therefore it is folly to seek him in the world.

Custom. Fy, you be far deceived, I can in no wise brook these words. You shut up Christ too faintly, and imprison him in one corner of heaven, not suffering him to go as large. No doubtless, he hath deserved more gentleness at your hands, than to be tied up to short.

Verity. I do neither lock up, neither imprison Christ in heaven, but according to the Scriptures declare that he hath chosen a Blessed place, and most worthy to receive his Majesty; in which place whoſo is inclosed, thinketh not himself (as I suppose) to be a Prisoner: But if you take it for so heinous a thing that Christ should sit in heaven in the glory of his Father, what think you of them that imprison him in a little Box, yea and keep him in captivity so long, until he be moulty and over-grown with vermin, and when he is past mens meat, be not contented to hang him till he stink, but will have him to a new execution, and burn him too? This is wonderful and extreme cruel imprisoning. But to return to the matter, we are certainly perſwaded by the word of God, that Christ the very Son of God vouchsafed to take upon him the body and shape of man, and that he walked and was converseant amongst men in that same one, and not in many bodies, and that he suffered death, rose again, and ascended to heaven in the self same body, and that he sitteth at his Fathers right hand in his manhood, in the nature and substance of the said one body. This is our belief, this is the very word of God. Wherefore they are false deceivers, which leaving heaven will grope for Christ's body upon the earth.

Custom. Nay Sir, but I see now you are far out of the way. For Christ hath not to grofs and fleshly a body as you think, but a spiritual and ghostly body, and therefore without repentance it may be in many places at once.

Verity. You say right well, and do grant that Christ's body is spiritual. But I pray you answer me by the way, can any other body than that which is spiritual be at one time in sundry places?

Custom. No truly.

Verity. Have we that self same Sacrament that Christ gave to his disciples, at his Maundy, or no?

Custom. Doubtless we have the same.

Verity. When was Christ's body spiritual? was it so even from his birth?

Custom. No: For doubtless before he arose from death his body was earthly, as other mens bodies are.

Verity. Well, but when gave Christ the Sacrament to his Disciples? Before he rose from death or after?

Custom. You know: you tell he gave it before his Resurrection, the night before he suffered his Passion.

Verity.

KING Verity. Why then me thinketh he gave the Sacrament at that time when his body was not spiritual.

Custom. Even so.

Verity. And was every portion of the Sacrament dealt to the Apostles, and received they into their mouths the very real and substantial body of Christ?

Custom. Yea doubtless.

Verity. Mark well what ye have said, for you have granted me great repugnance. First, you say, That no body being not spiritual can be in sundry places at once. Then say you, That at the Maundy Christs body was not spiritual; and yet hold you, that he was there present visibly before the Apostles eyes, and in each of their hands and mouths all at one time; which grants of yours are not agreeable. But I will gather a better and a more formal reason of your words in this fort.

Fe. No body being real, natural, and organical, and not spiritual, can be in many places at once.

ri. Christs body in the Sacrament was in the Apostles hands and mouths at one time, which were many places.

son. Ergo, Christs body in the Sacrament was not a real, natural, and organical body, but spiritual.

Custom. Indeed you have driven me into the straits before I was ware of you; and I know not how I may escape your hands honestly. But the best refuge that I have is this, that I will not believe you.

Verity. I desire you not to give credence to me, believe the word of God, ye believe your own belief; for they both witness against you, that Christs body is taken up into Heaven, and there shall remain until he come to judge.

Custom. Tush, what speaks you of the word of God? there be many dark sayings therein which every man cannot attain to.

Verity. I grant you there be certain obscure places in the Scripture, yet not so obscure but that a man with the grace of God may perceive; for it was written not for Angels, but for men. But, as I understand, Custom meddeth but little with the Scripture. How say you by S. Augustine, St Hierom, S. Ambrose, what if they stand on our side?

Custom. No no, I know them well enough

Verity. So well as you know them, for all old acquaintance, if they be called to witness, they will give evidence against you. For S. Austin commonly in every of his Books, but chiefly in an Epistle to his friend Dardanus, declareth that Christs body is placed in one room. I marvel you be not nearer of his Counsel. His words are these, *Noli dubitare ibi nunc esse hominem Christum Jesum, unde venturus est. Memoriterque recole & fideliter crede Christianam confessionem; quoniam resurrexit, ascendit in caelum, sedet a dextris Dei patris, nec aliunde quam inde venturus est, ad vivos mortuosque judicandos. Et venturus est in eadem corporis substantia, cui immortalitatem dedit, naturam non abstulit. Secundum hanc formam non est putandus ubique diffusus. Cavendum enim est ne ira divinitatem asseramus hominis ut humanitatem mittamus Dei. i. Do not doubt the man Jesus Christ to be there, from whence he shall come. And remember well, and faithfully believe the Christian confession, that he is risen, ascended into Heaven, sitteth at the right hand of God the Father, and from thence he shall come and from no other place, to judge the quick and the dead. And shall come in the same substance of body, to the which he gave immortality, and took not the nature from it. After this form he is to be thought not to be dispersed in all places; for we must beware so to defend his Divinity that we destroy his humanity. And in another place of the same Epistle, Una persona Deus & homo; & utrumque est unus Christus. Vbiq; per id quod Deus, in calo autem per id quod homo. Likewise upon the fourteenth Psalm, Domec secundum finitur sursum est Dominus; sed etiam hic nobiscum est veritas Domini. Corpus enim in quo resurrexit in uno loco esse oportet; veritas autem ejus ubique diffusa est. While the world shall last, the Lord is above, and also the verity of the Lord is with us. For the body wherein he rose again must be in one place; but the* verity of him is every where dispersed. In like manner witness Damasus an old Bishop of Rome in his Credo, Dei vero mortis imperit, cum ea carne in qua natus & passus est & resurrexit, ascendit in caelum, manente eadem natura carnis in qua natus & passus est. S. Ambrose writing upon the tenth Chapter of S. Eusebii recordeth the same, Ergo non supra terram, nec in terra, nec secundum terram querere debemus Dominum, si volumus invenire. Non enim supra terram quiescit qui stantem ad Dei dextram vidit. Maria querebat in terra tangere Christum & non potuit; Stephanus tetigit quia quiescebat in celo. (i.) Wherefore neither above the earth, nor upon the earth, nor according to the earth we ought to seek the Lord, if we will find him; For he did not seek him above the earth, which did see him sitting at the right hand of God. And Mary sought upon the earth to touch Christ and could not, Stephen touched him because he sought him in Heaven. St Hierom in an Epistle to Marcella proveth that the body of Christ must needs be contained in some place, for he saith, Veri Dei est ubique esse; veri hominis alibi esse. The property of God is to be every where, the property of man is to be in one place. The same Hierom in another place calleth it a foolish thing to seek for him in a narrow place, or in a corner, which is the light of all the world; Stultum est cum parvo in loco vel abscondito querere, qui totius mundi est lumen. i. Foolishness it is, in a small place or in a hid corner to seek him which is the light of the whole world. Origen saith likewise, Audienti non sunt qui Christum demonstrant in edibus. i. They are not to be heard, which shew Christ in houses. The same also recordeth Beda, writing upon these words of Christ; Now a little while shall you see me: He speaketh in Christs person. Therefore (saith he) shall you see me but a little while after my resurrection, because I will not still abide in the earth bodily, but in the manhood which I have taken will ascend up to heaven. What needeth more words? All the old Fathers witness the same. You may by these soon judge the rest. Now to return to the matter, seeing that the word of God in many and sundry places, the Credo, and the abridgement of the Faith, seeing all the old Fathers do constantly agree in one, that the body of Christ is ascended into heaven, and there remaineth at the right hand of the Father, and cannot be in more than in one place, I do conclude that the Sacrament is not the body of Christ; first, because it is not in Heaven, neither sitteth at the Fathers right hand; moreover, because it is in an hundred thousand Boxes, whereas Christs body filleth but one place. Furthermore, if the bread were turned into the body of Christ, then would it necessarily follow that sinners and unpenitent persons receive the body of Christ.

Custom. Marry and so they do. For Paul saith plainly, that they receive the body of Christ to their own confusion.

Verity. No not so. These are not Pauls words, but he saith, Who so eateth of this Bread, and drinketh of this Cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own condemnation; not judging the body of the Lord. Here he calleth it in plain words bread. And although the Sacrament be very bread, yet doth the injury redound to the body of Christ. As if a man break the Kings Mace, or tread the Broad Seal under his foot, although he have broken and defaced nothing but Silver and Wax; yet is the injury the Kings; and the doer shall be taken as a Traitor. S. Ambrose declareth the meaning of S. Paul by these words, Reus est corporis Domini, qui penas dabit mortis Christi, quoniam irritam fecit mortem Domini. The cause of the ordinance thereof was the remembrance of the death of Christ, which who so forgetteth, receiveth the Sacrament to their condemnation. That same witnesseth S. Augustine for the Sacrament, saith he, is an outward token of love and charity. For like as many grains of Corn are become one peace of bread, even so they that receive it ought to be one. Then saith he, Mysterium pacis ac unitatis nobis Christus in mensa sua consecravit. Qui accipit mysterium unitatis & non servat unitatem, non mysterium accipit pro se, sed testimonium contra se. He that receiveth the Gospel wherein is declared the Passion and Death of Christ, and is yet contrary to the Gospel, shall doubtless be the more guilty of the death of Christ, because he heareth and receiveth the word of God, and regardeth it not. St. Paul, of receiving unworthily expounded the manner is, that when the Gospel is read, the King shall stand up with a naked Sword in his hand, declaring thereby that he beareth his Sword in defence of the Gospel. But if he himself oppresseth the Gospel, he beareth the Sword against himself; for the Gospel shall turn to his judgment and condemnation. So will Christ so much more extremely punish a man, which knowing himself to be wicked and without repentance, and therefore none of the flock of Christ, yet notwithstanding will impudently creep into the company of Christian men, and receive the Sacraments with them, as though he were one of the number. And this meant St. Paul by the unworthy receiving of a Sacrament of Christs body. Wherefore a man may unworthily take the Sacrament, and be guilty of the death of Christ, although he receive not Christs body into his mouth, and chew it with his teeth. But what if I prove that every massing Priest is guilty of the body and blood of Christ?

Custom. I dare say you cannot prove it.

Verity. But if I do prove it, will you believe me?

Custom. I may well enough, for it is impossible to do it. Confession. For Priests commonly are confessed before they go to Mass, and how can they then take the Sacrament unworthily?

Verity. Indeed confession, if it be discreetly used, is a laudable custom, and to the unlearned man and feeble conscience so good as a Sermon; But notwithstanding because it was never commanded of Christ, nor received of the Apostles, nor much spoken of by the old Doctors, it cannot make much for the due receiving of the Sacrament. But how like ye these words of S. Ambrose? Ambrosius. Is indigne sumis, qui aliter sumit quam Christus instituit. i. He taketh it unworthily, that taketh it otherwise than Christ ordained it.

Custom. This liketh me very well. But what gather you of it?

Verity. This will I gather. The massing Priest taketh the Sacrament otherwise than Christ either commanded or taught. Ergo, he taketh it unworthily, and so consequently to his condemnation.

Custom. That is not so, for he doth altogether as Christ commanded him.

Verity. That shall appear. For Christ commanded it to be done in his remembrance; the Priest doth it in remembrance of dead men. Christ took bread, and left it bread; the Priest taketh bread and conjureth it away. Christ took bread and gave thanks; the Priest taketh bread and breatheth upon it. Christ took bread and brake it; the Priest taketh bread and hangeth it up. Christ took bread and dealt it to his Apostles; the Priest, because he is an Apostle himself, taketh bread and eateth it every whit alone. Christ in a Sacrament gave his own body to be eaten in Faith; the Priest for lack of Faith receiveth accidents, and dimensions. Christ gave a Sacrament to strengthen mens Faith; the Priest giveth a sacrifice to redeem mens souls. Christ gave it to be eaten; the Priest giveth it to be worshipped. And to conclude, Christ gave bread; the Priest faith he giveth a God. Here is difference enough between Christ and the Priest. Yet moreover Christ at his Supper spake his words out and in a plain tongue; the Priest speaketh nothing but Latin or Greek, which tongues he oft times perceiveth not, and much he whispereth lest any poor man should perhaps perceive him. So it cometh to pass, that the Priest knoweth no more what he himself faith, than what he doth. Thus you may see that the Massing Priest receiveth the Sacrament of Christs body far otherwise than ever Christ minded, and so therefore unworthily and to his condemnation. Now if you think your self satisfied, I will return to my former question, and prove more at large, that Christs body cannot be eaten of the wicked, which thing must necessarily ensue if the bread were turned into the body of Christ. Christ in the sixth of S. John, speaking of the eating of his body, faith, He that eateth of this bread shall live for ever. Whereof I gather thus; But sinful men take the Sacrament of their condemnation, and live not for ever; Ergo, in the Sacrament they receive not the body of Christ. Again, Christ faith, He that eateth me shall live for my sake. Hereof I conclude thus, but impenitent persons cannot live for Christs sake. Moreover Christs body shall be received, not with the mouth, as Gregory recordeth, saying, That it is eaten with the teeth of the soul, not of the body, as I have above more largely declared. But wicked and impenitent persons lack Faith; wherefore they cannot eat the body of Christ. Again, Christs body cannot be divided from his spirit; but wicked men have not the spirit of God; Ergo, they have not Christs body. Hereunto agree all the old Writers, affirming constantly that the unfaithful be no meet vessels to receive the body of Christ. S. Augustine faith, Qui non manet in Christo, & in quo non manet Christus, proculdubio non manducat carnem Christi, nec bibit ejus sanguinem, quamvis tantæ rei mysterium ad judicium suum manducet, ac bibat. And in the person of Christ he faith likewise, Qui non manet in me, & in quo ego non maneo, ne se dicat aut existimat manducare corpus meum, aut sanguinem meum bibere. Ambrose avoweth the same by these words, Qui discordat a Christo non manducat carnem ejus, nec bibit sanguinem, est tantæ rei sacramentum accipiat. In like manner writeth Prosper, Qui discordat a Christo, nec carnem Christi edit, nec sanguinem bibit, est tantæ rei sacramentum ad judicium suum præsumptum quodæ accipiat. And therefore S. Augustine faith, Mali sacramentum habent, rem autem sacramenti non habent. Thus by the Word of God, by reason, and by the old Fathers it is plain, that sinful men eat not the body of Christ, receive they the Sacrament never so oft. Which thing could not be, if in the Sacrament there remained nothing but the body of Christ.

The Sacrament in holy Scripture is named Frassio panis, the breaking of bread; which, to say the truth, were but a cold breaking, if there remained no bread to break, but certain phantasies of white and round. Yet whereas as they with words, crossings, blessings, breathings, leavings, and much ado, can scarcely make one God, they have such virtue in their fingers, that at one cross they be able to make twenty Gods; for if they break the Sacrament, every Portion, yea, every mite must needs be a God. After the Apostles time there arose up Hereticks, which said that Christ walking here amongst men bodily upon the Earth, had no very body, but a thing like a body, and so therewith dimmed mens sight. Against whom the old Fathers used these arguments: Christ increased in growing, fasted, hungered, eat, wept, sweated, was weary, and in conclusion died, and had all other properties of a very body; wherefore he had a body. I will use the same kind of reasoning; If feedeth, it tasteth like bread, it looketh like bread, the little silly mouse taketh it for bread, and so the short, it hath all the properties and tokens of bread, Ergo, it is bread. The old Fathers when there remained any part of the Sacrament more than was spent at the Communion, they used to burn it, and of it there came ashes. But there is nothing in the Sacrament that can turn to ashes but only bread (for I think they burned not Christs body to ashes;) Ergo, in the Sacrament there remaineth bread. Henry the Emperor, the sixth of that name, was poisoned in the Host, and Victor the Bishop of Rome in the Chalice. But poison cannot hang in Gods body and blood; wherefore there remaineth Bread and Wine. What needeth many words in a matter so evident? If you demand either Gods word, or the Doctors and the ancient Writers, or your reason, or your eyes, or nose, or tongue, or fingers, or the Cat, or the Ape, or the Moufe, all these agree in one, and answer together, There is bread. Wherefore if you reject so many and so constant witnesses, and so well agreeing in their tale, specially being such as will lie for no mans pleasure, I will appeal from you, and take you as no indifferent Judge. If all these witnesses suffice you not, I will call the Sacrament itself to record: it crieth unto you, and plainly doth advertise you, what you should think of it: I am, it faith, grated with the teeth; I am conveyed into the belly; I perish; I can endure no spice; I canker; I suffer green mould blew mould, red mould; I breed worms; I am kept in a Box for fear of Rats; if you leave me out all night, I shall be devoured before morning, for if the Moufe get me I am gone; I am bread, I am no God; believe them not. Thus crieth the Sacrament daily, and beareth witness it self.

Custom. The Devil on such like reasons; and therefore I will never trouble my brains to make you answer: but if it be true that you have said, why is the Sacrament so well of Christ himself, as of his Apostles, and the old Fathers, called the Body of Christ?

Verity.

The Priest taketh the Sacrament unworthily, as Christ ordained, ergo, the Priest taketh it unworthily.

Difference between Christs ordinance and the Priests receiving.

The Sacrament called breaking of bread.

Against Transubstantiation.

Reason proving bread in the Sacrament.

The Sacrament giveth witness that it is bread.

Verity. Because it is no strange thing in Scripture so to speak, as I have declared before. But will you stand to St. Augustine's arbitrement in the matter?

Custom. To no Man sooner.

Verity. St. Augustine in an Epistle to his friend Bonifacius giveth a good cause why the Sacrament, although it be not the Body of Christ, is notwithstanding called the Body of Christ. His words be these: Si Sacramenta quendam similitudinem earum rerum quarum Sacramenta sunt non haberent, omnino Sacramenta non essent. Ex hac autem similitudine plerumque earum rerum nomina accipiunt. Ergo, secundum quendam modum Sacramentum corporis Christi corpus Christi est; Sacramentum sanguinis Christi sanguis Christi est. If Sacraments had not a certain similitude of those things whereof they be Sacraments, then were they no Sacraments. Of the which similitude many times they take their name. Wherefore after a certain manner the Sacrament of the Body of Christ is the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of the Blood of Christ is the Blood of Christ, &c. And upon the three and twentieth Psalm he writeth likewise, Christus quodammodo se ferebat in manibus suis, cum diceret, Hoc est corpus meum; Christ after a certain manner and fashion, as it were, did bear himself in his own hand, when he said, This is my Body. In manner (he saith) and after a fashion, not in very deed. Again, when faithful Men receive the Sacrament, they think not of the Bread, nor mark the Wine, but they look further, and behold the very Body of Christ spread upon the Cross, and his very Blood poured down for their sakes. So in Baptism Men regard not greatly the Water, but account themselves washed with the Blood of Christ. So saith St. Paul, Whosoever we are that be Baptized, we are washed in the Blood of Christ. Wherefore to the faithful receivers you may say, That the Water of Baptism is the Blood of Christ, and the Bread and Wine the Body and Blood of Christ: for to them it is no less than if the natures were altered and changed. Which thing you may very well learn of Chrysostom, whose words are these: Mysteria omnia interioribus oculis consideranda sunt, hoc est, spiritualiter. Interiores autem oculi, postquam panem vident, creaturas transvolant, neque de illo pane a pistore cocto cogitant, sed de eo qui se dixit panem esse eterna vite: All mysteries must be considered with inward Eyes, that is to say, Spiritually. But the inward Eyes when they see the Bread, they pass over the Creatures, neither do they think of that Bread which is baked of the Baker, but of him which called himself the Bread of Eternal life. For these two causes the Bread and Wine are called the Body and Blood of Christ. Now I think you are satisfied concerning the meaning of these words: This is my Body.

Custom. Yet one thing moveth me very much.

Verity. What is that?

Custom. The Doctors and old Writers, Men inspired with the Holy Ghost, have evermore been against your Doctrine; yea, and in these days the wisest Men and best learned call you Hereticks, and your learning Heretic.

Verity. As touching the old Writers, I remember well they speak reverently of the Sacraments, like as every Man ought to do; but whereas they deliver their mind with their right hand, you Custom receive it with the left. For whereas they say, that it is the Body of Christ, and that it must be verily eaten, meaning that it doth effectually lay before the Eyes Christ's Body, and that it is to the faithful Man no less than if it were Christ himself, and that Christ must be eaten in Faith, not torn nor rent with the Teeth: you say that howsoever it be taken, it is Christ's Body, and that there is none other eating but with the mouth.

And that the Fathers meant no other thing than I have said, it shall appear by their words. But as touching the learned and wise Men of these days, I cannot blame them if they call my Doctrine Heretic; for they would condemn all ancient Writers of Heretic, if they were now alive. But I will answer you to them anon. In the mean while mark you how well their learning agreeth. They say, you must follow the Letter, you must stick to the Letter. But Origen saith, Si secundum litteram sequaris id quod scriptum est (nisi manducaveritis carnem filii hominis, non eris vita in vobis) ea littera occidit, si ye follow after the Letter that which is written (unless ye shall eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, there shall be no life in you) this Letter killeth. Augustine in the third Book De Doctrina Christiana, Principio cavendum est ne figuratam dictionem secundum litteram accipias. Ad hoc enim pertinet id quod ait Apostolus, littera occidit. Cum enim figurate dictum sit accipitur tanquam proprie dictum sit, carnaliter sapitur; neque ulla anima mors congruentius appellatur. I. First thou must beware that thou take not a figurative speech after the Letter. For thereto pertained that the Apostle saith, The Letter killeth. For when a thing is Spiritually meant, and the same is taken literally as properly spoken, that is a carnal taking. Neither can any other be called the killing of the Soul rather than that. And in the same Book he reacheth a Man to know the plain sense from a Figure, saying thus: Si preceptum loquutus est flagitium jubens, aut beneficentiam vitans, figura est: Nisi manducaveritis carnem filii hominis, & biberitis ejus sanguinem, non eris vita in vobis. Flagitium videtur jubere; Ergo, figura est preceptum passionis Domini esse communicandum, & suaveret in memoria recordandum, quod pro nobis caro ejus crucifixa sit. I. If the commanding speech be such as commandeth a thing wicked and horrible to be done, or a charitable thing to be undone, then this is a figurative speech: Unless ye shall eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and shall drink his Blood, there shall be no life in you: Because in this speech he seemeth to command a wicked thing, it is therefore a figurative speech, commanding that we should communicate with the Passion of our Lord, and sweetly to retain it in our remembrance. In like manner Chrysostom plucketh you from the plain Letter, and the bare words by this saying, Caro non prodest; hoc est, secundum spiritum verba mea intelligenda sunt. Quia qui secundum carnem audit, nihil lucratur. Quid est autem carnaliter intelligere? Simpliciter ut res dicuntur, neque aliud quippiam cogitare. Non enim ita judicanda sunt quae videntur, sed mysteria omnia interioribus oculis videnda sunt, hoc est, spiritualiter. I. The Flesh profiteth not; that is to say, my words must be taken and expounded after the Spirit. For he that heareth after the Flesh gaineth nothing. Now what is it to understand carnally? To take things simply as they be spoken, and not to consider any meaning further therein. For things must not be judged as they are seen, but all mysteries must be seen with inward Eyes, that is to say, spiritually. What is so heinous in these days, as to call the Sacrament the Token or the Remembrance of Christ's Body? Yet did the old Writers in manner never call it other. Tertullian in the Fourth Book against the Marcionists, Christus accepit panem, & corpus suum fecit, Hoc est corpus meum dicens, id est, figura corporis mei. Christ took Bread and made it his Body, saying, This is my Body; that is to say, a Figure of my Body. Ambrose upon the Eleventh to the Corinthians, Quia morte Domini liberati sumus, hujus rei memoriam edendo & potando, carnem & sanguinem quae pro nobis oblata sunt significamus; Because we are delivered by the Lords death, in the remembrance of the same by eating and drinking we signify the Body and Blood which were offered up for us. Chrysostom in the Eighty Third Homily upon the Gospel of Matthew, Quando dicunt, unde patet Christum immolatum fuisse? hac adferentes eorum ora conjuvamus. Si enim mortuus Christus non est, cujus Symbolum ac signum hoc sacrificium est? When they object unto us, and ask, How know you that Christ was offered up? Then alleging these things we stop their mouths. For if Christ did not, then whose sign or token is this Sacrifice? Augustine to Adimantus, Non dubitavit Christus dicere, Hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui. Christ doubted not to say, This is my Body, when he gave but a sign of his Body. Augustine upon the Third Psalm, Christus adhibuit Judaeis ad convivium, in quo corporis & sanguinis sui figuram discipulis suis commendavit & tradidit; Christ received Judaei to the Supper, in the which he commanded and delivered a Figure of his Body and Blood unto his Disciples. Rabanus, de institutione clericorum; Quia panis filii Christi corpus confirmat, ideo ille corpus Christi congruenter nuncupatur. Vinum autem quia sanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad sanguinem Christi refertur. Because the Bread strengtheneth the Body, therefore it is aply called Christs Body. And likewise the Wine, because it increaseth Blood in the Fleth, it doth resemble the Blood of Christ. Drubmarus Monachus in Mathæum, Vinum lasificat, & sanguinem auget, & ideo non inconuenienter per hoc sanguis Christi figuratur. Wine maketh glad the heart, and increaseth blood; and therefore the blood of Christ is not unaply signified thereby. Irenæus witnesseth plainly, That in the Sacrament remaineth Bread and Wine, by these words, Quemadmodum terrenus panis percipiens uocationem Dei, iam non communis panis est, sed Eucharistia ex duobus rebus constans, terrena, & celestis; As the earthly Bread receiving the vocation of God, is now no common Bread, but the Eucharist, consisting of two things, the one Earthly and the other Heavenly. Here he recordeth that there remaineth in the Sacrament an Earthly nature, which is either Bread or nothing. Gelasius writing against Nestorius avoweth the same, saying, In Eucharistia non definit substantia panis, & natura vini. Etenim imago & similitudo corporis & sanguinis Domini in actione mysteriorum celebratur. i. In the Eucharist the substance of Bread and nature of the Wine ceaseth not to be: For the Image and similitude of the Body and Blood of the Lord is celebrated in the action of the mysteries. Chrysostom in his twentieth Homily upon the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, preferreth a poor Man before the Sacrament, and calleth him the Body of Christ rather than the other. Whereof I may gather this reason:

Bo- The poor Man is not the natural and real Body of Christ.

car- Every poor member of Christ is the Body of Christ rather than the Sacrament. Chrysostom.

do. Ergo, The Sacrament is not the natural and real Body of Christ.

His words are, Hoc altare ueneratis quoniam in eo propinquit corpus Christi. Eam autem qui reipia corpus est Christi, affectu contumelia, & negligis peruentem; This Altar thou dost reverence, because the Body of Christ therein is set before thee; but him which is the Body of Christ indeed thou dost spitefully intreat, and dost neglect him ready to perish. Chrysostom in the Eleventh Homily upon Matthew. Quod si hac uasa sanctificata ad priuatos usus est transferre periculosum, in quibus non uerum corpus Christi sed mysterium corporis Christi continetur, quanto magis uasa corporis nostri? If it be so perillous a matter to translae these Sanctified Vessels unto private uses, in the which not the True Body of Christ, but a mystery of the Body of Christ is contained, how much more then these Vessels of our Body? Athanasius upon these words: Qui dixerit uerbum contra filium hominis, scilicet, Ea quæ Christus dicit non sunt carnalia, sed spiritalia. Quid enim comedentibus sufficisset corpus, ut totius mundi fieret alimonia? Sed idcirco meminit Ascensionis filii hominis in calum, ut eos a corporalis cogitatione auelleret. The words that Christ here speaketh, be not Carnal, but Spiritual. For what Body might have sufficed for all that should eat, to be a nourishment of the whole World? But therefore he maketh mention of the Ascension of the Son of Man into Heaven, to the intent to pluck them away from that corporal cogitation. Aug. ad Marcel. In illis carnalibus uictimis figuratio fuit carnis Christi, quam pro peccatis nostris erat oblaturus, & sanguinis quem erat essulurus; in isto autem Sacrificio gratiarum actio atque commemoratio est carnis Christi quam pro nobis obtulit, & sanguinis, quem pro nobis effudit. In illo ergo sacrificio, quid nobis sit donandum figurate significatur; In hoc autem sacrificio quid nobis donatum sit, euidenter ostenditur. In illis sacrificiis præmuniabatur filius Dei occidendus, in hoc pro impiis annuntiatur occisus. In those carnal Oblations the Fleth of Christ was figured, which he should offer for our sins, and the Blood which he should bestow for us; but in this Sacrifice is the giving of thanks and memorial of the Fleth of Christ, which he hath offered for us, and of the Blood which he hath shed for us. In that Sacrifice therefore is signified figuratively what should be given for us; in this Sacrifice what is given to us is evidently declared. In those Sacrifices the Son of God was before preached to be slain; in this Sacrifice he is shewed to be slain already for the wicked.

Origines, upon Matthew expounding these words, Hoc est corpus meum, saith, Panis iste quem Christus corpus suum fatetur esse, uerbum est nutritorium animarum, (id est) The Bread which Christ confesseth to be his Body, is a nutritive word of our Souls. Augustinus: Nulli aliquatenus dubitandum, nunquamque fidelium corporis & sanguinis Domini tunc esse participem, quando in baptismo membrum efficitur Christi. Sacramenti quippe illius participatione ac beneficio non prouidetur, quando in se hoc inuenit quod Sacramentum significat. No Man ought in any wile to doubt but that every faithful Man is then partaker of the Body and Blood of the Lord, when in Baptism he is made a member of Christ. For he shall not be deprived of the participation and benefit of that Sacrament, when he findeth in himself that thing which the Sacrament doth signifie. Ambrosius, Tanta est uis uerbi, ut panis & uinum maneat quæ sunt, & mutantur in aliud. Such is the force and strength of the Word, that the Bread and Wine remain the same, as they were, and yet are changed into another thing. For it is not any longer common Bread, but it is turned into a Sacrament; yet notwithstanding there remaineth Bread and Wine. Tertullianus writing against an Heretick named Marcion, which taught that the Creatures of God, as Fleth, Bread, and Wine, and such like, were naught and uncleanly, Non abiecit Deus creaturam suam, sed ea representauit corpus suum, God hath not cast away his Creature, but by it he hath represented his Body. Origines upon Leuiticus, speaking of the drinking of Christs Blood, saith, Non sanguinem carnis expetimus, sed sanguinem uerbi, We do not desire the Blood of the Fleth, but the Blood of the Word. Ambrosius called the Sacrament, Typum corporis Christi, and Basilus Antitypum, which is as much as to say, as a token, a figure, a remembrance, and example of Christs Body. Origen upon the Fourteenth Chapter of Matthew, In isto pane, quod est materiale eiecitur in secessum: id autem quod fit per uerbum Dei pro fidei ratione prodest. In this Bread that thing which is material passeth through Mans Body; but that which is made by the Word of God, by the means of Faith doth profit. And let perhaps you think that he spake those words of our common Table-Bread, he concludeth the matter himself with these words, Hæc diximus de pane symbolico. These things we have spoken of the Mystical Bread. Augustinus contra aduersarium Legis & Prophetarum, declareth, That it must needs be a figure and a remembrance of the Body of Christ, Ista secundum sanctæ fidei regulam figurate intelliguntur. Nam aliqui horribilibus uideretur esse humanam carnem uorare quam perimere, & humanum sanguinem potare quam fundere; These things are understood figuratively, according to the rule of sound and True Faith. For otherwise it seemeth to be more horrible to eat Mans Fleth, than to kill a Man, and more horrible to drink Mans blood, than to shed it. And therefore he saith upon the 58th Psalm, Non hoc corpus quod uidetis esset manducaturus, nec bibiturus sanguinem quem fundens qui me crucifigens. Sacramentum aliquod uobis trado. I Ye shall not eat this Body which you see, and drink that Blood which they shall shed that shall Crucifie me; I commend unto you a Sacrament. Tert. Aliud a pane corpus Iesus habet: nec pro nobis panis traditus, sed ipsum Christi uerum corpus traditum est in crucem, quod panis figura in cena exhibitum est. i. Iesus hath another Body than Bread, for Bread was not given for us, but the very True Body of Christ was given upon the Croſs, which Body was exhibited in the Supper under the figure of Bread. This recordeth Theodoretus an ancient Writer, and avoweth, That there is no turning or altering of the Bread in the Sacrament. His words are these, Symbola uisibilia corporis & sanguinis sui appellatione honorauit, non mutans naturam, sed naturæ addens gratiam. i. He hath honoured and dignified the visible signs with the name of his Body and of his Blood, not changing the nature, but adding Grace to nature. And in another place, where he maketh a true Christian Man to reason with an Heretick, he giveth to the Heretick this part, to hold with the turning of Bread and Wine into the natural Body and Blood of Christ. The Hereticks words are these, Sacramenta Domini corporis

[KING] & sanguinis alia sunt ante sacram invocationem; post invocationem vero manentur, & alia sunt; The Sacraments of the Lords Body and Blood before Invocation, are one thing, but after, they are changed and made another. This maketh Theod. to be on the Hereticks part. Then he bringeth forth the true Christian Man, which reprovethe the Heretick for so saying, incidisti in lequeos quos ipse struxeras: Neque enim sancta illa symbola post consecrationem disciunt a natura sua: Manent enim in priori & substantia & figura, etenim oculis videntur & digitis palpari ut ante possunt; Thou art fallen into the snares which thou thy self hast laid. For those self-same holy signs after the Consecration do not go from their nature, for they abide still both in their former substance and figure, and may be both with eyes seen, and felt with hands as before. To the same agreeth well Chrysost. saying, Postquam sanctificatur panis, non amplius appellatur panis, tamenque manent natura panis. i.e. After the Bread is Sanctified, it is called Bread no more, although the nature of the Bread still remain. Hereby you may understand, how and in what sort the old Fathers, how the Primitive and beginning Church, how the Apostles, and how Christ himself took these words, This is my Body.

Now to withstand and stoutly to go, not against only ancient Writers, or the Congregation of Christian People, which at that time was not overgrown, no, neither spotted with covetousness and worldly honour, but the Apostles also, and God himself, no doubt: it is great fondness. But what speak I of the old Fathers? It is not long since the Sacrament grew out of his right under standing. For this word Transubstantiatio, whereby they signifie the turning of the Bread into the Body of Christ, was never either spoken or heard, or thought of among the ancient Fathers, or in the old Church. But about 500 years past, Pope Nicholas the Second in a Council holden at Lateranum in Rome, confirmed that opinion of the changing of Bread, and would have made an Article of Faith, and placed it in the Creed. After which time ensued Corpus Christi days, Masses of Corpus Christi, reservation of the Sacrament, with Canopies, with Ganopies, with censuring, with kneeling, with worshipping and adoration, and with so much as any Man could devise. For they thought they could not do too much to him after that the Bishop of Rome had allowed him for a God.

But not fully 200 years before that time, when this Doctrine first began to baul, (and yet notwithstanding had not so prevailed, but that a great number of learned and good Men could know the Sacrament to be a Sacrament, and not Christ himself) Charles the Great, King of France, and Emperor of Germany, demanded of a great learned Man, whose name was Bertram, what he thought of that strange kind of selling down Christ from Heaven, and turning a little gobber of Bread into his natural body. To whom Bertram made answer in this wise, Dicimus quod multa differentia separantur corporis in quo passus est Christus & sanguinis quem in cruce pendens sumpsit, & hoc corpus quod in mysterio passus est Christi quod in a sacramento celebratur. Etenim hoc corpus pignus & species est, illud autem ipse veritas. Apparet ergo quod tam multa differentia separantur, quantum est inter pignus & rem pro qua pignus traditur, & hominem inter imaginem, & rem talem cuius imago est, & quantum inter speciem & veritatem. This we say; That there is a great difference and separation betwixt the body in the which Christ suffered, and the blood which he shed upon the Cross, and this body which every day is celebrated in the Mystery of the Pasch of Christ. For this body is a pledge and similitude, but the other is the very truth itself. Ergo, it appeareth that these are separated standers by no leiss difference than is between a pledge and the thing whereof the pledge is given; or than is betwixt an Image of a thing and the thing it self whereof the Image is; or than is between the form of a thing, and the verity it self. This wrote Bertram, Druthmarus, and many other, and yet were never in all their time once reproved of Heretie. This wrote Johannes Scotus also, in whose life time Men had not Eyes to espy his Heresies; but about two hundred years after his death he was judged and condemned for an Heretick, and his Books burned, in a Council holden at Verceil in Lombardy, in the year of our Lord God 1015. Since which time, even until this day, although Idoltry had great increase, yet there never wanted some good Men which boldly would profess and set forth the truth, although they were well assured that their worldly reward should be Spight, Malice, Imprisoning, Sword, Fire, and all kinds of torments. Thus I shortly, and in so few words as I could I have declared unto you what Christ meant by these words, This is my Body; what the Apostles taught therein, and in what sort they delivered them to their successors in what sense and meaning the holy Fathers and old Writers, and the universal and Catholick Church have ever taken them.

The end and death of King Edward the Sixth.

THUS having discoursed things done and past under the reign of King Edward, such as seemed not unfruitful to be known, we will now draw to the end and death of this blessed King, our young Josiah. Who about a year and a half after the death of the Duke of Somerset his Uncle, in the year of our Lord 1553, entering into the seventeenth year of his Age, and the seventh year of his Reiga, in the month of June was taken from us, for our sins no doubt; whom if it had so pleased the good will of the Lord to have spared with longer life not unlike it was, by all conjectures probably to be effected by those his toward and blessed beginnings, but proceeding so as he began, he would have reformed such a Common Wealth here in the Realm of England, as by good cause it might have been said of him that was said in the old time of the noble Emperor Augustus, in reformed and advancing the Empire of Rome, Quam quum ille laterebam (ut dicebat) accepit, marmoream reliquit; Which Empire he received (he said) of Brick, but he left it of fine Marble. But the condition of this Realm, and the customable behaviour of English People (whose property is commonly to abuse the Light of the Gospel when it is offered) deferred no such benefit of so blessed a Reformation, but rather a contrary plague of deordination, such as happened after his reign, as you shall hear, the Lord granting, in the next Queens days that followed.

This then this godly and vertuous King, in the time and month above-mentioned, was cut from us, whose worthy life and virtues have been partly afore-declared. Nevertheless, to leave some Monument of him remaining to testify of the good nature and gentle disposition of that Prince, we will add here, for a remembrance, this little Epistle of his own hand-writing to the Archbishop of Canterbury his God-father, as followeth:

An Epistle of young Prince Edward to the Archbishop of Canterbury his God-father.

The report of the Princes School-master, in commendation of his towardness, to the Archbishop.

This Letter seemeth to be written by Dr. Cox.

Right honourable and my singular good Lord, after my most hearty commendations: the opportunity of this Messenger forceth me to write at this time, having little matter but only to signify unto your Grace, that my Lords Grace your God-son is merry and in health, and of such towardness in learning, godliness, gentleness, and all honest qualities, that both you and I, and all this Realm ought to think him and take him for a singular gift sent of God, an Imp worthy of such a Father; for whom we are bound, sine intermissione, to render to God most hearty thanks, with most humble request of his long and prosperous continuance. He hath learned almost four Books of Cato to construe, to parse, and to say without Book. And of his own courage now in the later Book he will needs have at one time fourteen Verses, which he cometh pleasantly and perfectly, besides things of the Bible, Satellitium Vivis, Axioms Fabler, and Latin making, whereof he hath sent your Grace a little talke. Dominus Iesus te diutissime servet.

Thus much hitherto having declared, touching the worthy virtues and singular towardness of this godly Imp, King Edward the Sixth, although I have not, neither can infer all things due to his commendation, but am enforced to let pass many memorable matters, well worthy to be prosecuted, if they might have come to our hands: yet this one brief Note I thought not to overslip (something to recreate the weary Reader in such a doleful story) being notified to me by one Mr. Edward Hunderbil, who waiting the same time with the rest of his fellow Prisoners and Men at Arms, as Sir Henry Gates, Mr. Robert Hall, Mr. Henry Harrison, and Mr. Stafforten, heard these words between the King and his Council.

The Relation and Testimony of which person and persons above-named come to this effect, That King Edward the Sixth, the fourth year of his Reign, being then but thirteen years old and upward, at Greenwich upon St. Georges day, when he was come from the Sermon into the Presence-Chamber, there being his Uncle the Duke of Sauarby, the Duke of Northumberland, with other Lords and Knights of that Order, called, The Order of the Garter, he said to them, My Lords, I pray you, what Saint is St. George, that we here so honour him? At which question the other Lords being all astonished, the Lord Treasurer that then was, perceiving this, gave answer, and said, If it please your Majesty, I did never read in any

History of St. George, but only in Legenda aurea, where it is thus set down, That St. George our with his Sword, and ran the Dragon through with his Spear. The King when he could not a great while speak for laughing, at length said, I pray you, my Lord, and what did he with his Sword the while? That I cannot tell your Majesty, said he. And so an end of that question of good St. George. Now to return again from whence we have digressed, which is to signify some part of the order and manner of his godly departing: As the time approached when it pleased Almighty God to call this young King from us, which was the sixth day of July, the year above-said, about three hours before his death, this godly Child, his eyes being closed, speaking to himself, and thinking none to have heard him, made this Prayer which followeth:

The Prayer of King Edward before his death.

LORD God deliver me out of this miserable and wretched life, and take me among thy chosen: bowbetti noi my will, but thy will be done: Lord I commit my spirit to thee, Ob Lord thou knowest how happy it were for me to be with thee: yet for thy chosen sake I end me life and health, that I may truly serve thee. O my Lord God blest thy people, and save thine inheritance. O Lord God save thy chosen people of England. Ob my Lord God, defend this Realm from Papistry, and maintain thy true Religion, that I and my people may praise thy holy Name, for thy Son Jesus Christs sake.

*The Kings
his death.*

Then turned he his face, and seeing who was by him, said unto them, Are ye so nigh? I thought ye had been further off. Then Dr. Owen said, We heard you speak to your self, but what you said we know not. He then (after his fashion smilingly) said, I was praying to God. The last words of his pangs were these, I am faint, Lord have mercy upon me, and take my spirit. And thus he yielded up the ghost, leaving a woful kingdom behind unto his Sister. Albeit he in his will had excluded his Sister Mary from the succession of the Crown, because of her corrupt Religion: yet the Plague, which God had destinate unto this sinful Realm, could not so be avoided, but that she, being the elder Daughter to King Henry, succeeded in possession of the Crown. Of whose dreadful and bloody regiment it remaineth now consequently to discourse.

This briefly may suffice to understand, that for all the writing, sending, and practising with the Lady Mary, by the King and his Council, and also by Bishop Ridley, yet would she not be reclaimed from her own singular opinion fixed upon custom, to give any indifferent hearing to the word and voice of verity. The which set Will of the said Lady Mary, both this young King and also his Father King Henry before him right well perceiving and considering, they were both much displeased against her: Inasmuch that not only her Brother did utterly sequester her in his Will, but also her own Father, considering her inclination, conceived such heart against her, that for a great space he did seclude her from the title of Princess, yea and seemed so eagerly incensed against her, that he was fully purposed to proceed further with her (as it is reported) had not the intercession of Thomas Cranmer the Archbishop reconciled the King again to favour and pardon his own Daughter. For the better understanding whereof, by these her own Letters composed out of her own hand-writing, which I have to shew, something may be perceived, and more peradventure may be guessed. The words out of her own hand-writing be these. And first her Letter to King Henry her Father here followeth:

A Letter of the Lady Mary to King Henry her Father.

IN my most humble wise I beseech your Grace of your daily blessing. Pleaseth it the same to be advertised, that this morning my Lord my Chamberlain came and shewed me, that he had received a Letter from Sir W. Paulet Controller of your House. KING leaving out in the same the name of Princeſſe. Which when I heard, I could not a little marvel, truſting verily that your Grace was not privy to the ſame Letter, as concerning the leaving out of the name of Princeſſe, for as much as I doubt not in your goodneſſe, but your Grace doth take me for your lawfull Daughter, born in true Matrimony. Wherefore if I ſhould agree to the contrary, I ſhould in my Conſcience run in the diſpleaſure of God, which I hope aſſuredly your Grace would not that I ſo ſhould. And in all other things your Grace ſhall have me always as humble and obedient a Daughter and Handmaid as ever was Child to the Father, which my duty bindeth me to, as knoweth our Lord, who have your Grace in his moſt holy truſtion, with much honour, and long life to his pleaſure. Written at your Mannor of Beaulieu, the ſecond day of October,

By your humble Daughter,

Mary, Princeſſe.

Proteſtation of the Lady Mary to certain Lords ſent by the King her Father, with certain requeſts unto her.

The proteſtation of Lady Mary.

MY Lords, as touching my removing to Hatfield I will obey his Grace, as my duty is, or to any other place his Grace will appoint me. But I proteſt before you and all other that be here preſent, that my Conſcience will in no wiſe ſuffer me to take any other than my ſelf for the Kings Lawfull Daughter, born in true Matrimony, or Princeſſe, and that I will never willingly and wittingly ſay or do whereby any perſon might take occaſion to think that I agree to the contrary. Nor of any ambition or proud mind, as God is my Judge, but that, if I ſhould ſay or do otherwise, I ſhould in my Conſcience ſlander the Deed of our Mother holy Church, and the Pope, who is the Judge in this matter, and none other, and alſo diſhonour the King my Father, the Queen my Mother, and ſhall confeſs my ſelf a Baſtard, which God defend that I ſhould do, ſeeing the Pope hath not ſo declared it by his ſentence Definitive; for to his Judgment I ſubmit me.

As you have heard ſome part already of the ſtout courage of the Lady Mary toward her Father, and alſo by her Letters no leſs was declared toward King Edward her Brother and other of his Council, as well may appear by the Letters above ſpecified between the King her Brother and his Council: So now let us infer ſomewhat likewiſe of the ſtout talk and demeanour of the ſaid Lady Mary toward Doctour Ridley Biſhop of London, who gently coming to her of mee good will, had this communication with her, and ſhe with him, as here followeth:

About the Eighth of September, 1552, Dr. Ridley then Biſhop of London, lying at his Houſe at Hadham in Hertfordſhire, went to viſit the Lady Mary then lying at Hunſden, two miles off; and was gently entertained of Sir Thomas Wharton, and other her Officers, till it was almoſt Eleven of the Clock, about which time the ſaid Lady Mary came forth into her Chamber of Prefence, and then the ſaid Biſhop there ſaluted her Grace, and ſaid, That he was come to do this duty to her Grace. Then ſhe thanked him for his pains, and for a quarter of an hour talked with him very pleaſantly, and ſaid, That ſhe knew him in the Court when he was Chaplain to her Father, and could well remember a Sermon that he made before King Henry her Father, at the Marriage of any Lady Chriſten that now is, to Sir Anthony Brown, &c. and ſo diſmiſſed him to Dine with her Officers.

After Dinner was done, the Biſhop being called for by the ſaid Lady Mary, reſorted again to her Grace, between whom this communication was; ſuit the Biſhop began in manner as followeth:

Biſhop. Madam, I came not only to do my duty to ſee your Grace, but alſo to offer my ſelf to preach before you on Sunday next, if it will pleaſe you to hear me. At this her countenance changed, and, after ſilence for a ſpace, the answered thus: Mary. My Lord, as for this laſt matter I pray you make the answer to it your ſelf.

Biſhop. Madam, conſidering mine Office and Calling, I am bound in duty to make to your Grace this offer, to preach before you.

Mary. Well, I pray you make the answer (as I have ſaid) to this matter your ſelf; for you know the answer well enough. But if there be no remedy but I muſt make you answer, this ſhall be your answer; the door of the Parliſh-Church adjoining ſhall be open for you if you come, and ye may preach if you liſt; but neither I nor any of mine ſhall hear you.

Biſhop. Madam, I truſt you will not reſuſe Gods Word.

Mary. I cannot tell what ye call Gods Word; that is not Gods Word now, that was Gods Word in my Fathers days.

Biſhop. Gods Word is all one in all times, but hath been better underſtood and practiſed in ſome Ages than in other.

Mary. You durſt not for your ears have avouched that for Gods Word in my Fathers days, that now you do. And as for your new Books, I thank God I never read any of them; I never did, nor ever will do.

And after many bitter Words againſt the form of Religion then eſtabliſhed, and againſt the Government of the Realm, and the Laws made in the young years of her Brother, which ſhe ſaid ſhe was not bound to obey till her Brother came to perfect Age, and then ſhe affirmed ſhe would obey them; ſhe asked the Biſhop whether he were one of the Council: He answered, No. You might well enough, ſaid ſhe, as the Council goeth now a days.

And ſo ſhe concluded with theſe words: My Lord, for your gentleneſſe to come and ſee me, I thank you; but for your offering to preach before me, I thank you never a whit.

Then the ſaid Biſhop was brought by Sir Thomas Wharton to the place where they dined, and was deſired to drink. And after he had drunk, he pauſed a while looking very ſadly, and ſuddenly brake out into theſe words: Surely I have done amiſs. Why ſo? quoth Sir Thomas Wharton. For I have drunk (ſaid he) in that place where Gods word offered hath been reſuſed: where, as if I had remembered my duty, I ought to have departed immediately, and to have taken off the duſt of my Shoes for a teſtimony againſt this Houſe. Theſe words were by the ſaid Biſhop ſpoken with ſuch a vehemency, that ſome of the hearers afterward confeſſed their Hair to ſtand upright on their Heads. This done, the ſaid Biſhop departed, and ſo returned to his Houſe. Teſtified by a certain reverend perſonage yet alive, being then the Biſhops Chaplain.

Dr. Ridley offered to preach before the Lady Mary.

Lady Mary reſuſeth to hear Biſhop Ridley to preach before her.

It is like that was perſuaded by articles and blind propoſitions, that outward ſhould not live ſo long.

Dr. Ridley repeated to have drunk there where Gods Word was reſuſed.

Talk between Lady Mary and Dr. Ridley.

¶ And thus making an end of this Ninth Book, touching the Story and Reign of King Edward, and having alſo ſomewhat ſaid before of the nature and diſpoſition of the Lady Mary, whereby the way may be prepared the better to the troubles of the next Book following; we intend, the Grace of God aſſiſting us therein, now further to proceed in deſcribing the acts and proceedings of the ſaid Lady Mary, coming now to be Queen, and advanced, next after this godly King Edward, to the Crown of this Realm of England.

A T A B L E O F T A B L E S,

Shewing to a whole Alphabet of sundry sorts of Readers; To each kind a particular Catalogue of Instances: Giving him an account, wherein the reading of this great Book of MARTYRS may abundantly give contentment to his vein of Study, and recompence his pains.

The References of which Table let the Reader thus understand,

Understand, studious Reader (what is not considered by most) that this large Book of MARTYRS, is not a Legend of Fables, nor a Chaos-rude-heap of worthless rubbish; but Bibliotheca literarum & literatorum, A Library of learning and learned mens Works, making this Book, for the prime and choice Subject thereof, justly to be esteemed (as the learned confess) the most of all human pen'd Books to the sacred Bible; as may appear in regard either of the Form or Matter thereof.

		Methodical; keeping time, as so great a vastness of Story would permit, in the Histories of many Kingdoms besides our own.
		Certain in the proof; from eye-witnesses intent upon the things in the doing; and ancient Records, legally drawn, safely preserved, and faithfully produced.
For Form, it is	{	Well qualified for file and expression; keeping in medio dicendi genere , a middle strain, yet varying the phrase of speech to the matter in hand. When this Book speaks otherwise, it speaks the words of another man, either relating or acting the matter of that Story. And then what is wanting in our best phrase, is recompensed there with certainty, patheticalness, and pleasure of hearing the Dialects of plain and ancient times and men.
		Rich in variety; ever and anon, after a more serious narration, fetching the Readers spirits fresh again (like the witty Comedian) with a sudden winding in, not impertinently, of some cheerful discourse.
For Matter,	{	As a Library it abounds with Treatises, each Page mostly being as a several Book; yea, one Leaf many times as a Shelf of Authors, for most points and persons: We will give but a taste in some few particulars, in an Alphabetical order.

O.

Old age may here with its dim eyes see plain patterns to lead him in the plain way; and encourage him, seeing he is so high his end, rather to be dissolved (if he be called unto it) in flames of fire to be with Christ, then in this last period of his life to deny him, and by and by at his death be denied Christ, Heaven; and any thing else but only Hell and damnation.

One lively example is, vol. 3. p. 38. col. 1. Compare p. 359. col. 2. p. 375. c. 2.
Another, vol. 1. 829. c. 2.
More, vol. 3. p. 587. c. 2.
Phoebus a very old man suffers for Christ, vol. 1. 52. c. 1.

P.

Politicians may be hence furnished with many observations touching matters of State and Government of Commonwealths, not only laid down in the rule, but proved in the practices; For example,
Thirty two Emperors lives and deaths exemplifie the issue of too much severity and cruelty in Government. vol. 1. 34. 35. Count the Margent.
Decay of Religion decays a Commonwealth. vol. 1. p. 112. c. 2. overthrows the Government, as may be seen in Richard the Second. vol. 1. p. 580. c. 2. Compare p. 585. c. 1.
Greatness of a State without true Empire of Government is a weakness to the same, as is plain in the Turkish Dominions, by the story of them.
The mischief of several factions in a State, exemplified in Henry the Eighth his Government. vol. 2. throughout. A particular instance, see vol. 2. pag. 474.
Dissension in a Kingdom opens the door to foreign invasion; see in the example of Christians thus letting in the Turk, vol. 1. 827. c. 1.
The Roman Empire, and ruined by refusing Christ, vol. 1. pag. 34. c. 2. 35. c. 1.
The Jewish Nation
The many changes of State, and the causes of them may be seen in this story more than in most; as in the coming in of Saxons, Danes, Normans, Scots, Picts; as also in Richard the Second his Reign, Henry the Sixth, &c.

THUS of multitudes of instances we have given but a very few, wherein this University of godly Learning may profit any ingenious Reader; no such can come amiss, but that he may go away the better from this Book after his reading it, if himself be not in fault.

Here is in this Book	To settle the judgment in the truth, thousands that have subscribed to it in blood.	{
	To win the affections, the most patheticall speeches of dying Saints:

 Master FOX his Martyrology.

An Advertisement to the Reader,

THAT here is presented unto him a compendious Chronological Table of the most remarkable things contained in the whole Book of Martyrs, (according as they are set down after Master Fox his Method and Computation) digesting them into several Columes; The First and smaller Colume making report of time.

Four next larger of persons.

Sixth and largest of matters, concisely anatomizing the whole body of the story into the master veins, arteries and sinews.

Seventh, last and least, pointing to the place in the large Volumes, where the Contents of all the other Columes are to be found, and filled up with flesh, blood and spirits of larger Discourses.

To which we have added this brief Chronological Digest, that it may serve the studious Reader, either as a perspective, whereby to view what ground he is to travel, and where the several turnings are, before he begins to read; or as a Register or Note-book, whereby to recollect his thoughts and observations after so long a travel in reading so voluminous a Work: And at all times to be both as a Map of the limits, a Skeleton of the limbs, and Pourtraiture of the face of so rare a Story and a right Martyr; as also a Methodical Index to find and fetch in the main bulk of any special piece of the Story (out of the heap of prolix circumstances wherein it is covered) when it is to be remembered or perused. In all which thus projected, and with extraordinary care and pains effected, if any Reader from his knowledge of other Histories, conceive that many touches of additions or alterations of things, names or times, would have done well; let him remember that Master Fox his Book of Martyrs was the Copy set before the Pen to write after, both for matter and method. As also, that the scope of the Pen-man was, to make this Model a Key to the same; so that if we had any ways set this and the great Volume at difference and odds, we had set the Son against the Father, many references of this to that would have misreported things, and the whole Project had been ruined. This Child then, though a tender little weak one, comes abroad under the Parents Wing; and is modestly bold to speak and go on this way, because in its word it doth (as we speak) say after the Father; Sequiturque patrem quamvis non passibus equis, and follows the Fathers footsteps, though it cannot stride so wide. The hope is that that Nail will not score this Paper with dislike, whose Finger never felt the pains of carrying the Pen through so troublesome a business; and that the exercised hand in penning things of this nature will be merciful in censuring this Chronographizing of Master Fox his Story; whose parts, though belonging to the same time, are oft so far dispersed, and the same things at sundry times so frequently repeated, that it could not but be a great labour to gather them into times Method.

For whereas in the Apostles days, the Apostles with prayer and imposition of hands elected Bishops and Ministers: as James was made Bishop of Jerusalem by the Apostles, &c. as may be seen in the 4th Page of this Volume. After in the increase of the Church, the Elections of Bishops and Ministers stood by the Clergy and the People, with the consent of the chief Magistrate of the place, and thus it continued till Constantine the fourth Emperor, and after: But when Alexander the second came, he was chosen without the Emperor, and after him Hildebrand and his followers ordered the matter, that first the Emperor, secondly the Lay-people, lastly, the Clergy, for the most part were excluded. 2. Judiciary Power. For whereas in the Primitive times the Bishops debated all causes of Faith only by Scriptures, and other questions of Ecclesiastical Discipline by the Canons of ancient Councils: Now Scriptures and Councils are set aside, and all things are determined by the Popes new Decretals in his Canon Law. 3. In Collation of all Ecclesiastical Promotions. For whereas anciently, according to sacred Councils, the holy Fathers, and the common Law, Bishops, Doctors, Patrons, &c. might bestow the Benefices, &c. in their own Precinct, now the Romish Church inroadeth upon, and getteth all into her own hands and power. 4. Binding and loosing. In which what the Scripture gives generally to all the Church, Rome arrogates to her self, and she only will alone have the Keys. Whereas again, the Scriptures give authority to no Church in some things, there Rome will enlarge her self, and fit the wards of her Keys, so as she will unlock and lock those things which never came into Gods mind to allow. As, to loose and discharge Subjects from their Oath of Allegiance to their Prince; and any man from Perjury for Money; and to bind with Excommunication persons for petty matters, as breaking Parks, not ringing Bells, &c. 5. Secular power over Emperors, Kings and Civil Magistracy whatsoever, to excommunicate depose, &c. and put in others; making all subject to him. Whereas it was not so from the beginning, no not of later times; but Gregorius Magnus was subject to Mauricius, and to Phocas though a wicked Emperor. 3. The Titles and Stile of the Bishops of Rome. Anciently the word Pope was common to all Bishops (as it is common in signification, coming of pater, that is, Father.) Saint Austin being called Pope of the Council of Africa; Serome so called of Boniface, and Cyprian of others. In all which whosoever knows Saint Pauls judgment, let him suppose the clear contrary opinion, and that is the tenet of the Church of Rome ; the several differences may be coched into this one; Paul advanceth Christ, and casteth down man: The Church of Rome casteth down Christ, and advanceth man.	22.

A Chronology.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	James the younger, the Son of Aspensis , the brother of the Lord, Bishop of Hierusalem , was thrown down from the battlements of a Church, and afterward stoned, and so martyred to death. With James many more were stoned, as may be collected out of Ioseph . l. 6. 20. 8cc.	Vol. I. Page
63	Domitius Nero.		Claudius the Emperor falls into Britain, and subdued part of it to the Empire.		Mark the Evangelist martyred at Alexandria , as Reusner affirmeth. The description in general of the Ten Persecutions in the Primitive Church, under the Roman Emperors: Wherein, first, the wonderful many kinds of torments of the Christians are described by Rabanus : Secondly, the admirable patience of the tormented declared by S. Augustin . Thirdly, the infinite number of those patient tormented ones, set forth by S. Hierome and Heliodorus .	37.
67					Under this Emperor was the first of the ten Persecutions, by which (as Eusebius reports) whose Cities were filled with the dead bodies of all ages, sexes, and sorts.
69					This Nero was so wicked, that St. Hierome upon Daniel faith, he was thought to be Antichrist. For so prodigious a monster was he, more like a beast, or rather a Devil than a man, that he caused his Mother, his Brother-in-Law, his Sister, his Wife great with child, and his Instructors, Seneca and Lucan , with divers more of his own kin to be put to death. He fired Rome in twelve places, and sung the while the verses of Homere . His end, after he had reigned fourteen years, was by the Senate proclaimed an enemy to all mankind, condemning him to be drawn through the City, and to be whipped to death, for fear whereof he fled and slew himself. Under him suffered Peter and Paul for Christ, about the later end of his reign. A question moved whether St. Peter were ever at Rome . Another question concerning Paul , whether he wrote the Epistle to the Hebrews , and that to Laodicea . Paul declares the sum of that Doctrine which he preached.	34.
73		Anacletus alias Cletus. Clements.	Marius.		Vespasian was the quiet Prince that put the distinction between the first and second persecution; in that he did not proclaim Persecution against the Christians. Howbeit he with Titus destroyed the Jews for their rebelling, killing many above 1000, selling into slavery 17000, and leading 2000 in triumph, to be torn with wild beasts, and cruelly to be slain. Domitian , Brother of Titus , beginning his reign mildly, turned a blasphemous Idolater against God (commanding men to worship him) and a cruel tyrant against Christians; for by him was moved the 2d Persecution. Simon , Bishop of Hierusalem was Crucified. John the Evangelist is banished into Patmos . But after the death of Domitian , he was released under Vermax the Emperor, living to the time of Trajanus , governing the Churches of Asia , and penning his Gospel. He converted a thief. And flies out of a Bath, because wicked Cerintus was there. St. John could not (as the Papists lay) be the Virgin Maries Confessor, seeing according to them, she was without sin. Domitianus fearing the coming of Christ, commanded all that could be found of the stock of David in Jewry to be slain. Another cause inciting Persecution, was false accusation of the Christians. But however the inquisition was this, Swear the truth, whether thou art indeed a Christian . If they confessed they were, the Law condemned them for that alone. This Bishop of Rome was a martyr, and flourished as Reusner counts, Anno Christi 102.	39.
81					This Bishop of Rome was also martyr, see in the reign of Adrian Emperor. Traditions of holy water, &c. are falsely fathered on him, he flourished as Reusner will, in the year 110, in the later end of Trajanus reign.	42.
91					Saphira and Sabina , martyrs.	43.
96	Domit. anus.	Evaristus. Alexander.			Nerva with his quietness put a period of peace for one year between the second and third Persecution. Trajanus caused the third Persecution. Pliny writes to Trajan to stop the Persecution. Trajan seeks out and puts to death the stock of David . Certain Sectaries of the Jewish Nation accuse Simon Son of Mary Cleophas , that he was of the line of David , and a Christian; whereupon he was crucified; but the accusers escaped not being condemned for being (as the Emperor supposed) of the stock of David . Pbocas Bos of Pontus , mar. Sulpitius , Servilianus , Euphrosinus , Theodora , Mart. Nereus and Achilleus , Martyrs. Ignatius Mart. being devoured of wild beasts. Publius , Bishop of Athens , Martyr.
100					Under him suffered Alexander Bishop of Rome , with his two Deacons. Zenon , a Nobleman of Rome , 1260 more slain for Christ. Achaicus , Heliodorus , Theodorus , Carcerius , prime Martyrs. Eusebius , with his Wife and Children, Martyrs. Calocerius seeing the patience of Eusebius and Johanna suffering the cruel torments, cried out with these words, Vere magnus Deus Christianorum , i.e. Great is the God of the Christians, whereupon he was presently apprehended, brought to the place of their execution, and was made partaker of their Martyrdom.	45.
III					Eleutherius with his Mother Ambia , Martyrs: Iustus & Paistor , Brethren, Mart. Symphorissa with her 7 Children, Martyrs. Sophia with her three Children, Martyrs. Apologies made to the Quadratus Bishop of Athens : Emperor in behalf Aristides a Philosopher. of the Christians by Servus Granius a Nobleman.

124. 140.	Aurelius Antonius Plus.		Collus.		The success was that the Emperor writeth and slacketh the Persecution, charging that none be persecuted barely for Christianity. Hereby then began to come in the respite of peace between the third and fourth Persecution. Howbeit this Adrian understanding of the Jews rebelling, sent Julius Severus against them, who overthrow fifty two Castles in Jewry , burnt and demolished 9080 Villages, and slew fifty thousand of the Jews . After this Adrian the Emperor repaired Hierusalem , calling it Heliopolis . Adrian dies by bleeding at the nose, as he had shed Christians blood. This Emperor Antoninus reigned twenty three years, continuing that peace with the Christians he found begun in Adrians last days; for which he had the name of Pius . Yet by the peoples tumult, without the Emperors consent, some were martyred. His saying was, He had rather save one Citizen, than destroy a 1000 of his adversaries. He writes in behalf of the Christians, to the Persecutors, notable arguments to stay persecution, as being conquered by the patience of the Christians. An Edict of peace for the Christians is proclaimed at Ephesus . This quiet Emperor in life, of all other Emperors of those times, died the most quiet death.	46.
162.	M. Antoninus Verus, Who joyed with him in his Government of the Empire. M. Aurelius Commodus.				This Antoninus was studious of Philosophy, but severe against the Christians, moving the fourth persecution. He moveth much In France , see pag. 50. persecution. In Asia , where Polycarpus Bishop of Smyrna was Mart. In this persecution, Christians were whipped until their veins, arteries and bowels did appear. Germanicus , a famous Martyr for patience. Quintus a Phrygian, being rashly hardy, suffers for it. Polycarp at first by perswasion, did fly persecution, at last offered himself willingly to those that beset the house to seek him, and was martyred. Twelve Martyrs at Smyrna . —Of Polycarp s Epistle to the Philippians . Irenaeus was conversant with Polycarp , and Polycarp with the Apostles . Difference of Ceremonies brake not amity in the Primitive Church. Socrates deceived in his Tripartite story. Aetodorus Martyr. Corpus , Papilus , Agathonica , Martyr.	46.
					Felicitas with her seven Children, viz. Januarius , Felix , Philippus , Silvanus , Alexander , Vitalis , Martialis . Martyrs at Rome.	48.
					Julianus Martyr, learned in Philosophy, and godly in practise. Crescens a Philosopher, procurer of Julian s death. Praxedis and Potentina two godly Virgins, bury the bodies of the dead Martyrs, and spend their Patrimonies to relieve the living. Prolomus and Lucius , Martyrs at Alexandria in Egypt . A place in Gratians suspected. Concordus , Martyr; spiriteth in the face of the Idol. Vincentius his story suspected.	49.
					In France were many Martyrs, at Lions , and Vienna , whose History is set forth under the hands of the brethren of France , in their Letter to the brethren in Asia . Vetius Epagathus, a young man, is a courageous Martyr, unto wonderment. Ten Christians as weak as he was strong, fainting, to the great sorrow of the stronger. The Christians are accused of keeping the Feast of Thyestes , and Incest of Oedipus .	51.
					Blandina , martyr, is so patient in suffering all manner of torments, that she wearies her tormentors. Sancus , Martyr, was so able patiently to bear all mannes of torments, that none could make him answer to many questions put to him, but only this in Latin to each of them; I am a Christian . His first torments making him so swollen and scorched, that his members had lost their shape and use; the second contrary to his enemies intent restored his limbs in regard of both. Bibides , a woman Martyr, having denied Christ, returns and confesseth Christ in the midst of those torments which were inflicted to make her blaspheme Christ. Divers Martyrs strangled. Martyrs die in prison. Phorinus a Deacon, eighty years old, Martyr. A description of the comfort of confessing, and the discomfort of denying Christ. Maturus and Attalus martyred in a red hot Iron-chair, could not be made by setting them in it, to confess any thing, but what they had willingly before. Deniers of Christ return and become Confessors. Alexander a Phrygian, beckoning at the Bar to the Christians to stand to the Confession of Christ, is questioned, confesseth Christ, and is martyred. Blandina , a woman, and Perennis a youth of fifteen years old, Martyrs, could not be forced to swear, with all the witty cruelty of the tormentors.	51.

Mean while the Gospel spreads, and many Noble families in Rome adjoyne themselves to the Christians. Notwithstanding there was some persecuted in his time, for although there was a Law made by the Emperor, that none should fallly accuse the Christians upon pain of death, yet in case any Christian were once accused, the ancient Law was that none that were arraigned for profetion of Christ should be released without recantation of his opinion. Hereupon it followed, that Apollonius a Noble Senator of Rome being accused of his servant, the servant by the Law against accusers, was executed, and had his legs broken; and Apollonius himself by the Law of not dismissing accused Christians without recantation, was beheaded; because instead of making a recantation, he made an Apology of Christian belief. This Emperor, Antoninus Commodus was very skilful in casting Darts, and took great pride to be called Hercules, and to wear oft times a Lions skin, in both intimating what a Protector he was to the City, and chieftain over the people; Hercules being a Giant, and a Lion the King of Beasts. This Emperor on his birth-day, clothed in his Lions skin, and sacrificing to Hercules and Jupiter, commanding also the people to do the like, Vincencius, Peregrinus, Eusebius, Potencianus, learned men, and instructors of the people, dissuaded them: for which cause, and for that they would not sacrifice to Idols at the command of the Emperor, were with sundry devices tormented, and at last with the pressure of leaden weights, were martyred to death. Tulius with his family are baptized, and after martyred. This Xistus or Sixtus Bishop of Rome is counted the sixth Bishop after Peter. The Epistles, and in them the Ordinances fathered upon him, very probably are fallly put upon him. He sat in his Seat about nine or ten years. This Telephorus sat in the Seat eleven years, and died a Martyr. The Ordinances of Cream, of one Godfather and Godmother, of Dedications of Churches, &c. are fallly put upon him. The inflicting penance forty days upon the Priest, for letting fall one crum of the Lords-Supper: and if a drop did fall, that it should be licked up, or else the place washed or pared, &c. all which, put on this Bishop Pius by Platina, found as unlikely as they are in themselves trivial. He made a Decree of changing Easter-day from the wonted day, viz. the fourteenth day of the Moon in the first Month, to the Sunday after. This Anicetus sat in the Seat eleven years, and died a Martyr. He determined the same about Easter-day, as Pius his Predecessor had. This Soter sat in the Seat eight years: He also concludes the same order touching Easter, as Pius and Anicetus had. He sat Bishop of Rome fifteen years. His determination touching Easter is the same with his three Predecessors. See more in p. 37. in the Hist. of Victors. Divers Writers report that this Bishop of Rome sent Damianus and Eugenius at the request of King Lucius, King of England, to him into England, by whom the said King should be converted and baptized. But as they vary in time, some making this sending to be a year or two under 180, and others as much over: so is there a just difference between them, whether these were the first that transported the Christian Faith into England, some of them avouching the coming of Simon Zelotes into England, others the coming of Joseph of Arimathea first founding Christian Religion in this Isle. Heraclius

A Chronology.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	Heracles about this time began to write his Annotations and Enarrations upon the New Testament.	Vol. I. Page
					Theophilus an Ecclesiastical writer, Bishop of Cæsaria . Dionysius Bishop of Corinth , famous for learning, writes divers Epistles to several Churches. He writes to one Penitus a Bishop, Ne grave servandæ castitatis onus, &c. i.e. That he laid no yoke of necessity of keeping Chastity upon his Brethren. This Dionysius writes an Epistle of Dionysius Areopagita , declaring (as it is storied in the Acts) his Conversion by Paul , but speaks not a word of his Book De Hierarchia ; yet doth he speak more of him touching his being first Bishop of Athen . This Dionysius of Corinth doth shew us that it was the custom in his time, that the Epistles that were sent unto Congregations by learned men, should be read in the Churches in the audience of the Assemblies. Clement Alexandrinus also wrote in the time of this Emperor Commodus , whose Books some are yet extant, declaring the order and number of the Books of the New Testament. A man of these times too, was Pantenus , the first publick professor in Schools in Alexandria , occasioning by his example Christian Universities. This Pantenus for his great Learning, was sent for by Demetrius , Bishop of Alexandria , to preach to the Indians , where he finding St. Matthew's Gospel in Hebrew , left there by St. Bartholomew , brought it from thence to the Library of Alexandria . While the Christians had any respites of peace in this Commodus his time, they jangled about the celebration of Easter . Yet differing in this Ceremony, they brake not off Charity. The difference of their Easter -days. He reigned but a few months Emperor. This Severus raised the fifth Persecution, of the eighteen years of his reign, the first ten were favourable to the Christians, the other eight through false accusations of the malignant, by Proclamation drew blood upon the Christians, see Euseb. Lib. 6. about the year 205. The accusers branded them with sedition, murder, &c. with worshipping of an Ass his head, because they believed the story of Sampson slaughtering the Philistines with a Jaw-bone: and with worshipping the Sun: because before Sun-rising they met and sung Psalms, praying towards the East: But the true quarrel was their not worshipping the Roman Idols. The Captains and Officers in this Persecution were Hilarius , Vigilius , Claudius , Hormianus . The places of this Persecution were Africa , Alexandria , Cappadocia , and Carthage . The persons persecuted and martyred were, Leonides Father of Origen beheaded, with whom his son Origen , being then of seventeen years, would have suffered Martyrdom, but that his Mother by force hindred him. Origen encourageth his Father to Martyrdom, saying, Cave tibi ne quid propter nos, &c. that is, Take heed you turn not your purpose of Martyrdom for our sakes . His Father being slain, and his goods confiscate to the Emperor, he maintained himself, and mother, and her children, being in great poverty, by teaching School. He was very learned, conferring the Hebrew with the Translation of the Septuagint ; and finding out the common Translations of Aquila Symmachus and Theodotion ; adjoining to them four other Translations. His Books he penned, were by St. Hieronimus account, 7000 Volumes, which he sold for a little above three pence a piece for his relief. Plutarch , a Scholar of Origen , martyr. Serenus his Brother, a hearer also of Origen , martyr, burned. Heraclides , another hearer of Origen , martyr, beheaded. Heron , Origen 's scholar, martyred by beheading. Serenus a fifth of Origen 's scholars, martyred by beheading. Rbas and Pontamiena were tormented with pitch poured upon them, and so martyred. Marcella , mother of Pontamiena , martyred with fire. Basilides , an Officer that saw execution done upon Pontamiena , afterwards denied to give an Oath in a matter whereunto he was called, because he was to swear by the Idols, professing himself also to be turned Christian, by means of Pontamiena , who said as she went to martyrdom that she would pray that God would have mercy on him, after which she had seen a Crown put upon his head, whereupon he was martyred by beheading. Alexander by his great strength of body and grace, surviving many great torments inflicted on him for Religion, was by the repute thereof, adjoined Bishop of Jerusalem to Narcissus the former Bishop of that seat being 163 years old, and unwieldy to govern alone. Three malicious false witnesses accusing this Narcissus , confirmed it with imprecations of burning, deaths sickness, and losing both the eyes to themselves if their false accusations were not true: which being false, those several imprecations were truly executed upon them by the Lord, to each his own will. Andoclus sent by Polycarp into France for his spreading the Gospel there, was beaten with flaves and bats, and beheaded, and so martyred. Arsenius a persecuted Confessor, Bishop of Antioch . Irenæus , Bishop of Lions , Martyr; commended by Tertullian to be the greatest searcher of all kind of Learning.	59.
195.	Pertinax Severus .	This same Severus extended his Empire over Britain at this time.				60.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England.	Archbishops of Canterbury.	He as his name signifies, a man of peace, composing by his great Learning many differences, and suppressing many errors wherewith the Church in his time did swarm.	Vol. 1. Pag.
	Victor.				Not long after this Irenaeus , flourished Tertullian , an Ecclesiastical writer, commended by Vincentius Lirinensis , to be the Flower of all Latine Writers , and one that by his eloquence of style compelled assent, having in it as many sentences as words, and as many victories as sentences. To Tertullian made a singular Apology for the Christians, touching every particular false accusation, shewing the impossibility and improbability of any truth in them.	60
					This Victor is reported (though Platina saith the contrary) by Damasus , and the followers of the common Chronicles, to die a Martyr. But he moved some stir about the time of Easter , which the Apostles had left as indifferent, who by reason of their intentiveness of Preaching, gave no heed to times and days; nor did they bind the Church to any Ceremonies, saving of strangled things, and blood. Which of blood seemeth to be given to the Church, to prevent the scandal the heathen Gentiles laid upon the Christians eating blood, and so to continue only whiles the Persecutions of the heathen Gentiles continued. Also Pius , Anicetus , Soter , and Eleutherius , having changed Easter-day , from the fourteenth day of the moon in the first month, to the next Sunday after, and being opposed by Melita Bishop of Sardinia , Egeippus and Polycarp , sent by the brethren of Asia to Rome to Anicetus , to confer with him about it, and not agreeing in opinion, the learned Men of those Times, with those now named, keeping Charity, left the time of Easter , as Adaphoron , a thing indifferent in the Church till the time of this Victor . Now this Victor was so violently set upon upholding the Roman determination of his former Predecessors, as a necessary: that he would Excommunicate all the Bishops and Churches of Asia as Hereticks, unless they would be of his Opinion. Had not Irenaeus restrained him. Yet was Irenaeus , also Theophilus , Bishop of C. Sarcis , Narcissus Bishop of Jerusalem , Palmas of Pontus , Banchillus of Combric , &c. of the judgment of Victor , touching keeping Easter upon the Sunday after the fourteenth of the Moon in the first month, for these two Reasons: First, because they would differ as much as might be from the Jews; Secondly, because the Resurrection of the Lord fell on the same day. On the contrary opinion were divers Bishops in Asia , chiefly Polycrates Bishop of Ephesus , alledging Scripture, the example of some of the Apostles, and custom of other Fathers. But Irenaeus still took off the edge of sharp Contentions; and so the Controvercie remained free till the time of the Nicene Council. And other Doctors of Christian liberty were free till Victor's time, about Anno 200.	62
203		Zephyrus.			The two Epistles in the first Tome of the Councils, ascribed upon this Zephyrus Bishop, may justly be suspected to be fained. And that those and other ordinances spoken of before, were invented by some to advance the Papacy, and naming them with the names of those Fathers. The same we may think of the patins of Glass ascribed to the said Zephyrus . For that time of his sitting Bishop, some Writers make it 8, some 16, some 17 years. The most agree between 17 and 18.
	Bassianus.		This same Bassianus extends his Empire over England.		This Emperor Severus invades England , he calls up a Ditch of 120 miles, from Sea to Sea, beginning at Time , and reaching to the Scottish Sea . He removing thence to York , was there by the Northern men and Scots besieged and slain.	62
214					Severus leaving behind him two Sons, Bassianus and Geta , Bassianus slays Geta , and governs the Empire alone about six years, and then was slain of his next Successors.
219	Macrinus with his son Diadumenus. Varius Hellogabalus.				These two, Mac , and Diad , having Reigned one year, were slain of their own people.
					This Hellogabalus affected pomp in his life exceedingly; burning balm for oyl in his Lamps, filling his Fish-ponds with rose-water, wearing apparel of gold, and most costly silks, shoes set with precious stones, feeding himself with variety of dishes every second day, furnished with whatsoever was rarest and dearest; He affected too a pompous death, providing (in case his wicked life should make his enemies besiege him) swords of gold, silken ropes, cups of Jacinths to hold poyson, pavements of precious stones, wherewith to stab, hang, poyson and brain himself. He affected Lust as well as Pride, having 600 chariots of bauds and harlots to attend him in his progress. He was slain of his Souldiers, being an enemy to all honesty, and advancer only of base ones.	63
224	Aurel. Alex. Severus.				This Severus was adopted by Hellogabalus , being without Issue. He was learned, and in his actions constantly advised by his Senate; he so hated bribed Judges, that he would vomit when he saw them; and was ready with his two fingers to put out their eyes. He dismissed all idle and needless servants from his Court. He favored the Christians, saying of a place where they did meet for good Duties, which the Cooks and Tiplers would have taken from them, It was fitter for Gods service, than the use of Scullians, and so restored it to the Christians. Observe hence, that as yet there were no Christian Churches in Rome .
					He put to death Therinus with smoke, for taking many of People, to get for them the Emperors favor, which he, lying, boasted he had at command; The Cryer proclaiming at his execution, Smoke be sold, and smoke he is punished with.	63

A Chronology.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	His mother Mammea hearing of Origen's fame, sent for him from Alexandria , to hear him, who came to her and the Emperor her son. Though he favored the Christians, yet some were martyred in his time, as Historians affirm, giving this reason: That by him no Proclamation was set forth for the safety of the Christians.	Vol. I. Pag.
227		Calixtus.			The persons persecuted under him they reckon to be, Calixtus martyred. Many Ordinances of the Fast of Ember-week , of not accusing Bishops, &c. fully put upon him. Urbanus Martyred. His Epistle decretal of Church-goods, Confirmations, &c. may justly be thought to be feigned. Tiburtius and Valerianus , Converts of Urbanus , and Noble men of Rome , Martyred. Cecilia , wife of Valerianus , a great confinner of him and his brother Tiburtius , and a means of the Baptizing of 400 persons (as the story reports) Martyred. Agapetus of fifteen years, who could neither be made to sacrifice to Idols, nor be killed with whips, hot water poured upon him, or wild Beasts, was by Beheading Martyred.	64
236		Pontianus.			The Executioner of this Agapetus , named Antiochus , in the executing of this Martyr, fell down from his Seat, crying, That his inward Bowels burned within him, and so dyed. Many more (as Authors affirm) as well of the Senate and chief of Rome , as others were martyred under this Emperor, and their Heads were hanged over the City gates, to terrise others from the profession of Christ. Alberic , as touching the time of these fore-named Martyrs, I suppose they suffered rather under Maximinus or Decius , than under Alexander .
237	Maximinus.				This Emperor Maximinus , was chosen Emperor rather by the wilfulness of the Soldiers, than the will of the Senate. He caused the sixth Persecution, especially against the Teachers, hoping that when they were smitten, the Sheep would soon be scattered. And therefore it is the more likely that Urbanus , and the rest above-named in the former persecution, suffered rather under this Maximinus , than under that Alexander .
240	Gordianus.				Origen , under this Emperor, wrote his Book De Martyria . Pontianus the Bishop of Rome banished. This Gordianus was a learned and quiet Prince, and governed with much peace.	65
					Pontianus the Bishop of Rome dyes. His Epistles decretal, touching the hyperbolical dignifying of the Clergy, probably are feigned. At this time were raised in the Church other famous Fathers, as, Phileas Bishop of Antioch . Zacharias Bishop of Antioch . Ammonius the School-master of Origen , who wrote divers Books in defence of Christian Religion: and continued himself in the Profession thereof. Julius Africanus , who was (as Nicephorus writes) a Scholar of Origen , and a great Writer of Histories.
		Anterius.			Natalius , who had suffered as a good Confessor, much persecution, but being hired with promise of being a Bishop, and by money, viz. 150 pieces of Silver every month, he turned to be of the Sect of Theodotus . But being much afflicted by the Lord, he repenting, returned to the Christian Congregation, and was received.
					Eusebius saith, That because this Bishop of Rome , Anterius did cause the lives and deaths of Martyrs to be written, that he himself was Martyred by Maximinus the Judge.
246	Philippus the first Christian Emperor.				Hippolytus a Bishop, a great Writer, Eusebius and Hierome mentioning his Books, and a Martyr, by being drawn with wild Horses through the Thickets.
250	Decius				Gordianus Emperor, is slain; Philip Emperor, after him. This Philippus Emperor, took to himself his Son Philip assistant in governing. This Philippus , with his Son and all his Family, being converted by Fabianus and Origen , were Baptized: And howsoever Pomponius Letus writes, he was a dissembling Prince; this is certain, that for Religions sake, he and his Son were slain by Decius one of his Captains.
		Fabianus.			This Decius Emperor, moves the seventh Persecution, which was a most terrible one, because, besides Philippus his Christianity, he had committed his Treasure to Fabian the Bishop.
					This Bishop Fabian was a married Man, and chosen Bishop, as Eusebius reports, by the lighting of a Dove upon his head, as he stood among the Assembly met to choose a Bishop of Rome . He was Martyred by Decius . The Ordinances of burning the old oyl, and consecrating new once a year; of not Marrying within the fifth Degree, &c. may justly be suspected of feigning.
					To this Fabian wrote Origen de Orthodocia fidei sue , that is, Of the righteousness of his Faith.
					Origen living to this Decius , suffered under him many bands, torments, rackings, &c. for Religion. After all which, being brought by the Officers to the Altar, whereon lay an Ethiop , and commanded to Sacrifice to the Idol, or else he should have his Body defiled by the Ethiop ; he chose rather to Sacrifice, for which he was Excommunicated of the Church; and for his calling upon the Christians to carry those Boughs which he had in his hand, in honor to Christ, which the Heathen used to honor their gods withal, was by the Church of Alexandria removed from their Communion, and so departed thence for shame to Jenny . Where being impo	rtuned

This Dionysius writes of Heracles thus, Hunc ego, &c. that is, This Canon I received from blessed Heracles our Pope. Yet observe, that this Heracles was no Bishop of Rome. Nicephorus saith of this Persecution, that it was as easie to number the lands, as the Martyrs under this Decius. The more famous were these, Asclepiades Bishop of Antioch, a persecuted Confessor under Severus, dyes a Martyr under Decius. Babylas Bishop of Antioch, for not suffering the Emperør, having committed a Murder, to enter into the Christians Temple, was martyred. Being buried in the Temple of Apollo; he causeth the Oracle that was there to cease. Whereupon his Body was taken up again. Babylas Bishop of Nicomedia, Martyr. Forty Virgins in the City of Antioch. Martyrs in Phrygia. Confessors at Babylon carryed to Spain to be Martyred. Divers Martyred in Cappadocia. Divers Martyred in Perjide. Many Martyred at Alexandria. A Sooth-sayer was a great stirrer up of this Persecution (being a great friend to Idolatry) by whose means the multitude was so incraged against them that would not sacrifice to their Idols, that they stoned Metræ a Christian Priest, and dragged Quinta a godly Woman through the streets, and killed her. They went into Christians Houses, and took away their goods of price, and burned the rest in the Market-place. Apollonia a Martyr, had her teeth dasht out. And being threatend with a fire made before her to burn her, unless she would commit Idolatry, she voluntarily leaped into the fire. Difention among the Persecutors, turned Persecution for a time from the Christians upon themselves. Revolters being perswaded to Sacrifice to the Idols, come trembling, as if they themselves should be Sacrificed. A Souldier taking part with the Christians against them that rail at them, is Martyred for the same. Ammonarian was tormented for telling the Judge she would not yield to his wicked commands for any torments he would inflict. Which she accordingly performed; and the Judge was ashamed to be overcome of a Woman. Knights and Warriors standing by the Tribunal, where the Martyrs were condemned, made signs to the fearful, imboldning them to Confession and Martyrdom. They being espied, and about to be questioned, pressed in to the Bench, professed Christ, and were Martyred. Cheremon a married Bishop, fled with his Wife in this Persecution in the Mountain of Arabia, and was never seen more. Dionysius charged by Germanus Bishop, for flying in Persecution, cleareth himself, calling God to witness, that he regarded not his life, but the Souldiers that kept him, leaving him through a fear, by the shreeking of some not far off, he was left alone, and escaped. Christophorus, of twelve cubits high, as Writers report, was martyred in this Persecution; whether he be that Christophor of whom the speech goes, he carryed Christ, &c. it is uncertain. Abundance in this Persecution wandred in Mountains, and were starved, or devoured of Beasts. A Souldier out-facing all threats to draw him to Idolatry, is by the Pretor put into a soft bed in a pleasant Garden of Lillies and Roses, and a beautiful Harlot sent in to him with Imbracements, enticing him to Adultery. But he bites off his tongue whiles she was kissing him, and spit it in her face, and rejected her wicked offers. Theodora Virgin, for refusing to sacrifice to Idols, was adjudged to the stews. A Christian Souldier going thither, as if (as the people hoped) he would have been one of them that would have abused her, changed his habit for hers, he sending her to escape, and staying there himself to dye in her stead; who being condemned, Theodora to release him, declares her self to be the right party. The Pretor cutting off their hands, burns both him and her. Nicomachus in his torments renouncing his Christianity, and offering Sacrifice to the Idols, was, when he was released, taken estions with a wicked Spirit, throwen on the ground, that he bit off his tongue, and so died. Many more examples there were in this Persecution of Gods Judgments on revolters. Upon these revolters rose first the Heresie of Novatus, viz. that revolters for fear of Torments, might not be reconciled nor admitted to the Church, though they repented. This Novatus makes three Bishops drunk, that they might Ordain him Bishop of Rome against Cornelius the then lawfull Bishop of that See.

A Chronology.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	Upon these two Bishops of Rome set up together, doth Cyprian so much write of Unity and one Bishop, and not otherwise is he to be understood as any way to speak for a Pope.	Vol. 1. Page.
255		Cornelius.			A Synod is held at Rome against this upstart Bishop, Novatus. This Cornelius is highly commended of Cyprian for his worthiness, of Hierome for his eloquence, and of others for his Martyrdom. Hence conceive all the trivial Decretals to be fained.
	Gallus and Volusianus his son reign together.				This most Tyrannical Decius having reigned a very short time, viz. between two or three years, was slain of the Barbarians.	72.
					After Decius his death God sent a Pestilence on the Empire of ten years continuance. In it the Christians visited each other, though Infection did kill the Visitors next in short space. But the Gentiles being cruelly uncharitable, neglected their Brethren, being sick, and cast out their dead Bodies to the dogs.	73.
					Upon this Pestilence, Cyprian wrote his Book, De Mortalitate.
					Gallus and Volusianus succeed by Treason next to Decius, and reign but a short time for their persecuting. Gallus letting forth Decrees for Persecution, banishing many Bishops and Pastors from their Flocks, condemning others to the Metall-mines.
256		Lucius.			To this time I refer the banishment of Cyprian, he being then Bishop of Carthage. Who in his absence from his Flock by this Exilement, made supply by his many excellent Letters, which are yet in a great part extant.	73.
					This Lucius was also banished under these two Co-Emperors. This Lucius is said to Ordain, That two Priests, with three Deacons, should always be with a Bishop to witness his conversation; which Order may be very good and useful. But it seems not to agree to Lucius his time, wherein there was not such Greatness of Bishops to retain and maintain such Retinue; nor such freedom from Persecution, as that they durst be seen openly abroad. Other Ordinances put upon him are suspected of faining.
		Stephanus.			This Bishop is said by many Authors to dye a Martyr. Many Decrees fattered upon him: but they are feigned.
					These two Roman Emperors reigning covertly together, were very courteous to the Christians, by reason whereof, and the greatness of the Pestilence in the Empire, Persecution was extinguished for some two or three years, in so much that the Emperors Court was full of Christians. But after Valerian having an Egyptian a chief Ruler of the heathen Synagogue, and chief of the Inchanters, being hindered by the Christians Prayers from his feats and charms, complaining and incensing thereupon the Emperors, the said Valerian was moved by him to move the eighth persecution.
259	Valerianus and his son Gallienus.				Cyprian adds in his fourth Book, and fourth Epistle, certain causes on the Christians part of this Persecution; viz. The sins and dissensions of the Christians.
					Finally, That wicked Accusers caused this Persecution, by accusing the Christians of being the causes of the evils of Famine, Pestilence, &c. on the Empire.	75.
					Against all these Cyprian writes an eloquent Apology, entituled, Contra Demetrianum, as Tertullian had done before, Contra Scapulam.
					In the time of this Persecution was Cyprian Martyred, whose name was alias Statius, whose Country was Carthage in Africa. Who was made first a Priest, then the Bishop of Carthage. He was very careful of the afflicted Brethren, a great reader of Tertullian, and a man that had many godly Visions, as of future Persecutions, &c. At last, refusing to offer to Idols, this Persecution took off his Head, and crowned him with Martyrdom. For the excellent Sentences penned by him, his Books tell the World of them sufficiently. He had his blemishes, as other Fathers were not free (though the Papists fault is to make too much of every thing.) Origen had something that the Church now holds not. Polycarp. observed Easter after the Jews custom. Ignatius makes fasting on the Sabbath as bad as killing Christ. Irenaeus held that man was not made perfect in the beginning, and seems to defend Free-will. Tertullian is noted for a Chilsaß, and a Montanian. Justin seems to incline to Chilsaßm, to the opinion of Angels falling by concupiscence of Women, and to the Doctrine of Free-will. And this Cyprian held contrary to the Church, Re-baptizing of Infants Baptized by Hereticks; whereupon fell great contention between him and Stephanus Bishop of Rome.	76. 77. 78.
					Besides this Cyprian, there was a second, who of an Idolater, and a practiser of Magick, was converted to a Christian, made a Priest and Bishop of Antioch, of which he was a native Citizen, and after was Martyred under Dioclesian. Lastly, a third Cyprian, long after both these, there was in the time of the Emperor Julius Apostata.
					This Bishop of Rome is in this Persecution Martyred with six Christians, for being Christians.
		Xistus the second, alias Sixtus the second.			Lawrence, in this Persecution was Martyred, between whom and Xistus the Bishop, was love and words, as between the dearest Father and Son, especially when he saw Xistus going to Martyrdom. This Lawrence was a virtuous Levite, a Minister of the Sacraments, and a Disturber of the Churches riches. Whereupon the covetous Emperor demanding where he had bestowed the same, after three days respite gotten of the Emperor for answer, he brings the poor, saying, These are the precious Treachery of the Church. The Emperor conceiving himself mocked in this Answer,	79.

					swer, commands Lawrence to be tormented to death, by pinching him with fiery Tongues, girding him with burning Plates, laying him on the iron Grate or Grid-iron red hot, roasting, broiling, toasting and turning him. In the suffering of all which, this is all that Lawrence said, This side is now roasted enough, turn up, O Tyrant great. And see whether roasted or raw thou think'st the better meat. By this suffering of Lawrence, thus patiently suffering death in so great tortments, a Roman Soldier was converted, desiring to be baptised; thereupon he was martyred. Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, with certain brethren, was banished in this Persecution to Cephro, for not worshipping the Heathen Gods, and proving that there was one only true God whom they ought to worship. In this Persecution were Martyred, Men, old and young, Women, Wives and Maids, and young simple innocents. Eusebius the Deacon, notwithstanding his many persecutions, lived, ministering to the living fettered Confessors, and burying the dead Martyrs, and after was made Bishop of Laodicea, and after died in peace, about the year 268. In Cæsarea Palestine suffered Martyrdom, Priscus, Malchus, and Alexander, who became Martyrs by seeing the Christian courage of others Martyred. In the City of Carthage at this time were martyred 300. In Simela of Italy Pontius was Martyred by being first hanged on the Rack, then cast to the wild Beasts, then these not hurting him, was cast too into the fire, of which, as Vincentius saith, being not hurt, he was last of all beheaded and cast into the flood: His tormentors were so vexed after with spirits, that they bit off their tongues and died. Bergomensis is here to be reprov'd, for writing in his 8th Book in the story of this Emperor Valerianus, that Philippus was Bishop of Alexandria, and beheaded under the same Valerian, which is clean contrary to approved Authors, and the course of time. At this time was one Philippus made President of Alexandria, who had a Daughter named Eugenia, of rare beauty, who to avoid Marriage with a Pagan and Heathen Persecutor, fled from her Father, going in Mans Apparel, calling her self Eugenius, and for her parts was made Head of a Society of Christians, where a lustful Matron being enamoured with her beauty, supposing her to be a man, laboured to draw her to uncleanness with her; but Eugenia not consenting, this Matron accuseth Eugenia to have laboured to deflower her; whereupon the matter was brought before Philippus the President, who according to allegations, being about to condemn her to death, Eugenia, seeing no other evidences would serve, discovered her self to Philippus, to be an innocent, a Woman, and his Daughter, and so was restored and received of Philippus as an innocent and a Daughter, who not long after converted her Father to Christianity, who after died also a Martyr, and after his death Eugenia returning to Rome was also martyred. In the 6th year of Valerianus and Galerius were Victor and Victorinus, having been imprisoned three years, martyred. Fructuosus Bishop of Tarracoma in Spain, with his two Deacons, Argurinus, and Eulogius were martyred at this time in the fire, for calling Idols dumb gods of flocks, and professing his worship, and opinion of the true God. It is reported by some that a Soldier saw the Heavens opened over them as they were in the fire, receiving them, a Soldier and the persecuting Presidents Daughter beholding the same. This Emperor Valerian having thus persecuted the Church, two of the seven years that he had reigned, he was taken in War by the King of Persia, and made his block to take Horse to his dying day. Claudius his persecuting President was so vexed with the Devil, that he bit off his tongue and died. Galerius the son of Valerian, for his part in persecuting, had many Earthquakes, and 30 Rebellions moved in his Empire. Whereupon he mitigated Persecution, yet some were somewhat troubled. His Father reigned seven years together with him; and he reigned nine alone, somewhat more quietly. The Ordinances put on that Dionysius are feigned. Some say he was Bishop 9 years, others 6 years and 2 Months. This Claudius was also a quiet Emperor. He reigned about two years. This Emperor was also quiet. He continued but seventeen days. This Aurelianus begins mildly, but anon after moves the ninth Persecution. In his mild time there was a Council of Christians at Antioch, he seeming not to be against it or them. In the beginning of his Tyranny, he makes his entrance into bloud with the death of his Sisters Son. As he was about to seal an Edict for Persecution, he was so terrified with Thunder and Lightning, that it stopped his Tyranny. About the fifth or sixth year of his Reign he was slain. This Emperor Tacitus reigned but six Months. This Florian reigned but sixty days.

Anno Christi	Roman Emper.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	In the first year of this Probus was Felix Bishop, who died a Martyr. This Emperor Probus was a quiet Prince, and an enemy to idle soldiers; keeping his soldiers to diligent labour; whereupon his soldiers slew him, having reigned about six years.	Vol. 1. Page
280	Mar. Au.	Felix
281	Probus .	Eutichianus .
284	Carus with his sons Carinus and Numerianus .				This Carus warring against the Persians was slain with lightning. Numerianus immoderately lamenting for his Father, by much weeping made his eyes sore, whereby he being constrained to keep within doors, was slain of Aper his Father-in-law, which Aper would answer, when any asked for Numerian , that he kept private because of his sore eyes. Thus was he justly slain by Aper , who had slain godly Cyrius for refusing to admit him an Idolater into the Christians Temple.	84
285	Aper usurps the Empire.	Caius who was martyred in the 10th Persecution.			These two Car. and Num. being slain in the East parts; Carinus the other Son reigned alone in Italy , with much wickedness. At last the Army set up Dioclesian to be Emperor, and the Tribune slays Carinus , whose Wife Carinus had deiled. Thus these three Car. Num. and Carin. reigned not above three years.
289					Thus the Church had much peace all this while, till the 19th year of Dioclesian : For The Church being in peace with the Heathens, dissent within her self, and lying still, gathers corruption; anon therefore to quiet and purge her in her self, Gods just wisdom sends them more Persecution, the tenth time.
290	Dioclesian he chooseth Maximianus fellow Emperor with him.		Carausius alias Ceraufus .		This Dioclesian being nominated (as we said) to be Emperor, and being told by Druas his Concubine, he must slay a Bore before he could be Emperor, he runs with his sword upon Aper , for that, as he said, he had unjustly slain Numerian , and so slays him, and comes fully to the Crown.
296			Alektus .		As Dioclesian for the troublousness of the Empire had joynd to him Maximian ; so these two chose to them Galerius and Constantius } Cesars under them.
304		Marcellinus who was cited up, made to appear, and condemned by the Council of Simugst , Martyr. Marcellus Martyr. Eusebius Martyr. Miltiades Martyr.	Asclepiodatus . Ceilus .		About the nineteenth year of this Dioclesian , doth he begin the tenth Persecution, which lasted ten years together, exceeding the rest in length and sharpness. His first act in this Tragedy (after the above said peaceable preface) was to pull down the Christian Churches to the ground, to burn the Scriptures, and displace all Magistrates that would not abjure Christianity.	85
					The second Act was to assay by all possible torments, to make Bishops and Elders to sacrifice to Idols.
					In the third act he comes to the common Christians; but first begins in his Camp, where many of his soldiers valiantly and voluntarily died to be soldiers of Christ, under the colours of Martyrdom. An infinite number of others were martyred. Nay, the very places and torments where and wherewith they were martyred, arise to a mighty multitude.	86
					At Nicomedia , a Christian, a Nobleman born, seeing the Edict of the Emperor set up for Persecution, takes it down, and tears it, the two Emperors being in the City, for which he was miserably tormented.
					Dioclesian tyrannizeth in the East, and Maximianus in the West.
					Serena , the Wife of Dioclesian the Emperor, is martyred for Christianity. 20000 Martyrs burned together in one Church.	86
					Martyrs in Phrygia are burnt with the whole City.
					Divers in this Persecution were martyred in France , in Spain , Britany , so that in these Countries some Rivers were coloured with the blood of Christians.	87
					Eusebius an eye-witness of torment-Martyrdom executed on divers in Thebaid , and of tormentors wearied with exercising cruelty on the invincible patience of Christians, singing Psalms in torment to the last gasp.
					Marcellinus revolts, anon he repents, and dyes a Martyr.	88
					An hundred Martyrs slain at once in one day, of men, women and children.
					17000 Martyrs in one month slain.
					300 Martyred at one time in Alexandria .
					Mauritius the Captain, with 6666 of his soldiers martyred.
					Victor with 360 martyred.
					Christians increase in persecution.	88
305					Dioclesian and Maximinian , tired with persecuting, give up their Empire, and lead a private life, having reigned about one and twenty years, or near upon.
	Maximinus and Constantius .		This Constantius extends his Empire over England.		These two, Maximinus and Constantius before Cesars , now become Emperors; Maximinus in the East, and Constantius in the West.
					Maximinus chooseth his Sons Maximinus and Severus Cesars under him.
					Constantius chooseth Constantinus his Son Cesar under him.
309	Maxentius set up by the soldiers.				Against this Maxentius thus set up by the soldiers, Maximinus sent his Son Severus , which Severus being slain; he chose Licinius Cesar in his room.
					These thus set up, some to be Emperors, viz. Maximinus , Constantius , Maxentius , and the rest as Cesars , continued the decennial Persecution, after Dioclesian and his Partner had given over. Saving that Constantius , and especially his Son Constantinus were kind to the Christians.

311		Silvester the First.		Constantine seeming to be willing to most advance those that at a certain appointed solemnity, would most readily offer Sacrifice, and thereby according to his desire, discovering who were Heathenish Idolaters, and who Christians, he commending the Christian refusers and deriders of that idolatry, chose them for his Court, banished the others from him, as unfit for his service, that were Traitors to God.	90
				Contrariwise, Maximinus was very wicked in idolatry and cruelty; where God struck him with a swelling and Fistula in the belly and secret parts; which putrifying, brake out with swarms of Lice, with such a stink, that his Physician could not endure the stink; wherefore he was slain of this Maximinus. But by anguish of his Disease, he slack'd Persecution, as being conscious, and accordingly making confession that his persecuting had brought this upon him; and so acknowledging his offences to God.	91
				The Infidels themselves extol the only true God of the Christians. Anon, by the wicked device of Theotecnus an Enchanter, bringing the Christians out of credit with the Emperor, and of Praefectus Castrorum, who got certain Women to say in writing, that once they were Christians, and what lascivious acts they knew the Christians did upon the Sundays; the Emperor was incensed to let up Decrees of fresh persecution, in brass, whereby many Bishops and others were martyred.	92
				Upon this followed great Famine and Pestilence on the Heathen; to whom the Christians then shewed great relief, when the Heathens forsook each other.	93
				By this some peace came again to the Church; Maximinus revoking his brazen Decrees, and punishing his Enchanters that incensed him against the Christians.
				Maximinus pretending to ask aid of Constantinus, to depose wicked Maxentius his Son, set up by the Soldiers to be Emperor (as we said) but intending indeed to slay Constantinus (for Maximinus would have him returned the Empire) was slain by Constantine's Officers. Hang'd as some say.
				Maxentius this while goes on his wicked tyrannical reign, at Rome, murdering Hostages to be naught with their Wives: so that one Gentlewoman, her Husband being slain, slew her self to avoid his ravishing of her.	93
				Constantine, intreated of the Romans, came against Maxentius for his wickedness, warring upon him; and upon a Bridge made of Boats over Tiber (which Maxentius made to intrap and drown Constantine) was Maxentius intrapped and drowned.	94
				Constantine sets forth Decrees of favour to the Christians.
				Licinius feigningly joins with Constantine in that act; for at the first there was great familiarity between them, Licinius marrying Constantine's Sister. But all Licinius his love was feigned, who, as he was an enemy to learning, calling it payson; and an enemy to honesty, loving all base vices; so he was an enemy to Constantine secretly (plotting against his person) and to the Christians, because he said that they prayed for Constantine, and not for him. And so he banished some Christians from his Court, and as covertly as he could, for Constantine persecuted divers Bishops and other Christians, very sorely, for about six years.	96
				For these things, at last, Constantine and he join Battel, and after many Battels, wherein still Licinius was beaten, at last was slain.
				Anno 324.
				Constantine the good Emperor, the Father of Constantine died a natural death, and was buried at York.
				Dioctlesian died (as some write) by his own poison. Others say with sorrow of Constantine's prospering.
				About the time of this Persecution was St. Alban, who was the first that I find that suffered Martyrdom in this Kingdom.	98
				Romanus, a rare Martyr, suffered at this time, who said, that so many wounds as he had, so many mouths he had to praise God.
				A very young Child is a Confessor of Christ's God-head, and is martyred, the Mother rejoicing in the same.	99
				Menas, a famous Martyr, in the midst of great torments, cried out, that there was nothing to be compared to the Kingdom of Heaven.	100
				Martyrs put in a cold Pond all a Winters night.
				A Schoolmaster martyred by his Scholars. The Story is in Verse.	101
				Eulalia, a singular Martyr, in the midst of other torment praised God.	102
				A place of Plaisure confuted.	103
				Great Persecution there was in Persia, where were slain sixteen thousand Martyrs.	109
				Constantinus writes to the King of Persia in behalf of the Christians.
				Also he sets forth Edicts in his own Kingdom, of all peace and liberty (the Persecutors being now vanquished) and sets up Schools, prescribes Prayers, establisheth Religion, &c. in his Empire; conferring many privileges upon the Clergy.

In the time of this Vortiger, the Picts and Scots spoiled this Land, that Vortiger was fain to crave aid of the Saxons; which Saxons, at last growing strong, began to subdue the Land to themselves. Whereupon the Britains complained to Vortigern against the repairing of so many Saxons. But he not hearkning to them, was after seven years reign depolled by them, and Vortimer his Son is chosen King in his room, as followeth in the Table.
447			Saxon Kings begin to invade, and prepare for the setting up in England their Saxonish Hierarchy.	Vortimerus.	This Vortimer in some good measure suppresseth the Saxons. At length he was poisoned of his stepmother, having reigned six years.
454				Vortigernus, also Vortigernus.	Then the said Vortigern, before depolled, having again obtained this Kingdom, Hengiſtus enters it with abundance of Saxons. And when he saw the Britains too strong for him, he concluded peace with them; and under that covert, works Treason, slaying the Barons at Salisbury Plain; and thereby took the King Prisoner: And so in this Kingdom of England began the Kingdoms of the Saxons, until they came to seven Kingdoms, all Saxonish. Yet so, as though the Britains were thus deceived of their Land by the Saxons, the Britains were not utterly driven out, but that a certain Kingdom remained amongst them in some part of the Land; namely, about Cornwall and the parts of Cambria, which is divided into two parts, viz. South-Wales, called Demetia; and North-Wales, called Venedoea. Yea, many time the Britains did win upon the Saxons, till the time of Carecun; at which time the Britains were utterly vanquished out of Britain to Wales by Gormundus, whom they themselves lent for out of Ireland for their help.

				Aufim , of a Monk, by Gregory his Pall made Archbishop of Canterbury: After he had baptized a great part of Kent , he made two Archbishops, by the command of the said Gregory, viz. the Archbishop of London, and the Archbishop of York.
				This Aufim chargeth the said Bishops to assist in preaching to the English men, and that Reformation should be made in the Scottish and British Churches, in divers things; particularly, to change their time of Easter, to the custom of Rome: But the Scots and Britains utterly refused to change their custom.
				Aufim was so proud, that he would not bow to seven Bishops, and one Archbishop, coming to a Council at his command; whereupon the said Bishops and Archbishop was so perverse, that they denied to assist him to convert the Idolatrous Saxons. A great fault on both sides.	132
				Aufim baptized (as Authors say) 10000 in one day, viz. the Feast of Christs Nativity. Observe, Fonts were not then in use; nor were there many Trinkets used about Baptism, as now at Rome; else Aufim could not have baptized so many in one day.
604			2. Lawrenti- us.	Aufim fate some fifteen years Archbishop. He ordained Lawrence Arch- bishop.

				About this time departed Gregory Bishop of Rome, of whom it is said, he was the best of all his Predecessors, and the best of all his successors.
				About this time died David, Archbishop of Cairleon.
				About this time was Job, Patriarch of Alexandria: who of a hard spar- ing man became bountiful in Hospitality to the poor. He would twice a Week sit all the day at his Door, to take up matres, and make unity where was any variance. He lamented much one day because none came that day to him, as having done no good. But his Deacon persuaded him rather to joy, that he had brought the City into that good order, that there needed no reconciliation.	133
610				He was a malicious detractor of Gregory and his works. He continued scarce two years.
				See Page 173 of the great Volume.
	Sabinia- nus.		3. Mellitus.	He did more hurt in his one year being Bishop, than Gregory could do good in many. He obtained of Phocas the wicked Emperor, that he and his successors in that See should have an universal head-ship over all the Churches in Christendom.
	Bonifacius the third.			This Boniface the Fifth sent Letters and Presents to K. Edwin of Northumber- land, a Pagan, to win him to the faith.	134
	Boniface 5.		4. Julfus.	Julfus ordained Paulinus Archbishop of York. Of him see also Page 173 of the great Volume.	134
627				K. Edwin being wounded by Treason with a Sword, was thereupon moved to cause that his Daughter should be baptized, and twelve more of his Family, in token that he also would be christened, as he promised to Christ, if he should give him Victory in Battel over the King of the West Saxons. But when he had the Victory, he ne- glected his promise, excusing himself, that he might not clearly deny his old Law which his Forefathers had kept so long, and sud- denly be christened without authority and advice of his Council. But by preaching of Paulinus, the first Archbishop of York, he left his Mahometry. At last by Paulinus his earnest prayers to God, and pressing the King with his promise, he received the faith, and was baptized with many of his Subjects with him. After this the said Paulinus baptized daily many multitudes. And great peace was throughout the Kingdom, so that a Woman laden with Gold might have gone quietly.
				Of Honorius Archbishop, see Page 173 of the great Volume.
634			5. Honorius.	Six years after Edwin's Baptism (who brought in the faith in the North parts) was he slain in Battel by Cedwalla the British King and by wicked Penda King of the Mercians, in the Field called Hat- field.	135
				Edwin being dead, and Cedwalla with his Britains and wicked Pen- da with his idolatrous Mercians, spoiling the Country, Paulinus, with the Queen Edelburg, was fain to fly by water into Kent, where Paulinus was Bishop of Rochester nineteen years: No Bi- shop being in Northumberland for thirty years after. But Pauli- nus had left James, a godly Deacon, who preached and baptized many, till peace and the former condition of that Country re- turned.
				By means of Edwin, Erpwaldus King of the East-angles, was reduced to Christs Faith.

These two being first Christened in Scotland, after being Kings returned to their Idolatry, and so the year following were both slain by Cedwalla and Penda. After whom succeeded Ofwaldus, ruling both Provinces, Deira and Bernicia; whom when Cedwalla and Penda thought to slay also, he being smaller in number, cried to God in prayer, to help him, for the salvation of his people, against those two enemies, and so in the field called Denesbury, he conquered Cedwalla and Penda. This Ofwald did disdain not to expound and preach the Gospel to his people. By this Ofwald's means, Kimigilsus, King of West Saxons was converted, through the preaching of Berinus, who was sent by Pope Honorius into England to preach; which Berinus was made Bishop of Dorchester, by whom Kimigilsus was baptised. Kimigilsus made the same day, the same Ofwaldus to be both his Godfather and his Son-in-law. Ofwald, having reigned nine years is slain by Penda. Penda is slain by Ofwie the Brother of Ofwald, King after him in the Kingdom of Northumberland. The K. rebuking him for parting with that choice Horse, when other meaner might have served the Begger; the Bishop replied, Doſt thou, O King, ſet more by an Horſe, the foal of an Horſe, than by the Son of Mary, yea, the Son of God? At which words the King fell at his feet, promiſing never after to gainſay any charity he ſhould ſhew. Benedict or Benet, ſurnamed B. (who brought up Bede from ſeven years old, all his life in learning) a Nobleman, and in great favour with King Ofwie, left all honour and preferment to ſerve Chriſt; and ſuſtained the Kingdom with good Books fetched from Rome. Theodore.	ing born of the Virgin Mary, by the power of God, without mans seed, and at last was taken up to Heaven, but was not slain, but another in his likeness for him; with many other wicked blasphemies in his Law contained. At length this Kingdom of the Saracens began to be conquered of the Turks, and in process of time wholly subdued unto him, as we shall declare in the years following, in which those several passages were done. This Theodore was sent from Italy into England, by Vitelianus the Pope, to be Archbishop of Canterbury, and divers other Monks of Italy to set up here in England, Latin-service, Masses, and such other Romish ware. This Theodore plays Rex, displacing Ceddus and Wilfrid, Archbishops of York, pretending they were not lawfully Consecrated; notwithstanding they were sufficiently authorized by their Kings, and were placed against their wills. In the time of this Theodore, a Synod was held at Thetford, ordaining that Easter should be kept throughout the Realm upon one certain day, vizc. Prima 14. Luna mensis primi. That no Bishop should meddle in anothers Diocess. That Monasteries should be free from Bishops Jurisdiction. That Monks should not stray from their own Monastery to another: Nor a Clergy-man from his own Bishop to anothers Diocess. That Synods Provincial should be kept in the Realm at least once a year; with divers other Ordinances of like nature. In the next year after that Synod, was held the sixth General Council at Canstane: At which was Theodore under Pope Agatho present, where it was permitted that Greek Priests should have wives, and forbidden to the Latin. In the sixth year of Ivo, beginning to reign about this time, most valiantly warring against the Kenish Saxons, was one Cutblake a Confessor, who first was a Monk, and after an Ancorite. Ofredus succeeds his Father Alfred in Northumberland. Philippicus is mentioned after pag. 143. In the 16th year of Ivo, Ethelred King of Mercia having reigned 30 years, was made a Monk, and after Abbot of Bardney. P. Coph is mentioned pag. 143. *Q This year being about the 18th of King Ivo his reign, died that learned Bishop Adelmus, first Abbot of Malmesbury, after Bishop of Shirburne; which See was after united to Winton. John of Beverly, Bishop of York, dieth. In the time of Ivo, who reigned 37 years, began first the right observation of Easter-day by the Picts and Britains: in which observati-on three things are necessary: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. The full Moon of the first Month, (1) of March.2. The Dominical Letter.3. The Equinoctial day, which was wont to be counted, in the East Church, and especially among the Egyptians, to be about the 17th of March. So that the Full Moon, either on the Equinoctial day, or after the Equinoctial day, being observed, the next Dominical-day following that Full Moon, is to be taken for Easter-day. But then two things must be noted, <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. That the fulness of the Moon must be perfectly full: So that it be the beginning of the third week of the Moon, which is the fourteenth or fifteenth day of the Moon.2. That the said perfect fulness of the Moon, beginning the third week, must happen either in the very evening of the Equinoctial day, or after the Equinoctial day: For else, if it happen either on the Equinoctial day before the evening, or before the Equinoctial, it belongeth to the last month of the last year, and not to the first month of the first year, and so serveth not to be observed. This rite in keeping Easter being received in the Latin Church, began now among the Picts and Britains, through the busy travel of Theodorus Cantuariensis, but namely of Elbert the holy Monk, as they term him, and of Colfrid, Abbot of Sirwin. This Colfrid wrote also to Narcannus, or Naitonus the King of the Picts, concerning the shaving of Priests Crowns, as necessary to the Vow of a Monk, or degree of a Priest, for restraint. And thus began this Ceremony, without any proof of Scripture. Pope Gregory the second is mentioned pag. 143. *Q King Ivo yet reigning, being the 37th year of his reign, is importunately perswaded by his Queen Ethelburga to turn Monk at Rome; to which, when he did not at first yield, the King departing to some other place, the Queen caused all the Kings glorious Palace to be smeared and filled with Hogs, and dung, and filth, and in their lodging Chamber was put a Sow with young Pigs. Then the Queen brings the King to that Palace, saying, I pray you my Lord, behold this house, where are now all the rich hangings, and clothes of gold, &c. that were left here the other day? be not all these gone? In like manner shall we vanish away, and our bodies, now delicately fed, shall turn to the filth of the earth; wherefore remember my words, and purchase that Palace	139

For this Beda wrote Pope Sergius the first, requiring Celsid Abbots of Wre-Abbey, to send up the said Beda to Rome, for the fame of his learning: The Church of Rome (as appears by that Sergius his Letter) making use of Beda for discussing of many controversies in learning; all the Latin Church giving him the mastery in judgment and knowledge of the Latin Fathers. In all his explanations he omitting curiosity of skill, mainly endeavoured to inform his Reader in the love of God, and of his neighbour. Thus Beda continued to the age of sixty two years. He translated the Gospel of St. John into English. He made a comfortable and godly end.

See also pag. 137. of the great Volume, how he forbade all Funeral Exequies, and lamentations to be made for him.
741		Zachary.		11. Cuthbert alias, Cuthbert.	Egbert King of Northumberland erected a Noble Library in York. This Cuthbert collected this year a great Synod of Bishops and Prelates, in the month of September, at Clovesho: there decreeing that Bishops should be more diligent in admonishing the people, live in peace, visit yearly the Parishes of their Dioceses: that Priests should not be ordained till their lives were examined, being ordained, should not meddle with secular affairs: with divers other Ordinances touching Monasteries, Baptism, the Holy Supper, Prayer, &c.
747					Of Leo the Fourth, Emperor of Greece, besides this page, see p. 147. A Copy of these Ordinances Cuthbert sent to Boniface Bishop of Mentz, an English man, which Boniface died a Martyr, as Popish stories term him.
					This Boniface, Bishop of Mentz, writes to Ethelbald King of Mercia in Latin rebuking him, that whilst he contemned lawful Matrimony, he did defile the sacred Nuns.
					This Boniface being admitted Archbishop of Magunza by Pope Gregory the second, brought divers Countries of the Germans under the Pope, and set up abundance of Popish Prelates and Ceremonies, as worshipping of Reliques, &c.
					87 In the time of this Archbishop, Pope Gregory the second, Pope Gregory the third, Pope Zachary, and before these, Constantine, the first, wrought great matters against the Greek Emperors, Philippicus, and Leo, and others; for the maintaining of Images to be set up in Churches: of whom Philippicus lost both his Empire and both eyes; and Leo lost the Popes blessing, being Excommunicated by Gregory the third. This Gregory the third was he that penned the four Books of Dialogues in Greek, falsely bearing the name of Gregory the first: Which Books after Zachary his successor translated into Latin. Of Leo the fourth, see in Ann. 775.
					Also by the authority of the said Archbishop Boniface, which he had received from Pope Zachary, Childericus King of France, was deposed from the right of his Crown, and Pipinus the betrayer of his Master, was confirmed.
					From this Boniface proceeded that detestable Doctrine registered in the Popes Decrees, Dist. 40. That though the Pope were so wicked in himself, and towards others, that he led innumerable souls to Hell, yet no man ought to rebuke him, having power to judge all men.
					Kennilphus succeeds slain Sigebert, defending his Lordship strongly against his enemies, till he resorting to a Paramour he kept at Merton, was there beted and slain.
					Offa King of Mercia winning victories of the Kentishmen, took such displeasure against Canterbury, that he moved the Primacy, the Archbishops See, and Lands of Lambeth (by the agreement of Pope Adrian) to Lichfield.
		Stephan. 2.			Stephanus Predecessor, viz. Pope Zachary, gave the Kingdom of France to Pipinus, deposing Childerike; and now Pipin gratifies the See of Rome, in giving this Stephanus his time, to that See, the Exarchat or Principedom of Ravenna, the Kingdom of the Lombards, many other great possessions of Italy, with all the Cities thereto adjoining,

Egbert, of the blood Royal, being chased into France by Brightricus, as we said, for safety of his Crown from so near a blood; and Brightricus being now dead, he speeds from France into Westsax, obtaining by his wife behaviour the said Kingdom. Bernulphus King of Mercia, and other Kings deriding him with scoffs and rimes, provokes him to bid Bernulphus battle, wherein he conquered him, and possessed his Kingdom. Then made he war upon the Kentish Saxons, and conquered them. He also subdued Northumberland. Thus he brought these three Kingdoms to be tributary to him, and joynted them to his Kingdom. Also this Egbert wan from the Britains the Town of Chester. Thus these victories being gotten, he calls a Council at Winchester, and is Crowned King over this land, which before was called Britain: but he sent out command and Commiffions, that from that day forward the Saxons should be called Angles, and the land Anglia.

A General Synod is held at Aquisgrane, by the command of Ludovicus the Emperor, King of France. There Pope Gregory the Fourth decrees that Priests should have maintenance of Lands belonging to their several Churches, and not go about begging. All glorious apparel, rings, &c. forbidden Priests.

About this year the Heathenish people of the Danes (who a little before in Northumberland had murdered the Ministers, and ruined the Churches) came the second time with a great host into England. Egbert gave them battle, but had the worst.

The Danes are incouraged by their success against Egbert to enter again this year into England; and in long time and many years after could not be utterly beaten out.

Thus this Kingdom hath been hitherto plagued with five fundry Nations: Namely,

1. By the Romans.
2. By the Scots.
3. By the Picts.
4. By the Saxons.
5. By the Danes.

Ethelwulfus the Son of Egbert, and in former time a Deacon, and after a Bishop of Winchester (as some will) is King after his Father, by dispensation of the Pope, but still in mind devout to his Order, giving the tenth of his goods and lands in Westsaxons to the Clergy. He gave also Peter-pence to Rome, (i.e.) a penny of every fire house thorough his Kingdoms, with many more Donations to Rome.

He married Judith the Daughter of Carolus Calvus, the French King: whom he rethored to the title of Queen. For before it was a Decree of the Westsaxons, for Queen Ethelburg's poisoning of her Husband King Brightricus, that no Kings Wife should have the title of Queen.

In the later end of the reign of this Ethelwulfus the Danes brake into England, doing great spoil on the land and lives, and blood of men.

This Pope, whose name was Os Porei, for the shame thereof, was the first that brought in the altering of Popes names.

This Pope Leo was Tutor or Guardian to Alured, committed to him by Ethelwulf the Father of Alured.

This Pope ordained that no Bishop should be condemned under seventy two Witnesses. An example was practised in condemnation of Stephen Gardiner.

This Pope Joani proper name was Gilberta. She was a Dutch woman of Magunce; who going out of the Abbey of Fulda, with an English Monk in mans apparel to Athens, and becoming learned, by her wit came to sit Pope two years and six months. At last in an open procession fell into travel with her child, and so died. Ever since the Cardinals come not by that part of the street where this shame was.

This Benedict ordained Dirge for the dead.

Ethelbald the first Son succeeds Ethelwulfus his Father in the Kingdom of Westsaxons. He is infamous for lying with, and marrying of his step-mother.

Ethelbert the second Son succeeds his Father Ethelwulfus in the Kingdom of Kent.

After these two, the third son of Ethelwulfus, viz. Ethelred, succeeded; who was mightily troubled with the Danes.

This Pope Nicholas enlarged the Popes Decrees, equalling them to the writings of the Apostles. He decreed that Service should be in Latin: He began the forbidding Priests to marry: against which Hilderich Bishop of Aushurg wrote a learned Epistle to the said Pope, proving the lawfulness of Priests marriage.

After Ethelbald and Ethelbert succeeded Ethelred their Brother, the third son of their Father Ethelwulfus.

In the later days of King Ethelred, the Danes invaded this land, spoiling and murdering.

898		Romanus, Theodorus 2.			Pope Romanus continued Pope but three months. Theodor the second was Pope but twenty days.
899					Alfred having reigned twenty nine years and six months, dyes. He is reputed for a man of a liberal Heart and a godly Life. He caused Schools of Learning to be set up, especially in the West parts. For amongst the Britains, long before, in King Arthurs time, in the Town of Chester, was taught Grammar, Philosophy, and other Arts and Sciences. After, in Egberts time (as Writers affirm) Philosophy began to flourish in England. About which time, as some think, Grancheester University by Cambridge began to be founded by Beda. Sigebert also Founded Schools in England, as Alcuinus will. And yet before these, some think that Greeklade, a Greek University; and Latinlade, a Latine University in this Land, was Founded.
					Alfred Translated many good Books, and made one of his own, in the common Language of this Land.

A Chronology.

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germ.	Roman Bishops.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.		Vol. I. pag.
932		John 12.			Of others this Pope John is called the eleventh. This Pope John was the son of Marozia an Harlot. He is deposted by the Clergy and People of Rome , not agreeing to his Election, and Leo the sixth is put in his room.
933					Brifanus is Bishop of Winchester ; of whom its feigned, that to him praying for departed Souls, as he stood in Winchester Church-yard, many Souls answered, Amen: which if it had been so, how were those Souls in Purgatory?
934	The translation of that Empire to Germ. is perfected in	Leo 6.			Of this Orto Emperor, see Vol. 1. p. 145. and p. 192. col. 2. of the great Volume.
935	Orto 12.	Stephen 7.		Odo	Of others, as Reusner , &c. he is termed Leo the seventh. He is Pope seven months.	162
		John the 22 restored.			Touching this Stephen to be the seventh, see Vol. 1. p. 162. with p. 162. in the margin.
940		Leo the 7. Stephen 8.	EDMUND.		This Stephen having been Pope two years, according to Mr. Fox, was poisoned. Pope John the twelfth (as Mr. Fox reckons him) is restored to the Popedom again.
941					Edmund was brother to Atbelstan , succeeds in the Crown, Atbelstan dying without Issue.
942	Martin 9. alias Marston 2. Agapetus 2.			Elisar.	Monks are put out of Eufham Monastery, and Canons put in their place.
946			EDWIN.		Odo Arch-bishop of Canterbury lived to this Edmunds time, and called a Synod to fix up Ministers to Preach.
955					Dunstan is now Abbot of Glastenbury , in this Kings time, before he was Archbishop of Canterbury .
					Of Pope Martin the third, and Agapetus the second, see the first great Vol. p. 189.
					King Edmund is slain by Pulcher Church. See the first great Vol. p. 196. col. 1.	169
					Edwin the eldest son of King Edmund , succeeds in the Throne after King Edmund .
					This King Edwin kept a strange Woman, the Wife of a man whom he had slain (as some say) to which Woman he on the first day of his Coronation, breaking from his Lords, and going into the Chamber; Dunstan Abbot of Glastenbury , follows him, brings him back by the hand, accuses him to Orto Archbishop; Orto separates him from the Woman, and suspends him out of the Church. For this Dunstan is made fly over the Sea, and the Monks, as well in other Monasteries as Dunstan of Glastenbury , are thrust out, and Secular Priests put in their room.
					This was Pope John the Twelfth (as others reckon.) He was an Adulterer, a Whore-master, an Incestuous person, an Extortioner, a Gainer. From his wicked meritment in these Evils, came the Proverb, As merry as Pope John . He cuts out the Tongues, puts out the Eyes, cuts off the Noses and Fingers of his Cardinals. He himself at last is deposted, but after restored. Of him see the first great Vol. p. 205.
959			EDGAR.		Edwin is hated for his misdemeanors of his Subjects, chiefly them of Northumberland and Mercia , by whom he is removed from his Kingly Honor, and Edgar received in his stead. So that the River Thames divided both their Kingdoms, Edwin having reigned four years alone, dies without Heir, and so Edgar his Brother succeeds.
					He began his Reign this year, being fifteen years old; but was not Crowned till fourteen years after. He calls home exiled Dunstan , makes him Bishop of Worcester , then of London .
				Dunstan.	Orto or Odo Archbishop dying, King Edgar makes Dunstan Arch-Bishop.
963		Leo the 8.			This Pope Leo , (of whom see the first great Volume, p. 205.) was substituted Pope in the room of the former deposted Pope John . But the said John being restored, this Leo was deposted. Of this Pope Leo , see pag. 205. of the first great Volume col. 2.
					Dunstan gets the King to make Oswaldus , Nephew of Orto (as it is said) Bishop of Worcester .
					Not long after, the said King Edgar , at Dunstan 's intreaty, made Ethelwaldus first Monk of Glastenbury , then Abbot of Abendon , to be Bishop of Winchester . Of him is related a Vision, appearing to him, of a Tree, whose Branches covered the four Quarters of the Kingdom, and were covered with Monks Cows, and with one matter Cowl on the top, &c.
					Whether this Dream be feigned or no, it was made good in effect, Dunstan , Oswald , and Ethelwald , making Monks to swarm in this Edgars time in England .	170
964		Benedict 5.			The Romans setting up this Benedict after Pope John , and not setting in and restoring again Pope Leo the Eighth, deposted contrary to the Emperor Orto his mind; the said Emperor besieged Rome , and puts in again Leo the Eighth, who gratifies the Emperor, with giving to him and his Successors in a Synod, the power of Electing a Pope.
965		John 14.			Alias John the Thirteenth: of him see the first great Volume, p. 205.
969					Oswald (made Arch-bishop of Tork) by policy makes many Priests turn Monks, or to leave their place.
					Monks anciently were but strict Lay-men; inasmuch as they were forbidden to meddle with Ecclesiasticals.	171

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germ.	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	Vol. Page.
		Gregory 5. and John 18. both Papes together.	Kings of Britain in Wales.		Against this Gregory, maliced because he was a German, was set up this John the eighteenth, alias John the seventeenth, by Crescentius Consul of Rome. Whereupon Otto the third Emperor, to whom Gregory the fifth flies, comes with an Army, apprehends John, puts out his eyes, and after puts him to death: and apprehends Crescentius, cuts off his nose and ears, and after so led through the City, having his Members cut off he hanged upon a Gibbet. Gregory is restored, reigns Pope four years. This year London is besieged of the Danes. The Danes spoiling the Land, caused the English levy of Danegilt, amounting from 10000 per annum, to 40000 per annum, paid to the Danes to buy peace of them. Now came in the Lurdane, i. the Lord Dane, who was Lord of the English mans House, Goods, and Wife too. Pope Gregory the fifth, being restored to the Popedom, calls a Council at Rome, by the advice of Otto the third, Emperor; and there to confirm the Empire in Germany his own Country, Decrees those seven should be Electors of the Emperor, which are to this day: viz. The Bishops of Mentz, Triers, Colen do Elect the Empror; are his Chancellors too. Bohemia's King elects, and bears his cup: And Saxons Duke elects, his Sword holds up. Archsewer is Elector Palatine, And Marquis Brandenburg his Chamberlain. These Verbes in Latine, see the first great Vol. p. 206.
997	The Emper established in Germany by ordaining seven Electors by the Pope.
1000		Silvester 2. made Pope by Magic.			The years of Christ amounting to a thousand, Religion began much more to decay than in former times: Pope Sylvester the second being a Sorcerer, and a most hainous wicked Infirment. See the first great Vol. p. 215.
1003			John 19.		This year the Saxons that had driven the Britans from their Land, make way by Elreds joyning in Marriage with the Normans (taking to Wife Emma the Daughter of Rich. the first of that name, the third Duke of Normandy) for a new plague to come upon themselves. For Alred, in confidence of his affinity, gave secret and strict charge to all Towns in England, upon St. Brice his day, at a certain hour, the Danes should be all slain; which caused much trouble.
1004					Alias John the eighteenth. He brings in the Feast of All-Souls. See the first great Vol. p. 216.
1004			John 2.		For upon tydings of this at Denmark, King Swannus of Denmark comes into the Land, beats down Exeter, and so came on, spoiling the Country. At length they are beaten out by Duke Uthet. Herein Mr. Fox differs from others, who put no John between All-Souls John, and Pope Sergius the fourth.
1006				Elphinstone, or Elphinstone.	The Danes land again in this Kingdom, at Sandwich. The King at last was fain to pay them a Tribute of 30000 pounds. Many times after, in this Kings time, did the Danes invade and spoil. They stoned to death, at Greenwich, Elphinstone Archbishop of Canterbury, because he would not pay to them such Taxes as they would impose.
1012		Benedict 8.			The King is driven out of the Land to Normandy by the tyranny of the Danes, they, mean while, laying intolerable Taxes on the people of this Land, whereupon they fell to Prayer and to Fasting; so that shortly Swannus the Prince of the Danes dyed suddenly, yelling and crying. In fear whereof, Canutus his son Reigned here, with shew of much favor to the people. Of Livingus Archbishop, see the first great Vol. p. 215.
1013				Livingus, or Livingus.	Egelred returns, hearing of Swannus his death, and coming upon Canutus the son, being unprovided, caused him to fly into Denmark. But afterward Canutus came again, and took West-Saxon.
1016			Edmund Ironside a Saxon, and Canutus a Dane, Kings together in England.		After Egelreds death, much Faction being moved whom to chosse for King, Londoners being for Edmund Ironside, Egelred: eldest Son: Others, and chiefly the Clergy, being for Swannus Son, viz. Canutus; having sworn to Swannus his Father. Edmund and Canutus fight many Battels for the Kingdom; and at last a Duel between themselves: Last of all, they agreed to divide the Land between them, and so lived in love till Edmund was stabbed in the Fundament, by the Traiterous Son of Duke Edricus, as he was at the draught house. Then Duke Edricus himself, liking his Sons Fact, it should seem, carryed Edmunds two Sons to Canutus, with these words, Ave Rex solus, (i.) God save thee King alone. Canutus sends them to his Brother Swannus King of Sweedland, to be murdered: but he abhorring that Bloodiness, sent them to Salomon King of Hungary, where the one dyed a natural death: The other, named Edward, was married to Agatha, Daughter of his Brother Henry the fourth, Emperor.
1020	Conradus 2.			Egonoldus, alias Ethelnoth. See p. 215. of the first great Vol.	Alias John the nineteenth. Reun. Helv. Of him in Mr. Fox, See the first great Volume, p. 216. He was made Pope by Magic, as Mr. Fox saith in the same Page.
1023					Canutus this while, to make safe the English Crown to himself, Swears some, Banisheth others, puts to Death others; among which, was Duke Edricus. For though Canutus loved his Treason, yet durst not dare dare trust the Traytor that put to death Edmund Ironside his own natural Prince.

This Archbishop Eadfin is not named by Master Fox, as we can find; though he names him before and after him. See the first great Vol. pag. 215.

Canutus goveried this land twenty years, in all which time the Danes began by little and little to be Christian men.

Canutus dies. Harold Harefoot (so called for his swiftness) his son, reigns in England in his stead.

This Henry the fourth, Emperor, was Excommunicated by four Popes. See the first great Vol. p.245.

Hardeknutus his Brother, King of Denmark, was after him King of England.

Of Henricus the third, Emperor, see the first great Vol. p. 216.

About this time, wicked Earl Godwin played his feats.

King Hardeknute, the last of the Danish Kings of England, having reigned here two years, dies without issue.

The Danes from their first landing (in Brigitricus time) having vexed this Land 255 years; and having reigned as King twenty eight years; now the last of them being dead without issue, the Crown comes to Edward, the younger son of Egbert, a meet Englishman; returning from his banishment in Normandy, caused by the Danish Kings. He was sent for by the Englishmen, and Crowned this year. His disposition was much averse from war.

Pope Benedict the ninth, as we said, coming to be Pope by Magic, and opposing Henricus the third, Emperor, and putting in his room Petrus King of Hungary. After fearing Henry the fourth prevailing against him, fold his seat to Gregory the sixth for 1500 pounds. Of this Gregory see the first great Vol. p.216.

Contention moved between this King Edward and Earl Godwin, happened about this time; in which Earl Godwin and his five sons were outlawed.

Of these three Popes, see the first great Vol. p.216. where Henricus Niger Emperor, displaceth these three, and puts in Clement the second: and thereupon inacting. That no Bishop of Rome should be chosen without the consent of the Emperor. And the Romans sware their assent to this act.

William Duke of Normandy comes to see the King, and is welcomed; he promising him (as some write) that if he died without issue, he the said William Duke of Normandy should have this Kingdom.

The Romans forgetting their Oath to the Emperor, in nine months poyson this Pope. See the first great Vol. p.216.

Earl Godwin, that had murdered the Kings brother Alfred, wishing in excuse to the King, that the bread he was eating might not be swallowed safely, if he were not guiltless of his death, was presently choaked, and so died.

Of Damasus and Leo, see the first great Vol. p.216.

Of him see the first great Vol. pag.215. Harold (who after was King) was a means of his banishment, in the time of this King Edward.

Of Archbishop Robert, see the first great Vol. p.220.

Of this Archbishop Stigandus, see the first great Vol. p.215.

Of this Pope, see the first great Vol. p.217.

King Edward sends to Henry the fourth Emperor, praying him to send to the King of Hungary, that his Cousin Edward, son of Edmund Ironside, might come into England, for as much as he intended to make him King after him. This request was fulfilled, and he came into England, with his wife and children.

This Henry Emperor, began his reign, being a child. Of him see the first great Vol. p.211. and p.217.

The year following his Cousin Edward dies.

Of Pope Benedict the tenth, and Nicolaus the second, see the first great Vol. p.217.

Then the King thought to make that Edwards son Edgar Adeling his heir; but fearing (by the pride of Harold the son of Godwin, and the mutability of English hearts) he should not effect it, sent Ambassadors to William Duke of Normandy his Kinsman, assigning him to be lawful heir next to succeed him to the Crown.

Not long after (Godwin being dead) his son Harold grows so wickedly proud, that he ruled all as King, by reason that the King somewhat favoured him. At length he falling towards Flanders, and being driven by tempest into Normandy, there William Duke of Normandy makes him to swear he would marry his daughter, and that after King Edwards death, he should keep the land of England to his behoof, according to the will and mind of King Edward, and so to live next to him in honour and dignity, in the Realm. At his return to England he tells King Edward what he had sworn to Duke William of Normandy, with which the King was well pleased.

Pope Nicolaus the second having called a Council at Sutrium, and by the help of Hildebrands device having made Benedict the tenth to unpope himself; now he calls a Council at Rome, which is called the Lateran Council; in which he undermineth the Emperor of his jurisdiction, and conferreth the Election of the Pope upon a few Cardinals.

In this Council Berenarius is made to recant his tenet against real Presence; and Transubstantiation is brought in.

King Edward dies.
This year Aldredus Bishop of Worcester being to be made Archbishop of Tork, comes with Earl Tostius of Northumberland to Pope Nicolas to Rome for his Pall, instead of which (for some pretence) was deprived of all his dignity; and as he was returning home, was spoiled of that he carried with him. At last Tostius with rough words to the Pope, makes the Pope give the Bishop his Pall, for all his losses.

Nicolas (as his name signifies) having by violence got into the Popedom, after three years he is poisoned. See the first great Vol. p. 217.
Of these two Popes Cadol. and Alex. and their warring swords for Peters Keys, see the first great Vol. p. 218.

Pope Alexander is knocked about the pate by Hildebrand, for seeking the favour of the Emperor, touching his being Pope. The first great Volume, p. 218.

Harold the second son of Earl Godwin, and last King of Saxons, (notwithstanding many Nobles went with Edgar Adelung, next heir after Edmund Ironside) forgot also his promise to Duke William of Normandy, who contemning Edgars youth, takes upon him to be King.

Harold Harefager, son of Canutus King of Norway and Denmark, comes after Edwards death to claim the Crown, with an army. He beats Harold King of England in the first battle; English Harold beats him in the second: and Danish Harold is also slain by the hand of Englands Harold. Tostius also the brother of Harold King of England joining with the Danes in this battle against his brother, is slain.

One thousand sixty six a wondrous year;
To tell our fall, a Comet doth appear.

Duke William of Normandy sends an Ambassage to King Harold, admonishing him of his Covenant agreed between them. But because Duke William's daughter was dead, King Harold thought himself disengaged from that agreement. He alleged also that those promises were compelled, and without consent of his Lords, which ought not to be.

Hereupon, and for two other reasons, namely, to be avenged for the blood of his Nephew Alfred, King Edwards brother, and of the Normans, of all whose deaths Harold was reputed the principal cause, and to revenge the exilment of Robert Archbishop of Canterbury, whereto Harold was cause, Duke William invades this Kingdom, and conquers Harold in battle, wherein Harold was slain; and so Duke William (who was Cousin German to K. Edward by the Fathers side) gained the Kingdom and Crown. In this Conquest,

On William's side were slain 6013.

On Harold's side 6654.

William the Conqueror is Crowned K. of England by Alredus Archbishop of Tork, Stigandus Archbishop of Canterbury being absent, either for fear or hate of William.

Great Taxes are laid by William upon the land, changing the Laws of K. Edward, although at his coming he had sworn to keep them. (Of which see more p. 214. of the great Vol.)

Great famine is in Northumberland.

The Scots are subdued to William the Conqueror.

This land hath been conquered by $\left. \begin{array}{l} \text{Romans the first} \\ \text{Scots and Picts the second} \\ \text{Saxons the third} \\ \text{Danes the fourth} \\ \text{William and his Normans the fifth} \end{array} \right\} \text{time.}$

This year William the Conqueror calls a Council. Two Cardinals and he himself are present; who by pretences depose many Bishops: (Among which was Archbishop Stigandus) to the intent to prefer Normans and aliens, as Thomas a Norman to be Archbishop of Tork, and Laufmannus a Lombard and Italian born, to be Archbishop of Canterbury.

This Hildebrand caused the Prelates and Popes stoutness against Emperors, long before he was Pope, and now he practiseth it much more, being Pope; casting off the Emperors from Elections of Popes (as the Tragical History of all his evils may be seen in this page of the great Volume) inasmuch that Cardinal Benno writes against him of his wickedness.

Osmund the second Bishop of Salurn (Hermannus a Norman, that began the new Church and Minister, being the first) now finishing the Minister, first began the Ordinary, which was called Secundum usum Salurni.

			Kings of Britain in Britain, Rom. last King of Britain, is slain this year 1053, by K. Rufus.	Henry the fourth, Emperor, attends upon this Pope, with his wife and children barefoot, at his Palace-gate, three days and three nights, before he could be admitted in; then too he is made to swear unreasonable subjection to the Pope. in all things; and when all is done, the Pope gives away his Crown to Rodolph Duke of Swabia, with these words, The Rock to Peter gave the Diadem, And Peter gives it unto Rodolphs Realm.
1083		Clement 3.		Hildebrand is accused of grievous crimes in a Council called at Brivia, by Henry the fourth, Emperor, who had been wronged by Hildebrand. In this Council, called by Henry, Hildebrand is condemned to be deposed, and Clement the third is chosen Pope in his room.
1088		Vital 3. Urban 3. (Clement 3. Vital 3. being Pope.) (Urban 3. and Urban 3. are both Popes at once, which contention lasted as Mr. Fox computes to the year 1095, divers Kingdoms falling with each of them.		About this time, or not much after Hildebrand the Pope, dies K. William the Conqueror. Of Popes see the first great Volume, pag. 239. Great Pestilence is in England. Rats swim over to a Bishops Tower, that was cruel in time of famine to the poor, and devour him. William Rufus is Crowned by Archbishop Lanfrancus, his elder Brother. Duke Robert in Almaine comes to fight for the Crown; whereupon William Rufus mildly quieted him, by taking the Crown from him at 3000 Marks per Annum, and agreeing that the longest liver of them two should take the Crown.	204
1091			W. Rufus is entire Monarch.	The King did not much favour the Pope, because as Matthew Parisensis writes, They follow not the steps of Peter, but hunt for reward; and had not the power of him, whose holiness they did not imitate. Lanfrancus Archbishop of Canterbury dies (Polydore much commends him, I see not for what.) After whom the Archbishoprick is void four years.	207
1092				Extream tempests in England burn a Church, break the head of a Crucifix, throw down the Lady, at Wincob, and blow down six hundred houses, as also the roof of Bow-Church at London.
1093				Pope Urban calls a Council at Rome; in it he Excommunicates Lay-persons that conferred spiritual livings.	208
1095				Pope Urban calls a Council at Claremont, where he by an Oration, moves 30000 to go to Hierusalem, to suppress the tyrannizing Heathens that were over the Christians.
1096			Anselm.	This being about the sixth year of King Rufus, Malcom King of Scots invades England, and is slain (himself having been a great murderer) with his son Edward, and Margaret his wife. This same year also, he, after he had kept Canterbury Archbishoprick four years, gave it to this Anselm, who for the Kings kindness, much crossed him in many things for a long time, all Bishops holding with the King against Anselm. Many of those that went to Hierusalem, in the way are by ambushment slain by the Bulgars, near to the Town Civotus. Yet at last when all the armies met, they went on, won some Towns, as Antioch, and slew many Saracens.
1098				Corbona, Master of the Persians Chivalry, is slain by the Christians that went in the said Voyage to Hierusalem; with whom were also slain 100000 Infidels. Shortly after the Christians take Hierusalem. Robert Duke of Normandy was chosen King thereof, but he refused it, because he heard of the death of William Rufus in England; wherefore he never prospered after.	209
				Earl Ludovicus rebels against Henry the fourth, Emperor; against whom and which, Waltramus Bishop of Merburg writes an Epistle, exhorting him to obedience.	214
1099		Paschalis 2.		The Earl writes an answer. This year 1090, (as Gisburn reports) a spring boils out blood three weeks together. See the first great Volume, pag. 256. Of this Pope Paschalis see the first great Vol. p. 242. He sets up again Henry the fourth Emperor, having Excommunicated him, as did Hildebrand, his son Henry, making him Emperor, called Henry the fifth; as it follows in Anno 1105. See pag. 254, 255. of the first great Volume.	ibid.
1100			Henry the 1. Blinmond Beaucherk.	This King Henry the first was William the Conquerors third son, who now succeeds his brother Rufus. He had his name of Beaucherk, for his knowledge in the seven Liberal Arts.	216
1101				Duke Robert the eldest brother of K. Henry, and first son of William the Conqueror, comes to challenge the Crown of this Henry, as he did of William Rufus. And this Henry promiseth him the three thousand Marks per Annum, as Rufus had before; and so Duke Robert returned to Normandy satisfied. After Duke Robert and K. Henry fall out, and Duke Robert was taken in war a prisoner, brought to England, and kept in prison while he lived. And Normandy was subdued to King Henry the first. This King Invested Bishops without the Pope. About this year 1101, the Bishop of Fluence began to preach of Antichrist to be there born and manifested. Pope Paschalis hereupon calls a Council, silenceth the Bishop, and condemns his Book. See the first great Volume, p. 254.

Anno Christi	Emp. of German.	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterbury.	Great variance between Anselm and the King. Of this Henry the fifth, Emperor, see before in Pope Paschalis the second, and his time and story; and in the next year here following, Henry and Christian two famous Archbishops of Mentz, right virtuous men, were about this time cruelly and tyrannically handled by the Bishop of Rome. This same year Anselm getting leave of the King to call a Council, in it by his Decrees cuts off the authority of any Lay-persons investing spiritual persons, the freedom of Bishops to bear office in secular mens businesses, and the power of Priests to marry. See the first Volume, p. 251. The Emperor Henry the fourth being conquered in battel of his rebellious son Henry the fifth, set against him by Pope Paschalis the second, is so poor, that he intreated the Bishop of Spire (to whom he had been kind) to have a Prebend there; having some skill to serve in the Ladies Quire: but the Bishop swearing by the Lady a flat denial; the Emperor forlorn of Son, Kingdom, Bishop, and all, goes to Leodinum and there dies (having reigned fifty years) whose body buried, Paschalis takes up again, and causeth it to be kept unburied five years. Henry the fifth coming to be Crowned at Rome, could not obtain it, till he ratified it, that no Emperor should have to do in the Election of the Roman Bishop. Afore he yielded to it; and about other things, there was such opposition between this Henry the fifth and the Pope, that unless he had defended himself with his own hands, he had been slain. Anselm Archbishop died. The See is void five years. The Bishoprick of Ely first founded. Henry the Bishop. Trent river dried up about Nottingham, from morning till three in the afternoon, that men might go over dry-shod. Gisburn. Thames this year, from the Tower to the Bridge, from midnight to next evening, scarce knee deep: innumerable people and children wading over; the Tyde falling short of its custom ten miles. This year Worcester is burnt. This Pope Gelasius was set up by the Cardinals, without the Emperor. Thurfinus choien Archbishop of York; will not make his procession of obedience to the See of Canterbury, where he was consecrated, for which the King deprives him. Hence rose great ado between the Archbishop Thurfinus and the King. This Pope Gregory is set up by the Emperor. Pope Gelasius is driven into France. This Pope Calixtus is set up by a few Cardinals. He first excommunicates the Emperor Henry the fifth, then drives P. Gregory out of Rome. The Emperor is again forced to ratifie his consent, of passing away his right of choosing the Bishop of Rome; and moreover to ratifie this Pope Calix. to be Pope, though the Emperor, P. Gregory was yet alive. Pope Calixtus in the business about Thurfin Interdicts the Church of Canterbury and York, and all the Parishes within the same; unless Thurfin without exacting subjection to Canterbury be admitted to the See of York; and that the King (with the Pope in his Epistle to England) should be excommunicated, except he consented to the same. Thurfin is received to his See, and reconciled to the King. The King calls a Council at London, where he gets the Clergy to give him the punishment of married Priests; which granted, for money the King lets them have their wives. The Order of the Knights of the Rhodes, called the Johannites, and of the Templars, rose up at this time. The Priory of Norton founded. The King is troubled with three Visions, the first of multitudes of Husbandmen flying on him with their Mattocks; requiring the debt he owed unto them. The second of Soldiers, falling upon him. The third of Bishops, threatening him with their Episcopal staves. To prevent the coming to pass of these, he vowed three things: first, repentance; secondly, alms, and thirdly amendment of life. The King is in a great tempest at Sea in this year 1131. He releaseth to the Commons Danegilt: he gave to the Churchmen much, and looked to execution of justice, as after his deliverance from the tempest, to fulfill his three Vows. King Henry dies, being in Normandy. Notwithstanding the Oath of Stephen and of the Nobility to Maud formerly, before her Father, they set not up her, or young Henry the son: but this Stephen, sisters son to King Henry, takes upon him the Crown, and him the Nobility Crown on St. Stephens day. The King takes the Bishop of Sarum, and the Bishop of Lincoln, and puts ropes about their necks, and led them to Castles held against him, threatening to put to death the Bishops, unless the rebels would yield. This Conradus Emperor, is the only man, among many Emperors, that did not receive his Crown from the Pope. Maud the Empress comes with a great army into England, being aided by the Earls of Gloucester and Chester, and was on King Stephen, and takes him prisoner. Then the Kentishmen and Londoners war against Maud.	Vol. I. Page

					perors at this a-bey, that for to be Crowned they were fain to yield to any thing. But the Pope himself in stirring in the execution of this Plot, was so be- sieged by William the Duke, that before intreated peace of the Pope, which would not yield it upon any terms, that they were forced to intreat the Duke for peace; which was granted, with profitable conditions to the Duke. The Emperor this while sitting quietly at home, and considering how the Pope had wrested his power in Election of Popes, investing of Prelates, &c. how he had pill'd and polled all Nations by the Le- gates, and sown discord in his Empire: Hereupon he requires Ho- mage and Oath of Allegiance of all his Bishops; and forbids the Popes Legates to enter into the Empire, without his sending for, and all Appeals to Rome . Finally, In his Letters he prefixed his name before the Emperor. Hereupon the Pope writes a rebuking Letter to the Emperor. The Em- peror writes back, in defence of his doings, an Apologetical Epistle. The Pope replies with a Bull of Excommunication. The Emperor makes answer to that with accusatory Letters against the vileness, pride, &c. of the See of Rome . Then the Pope writes to the German Bishops to work against the Emperor. The Bishops they write their exclaiming of the Emperor.	229
					This Pope towards the end of his life (who dyed amidst those broils, be- ing choaked with a Fly as he was walking abroad) was wont to say, That there was no more miserable kind of Life in the Earth, than to be a Pope.	230
1159		Alexander the third, and Victor the fourth, both Popes to- gether.			This Pope, being set up by the Pope Faction. This Victor was set up by the Emperor and nine Cardinals.	The two Popes made great Schism and Tumult.
					The Emperor to quiet them, sent for them to appear before him. Alex- ander (scorns the motion; Victor doth appear: him therefore the Emperor aids to the City, and settles him to be Pope. Alexander then flying to France , to Sevil and Venice , works by money and cunning; gets the City of Rome on his side to set up such Consuls as were for his turn. Also of the French , and Venetians , and Apulians , he got force of Ships and Arms on his side: against which the Empe- ror sends his Son Orto with Ships and Men well appointed, against the Venetians and the Pope; charging him to do nothing till he should come to him. But he not tarrying for his Father, was beaten and taken: for the delivery of whom, the Emperor was fain to sub- mit himself to the Pope; who putting his Foot upon the Emperors Neck, spake these Words; Thou shalt walk upon the Adders and Basilisks, and shalt tread down the Lyon and Dragon . Mean while the Emperor speaking to the Pope from under his Foot, Not to thee, but to Peter : The Pope answers, Both to me and to Peter . Thus the Emperor having subjected himself, promising to take Alexander for the true Pope, and to restore all he had taken away from Rome , de- parted.	231
1160					Pope Alexander the third, sitting Pope one and twenty years, calling di- vers Councils at Turo , ratified the wicked acts of Hildebrand . This year many chief Men of Lyon walking together, one whereof fall- ing down dead, to the amazement of them all, one Waldus a rich man, was above all the rest, by Gods Spirit working together with the exam- ple, stricken with a sound inward repentance, a new life following there- upon, with great study of the Word of God, wherewith he much in- structed his Family, others also resorting to him to be taught; and so he became the original of the Waldenses .	232
1161				Tho. Becket	This Becket lived in the time of this Pope Alexander . He did not (as some affirm) dye a Martyr, but a stubborn man against his King; who had pre- ferred him from an Arch-deacon, to be Lord Chancellor of England , and after to be Arch-bishop of Canterbury . The Pope, viz. Alexander the third, holds with Becket in his obstinacy against the King and his Laws. The Bishops generally counselling Becket to submission to the King, are sharply rated by him. This year a child was Crucified by the Jews.	233 234 235 236 237 238
1167					This year a Collection of two pence in every pound, was gathered thro- out all England and France , for the succor of the East Christians a- gainst the Turks .	239
1169					This year, being about the fifteenth year of King Henry the second, so feared, lest the Arch-bishop would proceed to Excommunication of his own Person, that he appealed to the Pope, intreating him to send down two Legates to England , to take up the matter between him and his Arch-bishop.	240
1170					This year the Doctrine of the Waldenses (coming of that Waldus an able and learned man in the Scriptures and true Godliness, as hath been seen	241 seen in old Parchments, and Records of things of his penning) sprang up more and more in the time of this wicked Pope Alexander, who with his Faction much set against these Christians, whose tenents are ordinarily to be seen to be very Orthodox and sound.

					This year William King of Scots, with David his Brother, do Homage to England.
					This year Babylon was destroyed (and never built again) by Almaricus King of Jerusalem.
					Becket this year bare another grudge against the King, because King Henry the second, by Authority of the Parliament, Crowning his Son King, by the hands of the Arch-bishop of York, and other Bishops, not sending for him. Also he makes the Pope to suspend the Bishops.	252
					This same year also Ludovike the French King, came with a great Army against the King to Normandy, for not Crowning Margaret his Daughter, with her Husband.
1171					Becket is slain by four Souldiers. Many Authors alleaged that condemned Becket's carriage towards the King.	253
					Abundance of strange lies are reported touching Becket's miracles: Of him was made this blasphemous Anthem:	255
					For the blood of Thomas, which he for thee did spend, Grant us Christ to climb Where Thomas did ascend.	256
					The Pope is angry, and more incited by Ludovike the French King, for the death of Becket.
					The Pope injoins the four Knights that killed Becket such hard penance of going to Jerusalem barefoot in linen Breeches, with much Fasting and Prayer, that in few years after they are laid to dye.
			Richard.		The King subdued Ireland, and four of the five Kings thereof: the King of Tonacla in that Land, denying to be subdued; keeping in Woods and Marishes.
1172					The Legates from the Pope, being come into Normandy, touching the death of Becket, the King repairs to them, swears he neither assented to, nor assisted in Becket's death; but only spake rigorously against his Knights which did not avenge him of Becket. For which the Legates injoin the King great penance, of fighting against the Turk, and obliging himself to the Pope.
1173					All England almost diseased with a Cough.
					William King of Scots, is Imprisoned in England, being taken in War. See the first great Vol. p. 302.
1174					This year Canterbury City is almost all burnt.	256
1175					A Convocation of Bishops is held this year about the subjection of Bishoppicks to the Arch-bishop of York, and of York to Canterbury.
					This year King Henry the second divides the Kingdom into six parts, appoints for every part three Justices of Assise.
1176					The ancient Custom of exempting Priests from the temporal Sword, in case of Murder, inflicting on them only Excommunication: this year, in this King Henries time, began to be altered, by the procurement of Richard Arch-bishop of Canterbury.
					Ireland this year is subdued to the King of England.
1177					Hovenden in this year brings in Letters of Pope Alexander to Roger Arch-bishop of York, and the Bishop of Durem.
					Contention between the Arch-bishop of York and Canterbury re- vives.
1178					The Popes Commissioners persecute sorely some in Tholouse, holding against Transubstantiation.
1179					Pope Alexander, in some of those many Councils held at Laterane, where- of was one this year, and in France, &c. Decreed, That no Arch-bishop should receive the Pall, unless he would first swear. The form of giving the Pall and taking the Oath, see the first great Volume, p. 298.

					He was offered to be King of Jerusalem , but he refused it, fearing the rebellion of his sons in his absence. Princes from most parts of Christendom came to this King, for his wisdom to be advised, and have questions determined. He maintained great Wars much of his thirty five years he reigned; yet never put he any Tax upon the Laity, or First-fruits or Appropriations upon the Clergy; and yet dyed worth 90000 pounds, besides Jewels, precious stones, and household Furniture. This many-ways-happy King, was unhappy in his Sons, who stood in armor against him, taking part with the French King against him; causing him with extreme grief to fall sick, and in four days to dye. The King being dead, bled afresh at the coming near one of his Sons; whereby the Beholders concluded, that he was the Author of his Fathers death. His Sons (their Kingly Father being dead) unsuccessful in their Designs, as what else could be expected of such Sons? lost all their Fathers Dominions beyond Sea. Great contention was between this Baldwinus and the Monks of Canterbury , See the first great Vol. p. 309. Pope Urban writes to Arch-bishop Baldwin , sharply rebuking him, and upholding the Monks. In few days after he dyes. This year King Henry pays to Rome 40000 marks of Silver, and five thousand of Gold, for the death of Becket . Arch-bishop Baldwin begins the building of the new House at Lambeth , with the Church. Pope Gregory dyes with sorrow for the loss of the Holy Cross. This Pope Clement forbids Arch-bishop Baldwin to proceed. And also sharply writes (as did Pope Urban) to rebuke him as an oppressor of the Monks of Canterbury . This Pope Clement sends another more sharp Letter to this Arch-bishop, by his Legate Rodulphus , to the same effect. This year Pope Clement writes a third Letter to Arch-bishop Baldwin . This King forbidding any Jews to approach his Palace at his Coronation, the Jews notwithstanding pressing on, were by the Gate-keepers smitten, and at last many, on boldship of the Kings command of keeping them out of the Palace, slew many of them; on which was raised a report, that all the Jews must be destroyed; inso much, that the Londoners fired divers houses of the Jews , and the Inhabitants in them. The King strongly took part with the Arch-bishop against the Monks. The King forrowing for his rebellion against his Father, for satisfaction agrees with King Philip of France to go to the Holy Land, to recover Christ his Patrimony, as they called it. In which Voyage, as he had much contention with the unthankful hearted French King, so he had divers Victories against the enemy; as against Isakus King of Cyprus , and against Achon and others. See following, Anno 1192, &c. The manner of the Popes Crowning this Emperor, see in the next year. In this year was a great Northern brawl, on Twelfth-Even, between the Arch-bishop elect of the Church of Norh , and his Company on the one side, and Henry Dean of that Church, and his Chanter and Singing-men on the other side; because the Dean and his Quiresters presumed to begin their Service before the Bishop came: whom they conceived to stay too long in attiring himself, or some such occasion. The Arch-bishop bids them stay their over-forward Service, now half done at the Bishops coming in: The Dean and Chanter bids them proceed on. At last, the Arch-bishop silenced the Service, and makes them begin again the first part, which he had not yet heard: The others, seeing the Bishops Authority to make the Service begin again, put out the Lights; whereby these Popish Devotions, which cannot be done without Candle-light, were for the present extinguished. King Richard lends over his Gallies to Naples , there to meet his Mother Eleanor , and Borengaria the Daughter of Sanctus King of Navar , whom he purposed to Marry, who shortly after meet together. Henry Emperor is Crowned (upon condition of restoring many things to St. Peter , pretended by the Pope to have been taken away) the Pope holding the Crown between his Feet, and so the Emperor stoops with his Head to take it on: the Pope effoons with his Foot striking it off (intimating his Power to Depose him as well as to Crown him) the Cardinals taking up the Crown thus kicked off, and putting it on again. In this absence of the King of England , by reason of his Voyage to the Holy-land, the King had appointed the Government of the Realm to Hugo Bishop of Durham , and William Bishop of Ely . To Hugo of Durham was committed Wind/or Castle: to William of Ely the Tower of London . To these two Bishops were adjoynd four chief Justices: Hugh Bauldf , Williams Marshall , Geffery Peterson , and William Bruer , to have the hearing and oversight over all Causes. But above all these, the Bishop of Ely (being Chancellor, and by his Money got to be the Popes Legate) took upon him mightily, taking away Wind/or Castle from the other Bishop. It is incredible to think how intemperately this Bishop and Chancellor misused themselves after the Kings departure into	258

1192					A great contention arose between John Earl of Morton , the Kings Brother, with other states of the Realm, and the said William Bishop of Ely , through his pride usurping all the government of the Kingdom to himself. In short, he was at variance with many of the great persons of the Kingdom, till by Earl John 's means and others, he was for his ill behaviour fain to disguise himself in Womans apparel, make to the Sea side, and to fall out of the Kingdom, complaining to Pope Celestine , and sending Letters to the King, complaining to him likewise.
1193					The King gets Victories against the Saladins , got Sclavonia from the Saracens .
				Hubertus	The French King not agreeing with King Richard , returns home, invades Normandy , persuades John the Kings Brother to take upon him the Crown of England in the Kings absence; whereby he made League with the French King, and did him Homage.
					King Richard hearing this, makes peace with the Turk for three years, and returns homeward; who, as he was coming, by Tempest was driven to Hispria , to a Town called Synacai , and taken by Lympold Duke of that Country, and by him sold to the Emperor for sixty thousand Marks; which Emperor writes his triumph therein to the said French King.
					The King is thus a Captive a year and three months.
1195					This while the French King was upon Normandy , and makes Earl John , King Richard 's Brother to invade England . But by the Barons he was made fly into France . At last for 100000 pounds to the Emperor, the King was released; that money being made up of Chalices, Crofies and other Church-plate.	281
1196					This year the Pope granted that Priests might administer with Latin and tin Chalices (the Silver and Gold being gone to redeem the King) and so it continued long after.
1197					Lympold Duke of Auftrige fell in displeasure with the Bishop of Rome , and died excommunicate.
					Philip King of France breaks his Truce made with Richard King of England , so that King Richard was fain to fall over into Normandy to withstand him.
					Fulco , alias Goalter , Archbishop of Rome , rebukes the King for his three Daughters. The King in a rage calling him mad man; and saying, I have no Daughter . Fulco replies, telling him that his three Daughters were Pride Covetousness and Luxury ; and that unless the King did marry them away they would undo him and his Kingdom. To which the King calling the Nobles, reciting Fulco 's Parable, and confessing his fatherhood of such Children, makes this answer, Here before you all I give my Daughter Pride to Wife unto the proud Templars; my Daughter Avarice to the covetous order of the Cistercian Monks; and my Daughter Luxury to the riotous Prelates .	281
1198		Innocent the third.			King Richard the first, viewing a Castle, is hit with an Arrow in the Arm, with the setting of the iron whereof he dies.
1199	Otto the fourth.				This King John was the Brother of King Richard , and Earl of Morton ; being crowned and sworn with a strict charge of the Archbishop to keep the Laws, he falls over into Normandy , and makes truce with the French King for a time.
			John.		King John being divorced from his Wife, Daughter of the Earl of Glocester , being in the third degree of kindred; by the counsel of the French King, he marries Isabel , Daughter of the Earl of Anguilla ; and then Arthur of Brittain did Homage to King John for Brittain and other places.	282
1200					About this time arose divers contentions between King John and the Archbishop for sundry things.
1202					Philip the French King in a communication between him and King John , requies King John to part with all his Lands in Normandy , and Picavaria , which he had beyond the Sea, unto Arthur his Nephew, the Son of King John 's elder Brother, and that presently or else he would war against him; King John denying it, the French King warring, and Arthur assisting, King John takes Arthur Prisoner, and scarce leaves any of the French to carry back tidings.
1203					This year King John for lack of rescue lost all his Holds, (as Writers affirm) and Possessions in Normandy , through the force of the French King.
1205					Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury deceaseth. The younger sort of Monks at midnight choole their superiour Reignold , and without the Kings licence, privately placeth him in the Metropolitcal Seat, singing Te Deum , and after putt him away to the Pope.
1206					The next year the contention between the Suffragans and Monks of Canterbury about the said Election, is brought before the Pope, who passed sentence on the Monks side, charging the Suffragans and Bishops of Canterbury henceforth to meddle no more with that Election, but to let the Monks alone.
1207				Stephen Langton.	The Monks of Canterbury now having the said Elect of an Archbishop in their own hands, fall at odds between themselves, the younger against the elder; the younger standing for Reignold , the elder choole another. They	283

1212	Fredrick 2.				The King was content to let this Election thus to pass, so as he might have his Sovereignty entire. But this Archbishop Langhton was so proud and stubborn against the King, that the King sent abroad into all parts of the Kingdom Letters Certificatory of the same. Whereupon the Pope mightily set himself against King John, interdicting and cursing King John. and all that should eat, drink, talk &c. with him; inasmuch that at last the King was fain to pass over his Crown to the Pope.	285
1215					The French King makes an attempt in hope to get the Crown of England, but the English take 300 of the French Kings Ships, and so defeated his project.	287
					Pope Innocent the third calls a Synod at Rome, called the Council of Late- ran, upon this occasion. Princes now beginning to resent the Pope, where- by many Princes were excommunicated, as Otto the Emperor, John King of England, Peter King of Aragon, Raimund the Earl of Tholouse, Aquitania, Salasani, &c. The Pope now to prevent any future increase of opposition, inacts in this Synod, that the Pope henceforth should have the correction of all Christian Princes.	288
1216		Honorius 3.			In this Council also was first invented Transubstantiation, and forbidding Priests Marriage was confirmed.
					To this Council were those great men in England summoned to appear, who would not consent to the expulsion and tyrannical depouing of their King. But the other side and faction of the Nobility opposed their King lustily, desiring Philip the French King to send his eldest Son Ludo- wick with a great power, and they would choose him for their King, and so he came and was chosen; howbeit against the Popes consent, who charged the French King rather to help King John against his rebellious Subjects, for that (saith the Pope) King John is my feudary Tenant. But this hindred not.	290
					Simon Langhton is chosen Archbishop of York. But that choice was anon dissolved, information being given to the Pope, that he was Brother to that Stephen Langhton that had made that tumult in England.
					This year K. John was poisoned by one Simon a Monk, who being absolved of his Abbot afore-hand for doing this fact, he finds a Toad in the Gar- den, pricks him with a Pen-knife, until he had made him vomit up all his poison, which he having conveyed into a Cup of Wine, began to the King with a smiling countenance, speaking these words, If it shall please your Princely Majesty, here is such a Cup of Wine, as you never drank a better, I trust this Wessel shall make all England glad. The King having drunk, and anon being ill, inquired for Simon the Monk, to whom scarce answering that he was departed this life (for his Guts gushed out of his Belly) the King replies, Then God have mercy on my soul; and so he di- ed, much repenting of his former life.	290
1217			Henry 3.		In this Kings time was the Bridge of London, being of Wood, built of Stone and the power of choosing a Mayor in London was first granted.
					Henry the third being King John's eldest Son, began his Reign in the ninth year of his age. Against him, some that hated the Father, stood for Lewis the K. of France his Son. But W. Earl Marshal crating to the Nobles, that the French Kings Son was the shame of their servitude, and that hatred of the Child for the Father, was unjust persecution of the innocent Child; Hereupon they all gave consent to choose this young Henry for their King; who is crowned at Gloucester, because the French held West- minster.	292
1218					Upon the choice of the Son of King John to be King, Lewis the French Kings Son makes War upon England; Earl Marshal and others gives him Battel, and win the Field of him. Then Lewis takes London for his safety, shutting the Gates till great aid from France was sent him in 100 ships, but they were encountered with upon the Sea, most of them taken, and Eustace the chief of them, and his Head was smitten off; so that the French Kings Son Lewis agreed for 1000 pound of Silver he would de- part out of the Kingdom never to return he nor his.
1219					A Parliament is held in England (now Lewis and his French are gone out of the Land) in which King Henry the third confirmeth all the privileges that had been granted by John his Father.
1220					The Kingdom on the other side grant to the King two shillings of every Plow-Land.
					Thomas Becket is shined.
					This year Order was proclaimed, that all Aliens should depart out of the Realm, except Merchandizers, going in and out under the Popes safe con- duct. It was conceived that the device was to make divers great Men strangers, that held Castles and Holds of the King against his will, to go out of the Kingdom.
					About this time the young King was crowned again at Westminster.

1227					This year the King of England makes the Londoners to pay the ſum of 1000 Marks to him, becauſe they had given or lent the like ſum to Lewis the French King his adversary, at his departure out of England. With theſe and other Taxes, proviſion is made to recover Normandy.	307
1228					The King grants to the City of London to be Toll-free.
					Great contention ariſeth between the Prior and Covent of Durham, and this K. Henry the third, becauſe they would not chooſe him to their Biſhop whom the King did deſire.

					The new Church of Coventry is finiſhed by Alexander the Biſhop of that City.	309
					The French provide again to War againſt the foreſaid Reimundus Earl of Tholouſe, and to expulſe him out of his poſſeſſions. The Earl gives them a great overthrow, and diſcomits the French three times that ſummer.
1230					As the Biſhop and his Deacon, and many people were in Saint Paul's Church in London at Maſs, there aroſe ſuch a dark Tempeſt with Thunder, &c. that the people ran out, fell down amazed, conceiving that Doomeſday was come; the Biſhop and Deacon mean while take ſaſt hold of the Altar.
1231					The Archbiſhop now confirmed in his See, complains againſt Hubert Lord Chief Juſtice, as one that withheld ſome Lands due to Canterbury.
					The Archbiſhop goes to the Pope, and complains againſt the King for committing ſo much truſt of the affairs of the Kingdom to Hubert.
					Richard dies in his return from complaining to the Pope, in whoſe room the Monks chooſe Ralph Nevell, alias Radulphus de nova Villa, who was the Kings Chancellor, the King well liking the choice; he is commended in ſtories to be a very good man. But being depraved and traduced to the Pope by Simon Langhton Archbiſhop of York, the Pope fruſtrates the choice.	310
					Then the Monks chooſe John their Prior to be Archbiſhop, who going to the Pope (and therefore not inſufficient by age to govern, who could take ſuch a Voyage) to receive his Pall, and being examined three days, was rejected for being too old by the Pope, perhaps older than was he.
1232					A great Conſtitutory of Abbots, Priors, and of the Nobility, is held at S. Albans between the Counteſs of Eſſex and her Husband.	311
					Roman and Italian Parſons in England are robbed.
					The Biſhops labour to bring Hubert out of the Kings favour, and prevail, to the incenſing of the King againſt him, and making him to queſtion Hubert for many things unreaſonably, to imprifon him, and bereave him of all his treaſure.	312
1233					Hubert is conveyed out of Priſon into a Church; but without reſpect to that as a Sanctuary, he being found by the Keepers is dragged to Priſon again, to the great offence of the Biſhop, for ſo diſreſpecting the ſacreduels of that place.	314
					John Blund is choſen Archbiſhop. But he is the third of thoſe that are unchoſen by the Pope one after another, before any election would take with the Pope.
1234				Edmund of Abendon.	This Archbiſhop Edmund was choſen by the Popes command.
					Archbiſhop Edmund with his Biſhops in Council at Weſtmiſter (the King now being at variance with the Nobles) declared to the King plainly that the Council he followed was not good, but dangerous to him and the ſtate (meaning the council of Peter Wincheſter, and Peter of Rival, &c.) ſhewing it in their turning the Kings heart from his own natural Subjects, and in eleven particulars more.
					The King takes pity of Juſtice Hubert's Wife.
					Richard Earl Marſhal is fraudulently circumvented and ſlain in Ireland.
					The King laments it.
					Many of the Carſini and the Albigenſes are ſlain by the Popes command.	317
					Peace is concluded between the King and the Nobles.

Anno Christi	Emp. of Germany	Popes of Rome.	Kings of England	Archbishops of Canterb.	Great variance ariseth between the Romans and Pope Gregory the ninth, because the Pope contended contrary to the custom (as the Romans pleaded) that he might excommunicate a Citizen of Rome, and interdict the City.	Vol. I. Page
1237					Schism ariseth between the Greek and the Roman Church, because that an elected Grecian Archbishop, could not be confirmed when he was come to Rome, unless he would give a great sum of money, which Simony the Archbishop and the Grecians with one consent did abominate, and separated from Rome.	318
1238					This separation of the Greek Church from Pope Gregory the ninth, and the Church of Rome, causeth that Germanus Archbishop and Patriarch of Constantinople, wrote to Pope Gregory the ninth, to reform matters, and study means of Unity in the seamless Coat of Christ.	321
1240					The Pope imposeth so many exactions upon England, beginning at this 1237 year, and so forward (as he had many years before to the said year) as make up large Tables.	322
1241					Orbo the Popes Legat hath authority to stay longer and gather more money in England.
					Not long after in this year, Pope Gregory sends a new Precept to Legat Orbo, that all benefited men in England and France should pay to the Pope the fifth part of their revenues. Who notwithstanding their four material excuses, were fain to pay it.
					Preachers are stirred up by the Lord to preach that the Pope was an Heretic, and condemned for their pains; viz. Arnoldus, Johannes Semeca the glo's Writer of the Popes Decrees, an opposer of the Pope, Gualterius De sancto amore, giving many signs of false Teachers, Galus and Grosthead.	323
					Petrus Supino gets 1500 Marks out of Ireland for the Pope; and Petrus Rupert in England gets of the Abbots and Priors, shewing to them the Popes Bills and Bulls, a mighty quantity of Silver and Gold.
					The Pope demands of the House of Peterborough, that they should grant him some Benefice lying in their donation, whose fruits were worth an 100 pound, so that they should be as Farmers, and the Pope to receive the profits. But the King forbade them any such grant.
1243		Innocent the 4th.			From Pope Innocent the fourth comes M. Marinus, a new Merchant of the Pope, with power to suspend all Prelats in England from giving Benefices, till the Popes Kinsmen were preferred.
1245					The King writes a Letter to Pope Innocent to forbear his intolerable oppression of the Kingdom of England.	326
					Martinus being an instrument of the Popes oppression of England, is warned by the Nobility (and he had little less comfort of the King) to be gone out of England, upon pain of being cut in pieces; who taking his leave of the King, the King (as Matthew Paris saith) bids him farewell in the Devils name.
1246					The Nobles and Commons of England write a supplication to Pope Innocent the fourth in the General Council at Lyons, against his injurious Taxes imposed upon England.	327
1247					Pope Innocent in a meeting at Cluniae persuades the French King (who was addressing himself for his Voyage to Jerusalem) to war against Regulum istum, that is, the feeble King of England (for his not condescending to the Pope in all things) either to drive him out of his Dominions, or to make him accommodate the Pope in every thing.	329
1248					The Clergy and Commonalty of England write another Letter to Pope Innocent the fourth against his exactions in England.
					The Abbot of Abingdon commanded to give a Benefice by the Pope to one, and by the King to another, rather obeys the King than the Pope. For which he is cited to appear before the Pope, and condemned in fifty Marks.	331
					The French K. bent and bound for the Holy-land, is persuaded by his friends and Mother to lay down the obligatory Crois for his journey, as having (say they) taken it up in the weakness of his senses in his sickness. The K. hereupon tearing off his Badge and resigning it to the Bishop (all the persuaders joyning therein) by and by takes it up again, saying, If formerly in my weakness of body and senses I took up the Crois to go to the Holy-Land to fight against the Heathens, now I take it up again in the full strength of both.
					The Pope being at odds with the Emperor Frederick the second, will not at any hand be reconciled, though the King of France strongly interceded, and the Emperor himself clears himself of all imputation, offers full satisfaction for all pretended wrongs, will go out of his Empire (if the Pope could not endure him there) to the Holy Land, never to return into Europe again, so as his Son Henry Nephew to King Henry of England might succeed him, with offer of other most reasonable conditions. These oppositions of the Pope against Christian Emperors and Kings, gave the Turks great advantage of prevailing.	332
1250					The French K. in his Voyage to Jerusalem takes in Damietta.
					This year the Saracens to day are beaten of the French before Damietta; on the morrow the French are beaten by the Saracens ten times more. See more Vol. I. p. 334. c. 1.

1255		Alexander the 4th.			The Kings great expences in his Voyage to Vascon makes him put many Taxes upon his Subjects, chiefly on the Church-men, who being wont to receive Tithes from, are now made to give Tithes to the Laity. Vol. 1. p. 369. c. 2.	368
1257					Pope Innocent dies. Great dissention ariseth between Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury , and the Canons of Lincoln about the right of giving Prebendships. The Jews crucify a Child nine years old with great torment. The King of England exacts of the Jews 8000 Marks in pain of hanging.
1259					Walter Gray Archbishop of Tork with superstitious excessive fasting, killed himself. A Jew falling into a Privy at Tewkesbury upon Saturday being the Jews Sabbath would not for reverence thereof be lifted out; and on the morrow being the Christians Sabbath Richard Earl of Glocester would not suffer him to be taken out, and so he died in the Dung. The King entering into France , required the restitution of such Lands in Normandy and Anjou , as of old right were due unto him, and wrongfully withheld from him, and made the French King to agree to him. Vol. 1. p. 369. c. 2.
1260					A great contention is at Oxford between the Scholars. To this year continueth the History of Matthew Paris , leaving at the story of the death of Fulco Bishop of London .	369
1261					The King gives Licence to plant an Univeristy at Northampton , and writes to the Magistrates of that Town courteously to intreat the Scholars when they came.	371
1262					The King gets from the Pope a release of his Oath wherein he had sworn to some Statutes at Oxford .	372
1263					The King renues his release from his Oath, by this Pope Urban . The Barons continue to maintain the Statutes of Oxford . An agreement is made between the King and the Nobles.
1264					The King besiegeth and invades the Barons at Northampton . The Scholars there also are stubborn against the King, shooting with slings, long-bows and cross-bows, doing much hurt, but at length are beaten, slain, and made to fly.	373
1265					A Battel fought at Leura between King Henry 3. the Barons win the field, and do take Richard King of Almon , K. Henry's Brother, and his Son, who assisted the Kings Prisoners.	375
1266		Clement the 4th.			This Pope was at first a married man and had children. Then he was the French Kings Chancellor. After his Wives death he was made Bishop called Podiensis . After that Archbishop of Narbon . After Cardinal, and last of all Pope.	377
1267					Thomas Aquinas flourisheth about this time, and Bonaventure . A form of peace is drawn between the King and his Barons, wherein the King promitteth much reformation of things in Church and Commonwealth.	379
1268					K. Henry the third writes to Oxford Sheriff against an Assembly or Meeting of men, who termed themselves Harlots. It is probable that this was some pretended Order of Religion; and that from it came the reproachful name of Harlot.
1269					Dissention ariseth between Earl Simon and the Earl of Glocester , they fight a Battel, and Simon and many of his side are slain.	380
1270					The King being in the custody of the Barons is now restored to his Regality. Keneilworth decree confirmed, that they that had lost their Lands by Attainder, (although not yet attained) should have them at the Kings pleasure, and take them of the King again.	381
1271					The King besiegeth the Castle of Keneilworth , whither repairs Othobonus the Popes Legat, and by his persuasions Henry Hastings that had valiantly kept it against the King, yields it to the King, pardon being granted to him, of Life, Lands, Goods, &c.
1272					The Barons fortifie the Isle of Ely , and after that London against the King. Peace concluded between the King and the Nobles. Prince Edward the Kings Son, and many Princes of other Kingdoms take upon them the Cross to make an expedition to Jerusalem . Boniface Archbishop being dead, the Monks of Canterbury agree upon the Prior of their House Adam Chelenden .	382
1273					The King and his Son Edward intreated the Monks to choose Robert Burnel , Prior Chelenden elect, and not admitted by the K. goes up to Rome , there continues 2 years, and at last resigns up his Election to Pope Gregory , who gave it to R. At which crowning, he putting off his Crown, said, he would not put it on again till he had gathered together all the Lands that belonged unto it.	386
					This K. had much ado with Wales, but at length cuts down their Woods, subdued the Country and their King Leweline, and made his Son Prince of Wales.
					The said Leweline rebelling (as we said) asked counsel of the Conjurers what should be the event; to whom it was answered, that he should go forward boldly, for he should ride through Cheap with a Crown on his head, which was thus fulfilled He being slain his head was carried through Cheap with a Crown of Silver to London Bridge.

1299					The K. of England and the Scots have a great fight; but K. Edward hath the Victory.
					The Scots rebelling again, again are suppressed by the King, and made to swear to the Kings Allegiance.
					This Pope Boniface the 8th challengeth of King Edward the Kingdom of Scotland.
1301					The King witheth the Pope to send his grounds of challenging the Kingdom of Scotland; calls a Parliament, writes to the Pope abundance of passages and pretexts from Anno 900 to 1230. that the Kingdom of Scots was the Kings of England.	387
1303					Pope Boniface the 8th being offended with Philip the French King, excites King Edward of England to war against him; but King Edward well knowing the Pope, put him off with delays, and the French King tearing K. Edward, restored unto him Vascone, which he wrongfully had detained.	389
					The Scots rebel again against K. Edward the first, under W. Wallace.
					Great difference ariseth between Philip K. of France, and Pope Boniface the 8th. The Pope thundring out his curse of Excommunication against the K. because the King commanded his Legat and a Bishop (whom the Legat got released, being imprisoned for a Conspiracy against the K.) to depart out of his Realm. The King on the other side calls a Parliament, and makes a declaration against the Popes intolerable wickedness, and an appeal from the Pope to a General Council.	389

					R. Winchelsey Archbishop of Canterbury , whom Edward the first had banished, is now released, and returns from Rome home.
					The Archbishop of Canterbury excommunicates the Bishop of Coventry for holding with Peter Gaveston , which Gaveston , though banished upon forfeiture of life, goods, &c. Presumes upon the Kings favour, returns again.	418
1312					Peter Gaveston is apprehended by Guido , alias Guy Earl of Warwick , and beheaded by the Nobles.
					The King hath a young Son born, the joy whereof made him begin to forget his sorrow for Gaveston ; but that Frenchmen make-bates, cause contention between the K. and Nobles to arise again.	419
1313					The Scots take occasion by this discord, to rebel against the King, under one Robert Bruce , whom King Edward the first had chased out of Scotland , was now returned thither, getting himself to be made King, who when the King of England and his Lords and Armies encountred him and his Host, did discomfort them, and slew many of the English Lords.	419

					At this time the two Spencers , Hugh the Father, and Hugh the Son, were so impious and yet so potent in the Kingdom, that no Lord durst controul them, so that they were much hated of the Nobles.	420
1321					A Prohibition is set forth against Peter-pence .
					The Spencers banished by Act of Parliament for their wickedness, are restored and advanced by the King. The Nobles to redress this evil, assemble their power; but being scattered by the Kings forces before they could come together, were pursued and taken, and two and twenty of the chief Earls and Lords were hanged, drawn and quartered, saving that the Earl of Lancaster was beheaded. This cruelty to his natural Subjects wrought his utter ruine at last.	421
1322					Now the King begins with the Spencers to triumph in his Victory of putting the Nobles to death.
1323					The King advanceth Hugh Spencer to be an Earl, and ill reported, and reputed Sir John Baldeob to be Chancellor of England : Also the King raiseth an Army against the Scots ; but the good leaders being put to death, and unskilful ones leading this Army one hundred thousand of this Army perished by Famine.

The French K. removed the Queen and her Son from him, who are both joyfully received in the Court and Country of the Earl of Henauwe ; where a Marriage was concluded between Edward her Son, being of the age of 14, and Philip the said Earls Daughter.

1326					Then the K. flies to Briflow , appointing Spencer the Father to keep Briflow Castle. 					A release by the means of Roger Mortimer and the old Queen, is granted by the King, under age, to the Scots of all their homage and fealty to the Crown of England , which they were tied unto by Seal and Indenture, called the Ragman-Role . The Black-Cross also won from Scotland by valour of the former King Edward is given back to the Scots , with other things very prejudicial to England .	428
					The Nobles desiring to redress these matters in a legal way, are falsely accused of Conspiracy against the King, and the Earl of Kent , being guiltless, is put to death, being the Kings Uncle, and never brought to answer for himself.

		Gregory the 13th.	Thus have we with all the method and pithiness we could use in these present labours, Chronologically annuated all remarkable in these three Volumes; seating and placing them according to their age, each particular in his own year. If any man should wish to have had here a larger universe of particulars, though of less consequence; and a preciser punctualness of times, even to months and days; such a man shall be able fully to satisfy himself with these considerations:
1572			First, That keeping close to the nature of the most and best Chronologies, with a studied conciseness, we intended to compose of things material, not trivial, Annals not Kalendar s, and Ephemerides ; that is, to date years, not months and days.
			Secondly, That seeing largeness is to be bound fast to the abbreviature, the second and third Volume, and so they go together abroad into the World: Its but turning over leaves, and when that hath been too tediously prolix in its ample narrations, this will tell the same after that, without wearying eyes or ears. And when this with its Laconical shortness, leaves the Reader hungry, to have seen and heard somewhat more, that will be ready to fill that appetite.
			Thirdly, That although the first Volume makes dispatch in its relations, and so fills up its vastness with variety of stories, till it brings us beyond the 1500 year: yet the second and third Volumes consist of few stories, swollen to that hugeness by the massiness and voluminousness of each story; so that they both begin and end within the compass of about 50 and odd years, as this our Chronicle it self shews in the Time, Page and Columns; so that of themselves, unless we would turn Chronologizing into Epitomizing , would wind up themselves into a narrow compass. Besides the first and second Volume in above forty years are woven together; as may be seen in the Quotations of the large Column of matter of both these Volumes.
			Fourthly, That of all the Martyrs which indeed are the main bulk of the second and third Volume, Mr. Fox hath pen'd and placed at the beginning a most punctual and methodical Kalendar Chronicle of years, months and days of their troubles and sufferings; yet to make our project a compleatness and perfection, we took into our other passages of estate, all special and dated stories of Martyrs; though in thus doing in regard of Mr. Fox his Kalendar , we Assumimus , & post Homerum Teximus Biades , do that which needed not.

A Direction to the Peruser of this INDEX.

THAT in case there fall out any Mistake in the Penner, or Printer, or in the Reader, that he looks not aright under each Head (for we are all but Men): Then,

I. To look the thing under as many several Heads, or Alphabetical Words, as in all Probability the thing may be expressed in or by.

II. To have Recourse to the Chronology, where he may readily find each Emperor, Pope, King, a Bishop, and the chief Occurrences in their Times, with the page in the last Column, to find it in the large Volume.

III. To have regard to the time when things were done since Christ: which remembered, the Chronology will in that Year touch the thing.

IV. To mind how much each Volume contains: and being confident in what Volume the thing is, the Contents of that Volume at the top, or in the Title of each Page will discover the thing.
